Rev. O'Keefe claims he got raw legal deal

O'Keefe

By JOSEPH A. PHILLIPS

First of a two part series.

The criminal case against the Rev. Brendan O'Keefe, who was convicted of stealing more than $30,000 in cash and property from the Glenmont shrine he served as priest more than two years ago, concluded last Thursday when he was sentenced in Albany County Court, following his guilty plea to two counts of grand larceny.

But O'Keefe, now in seclusion at an undisclosed location downstate, insisted in an interview last weekend that the fight for his reputation is far from over. He continues to maintain his innocence of the charges that he stole vestments, altar implements and a large quantity of gold coins when he fled St. Michael's Shrine in October 1997.

"I have a moral obligation to clear my name," he said. "The biggest mistake I made was running away.'

O'Keefe, held in Albany County jail since his arrest in Chicago by an FBI fugitive task force and return to the area last February, was sentenced by Albany County Judge Lawrence Rosen on Sept. 9 to time served plus five years' probation.

The court also ordered O'Keefe to make restitution of $7,500, to be paid in $200 monthly installments, to St. Michael's Shrine for stolen articles not recovered at the time of his arrest.

At his sentencing, O'Keefe pleaded unsuccessfully for lower restitution payments. And O'Keefe's attorney, former county District Attorney Arnold Proskin, thinks the plea agreement was a good deal.

"It was in his best interests," he said Friday. "It's a lot less than the $30,000 to $40,000 they wanted originally. It's a lot easier to pay $7,500 than $30,000."

But O'Keefe insists he agreed to the plea bargain only under duress, and that he initially urged Proskin to make a defense for him. He claimed - and Proskin confirmed — that the attorney warned him of the consequences of turning the deal down - a lengthy stay in county jail followed by a grueling trial and a possible prison sentence of seven to 10 years, which would be an almost certain death sentence for a man in O'Keefe's poor health. He currently receives disability payments for, among other things, a heart condition and diabetes.

"The risk was, if he was convicted, he was going to prison," Proskin said. "If he were in prison, he wouldn't last. I wouldn't give him three months in state prison."

"I had to plead guilty. They held a hammer over my head," O'Keefe said.

But he insists on his innocence and claimed that many of the vestments and other articles he took with him when he left St. Michael's were his own.

As to the money, he said that Paul Vella, an attorney he believed was acting

HILL gearing up for fall semester

By JOSEPH A. PHILLIPS

Bethlehem's Humanities Institute for Lifelong Learning (HILL), the unique adult education program which its founder, Helen Adler, likens to "a sleepin-your-own-bed Elderhostel program," is about to launch its 14th semester.

And as HILL takes applicants for its fall programs this week, Adler has set for her program, under the auspices of the Bethlehem Central School District, this modest objective: "Our goal is that everyone in Bethlehem wake up in the morning saying, what new learning experience is out there for me today?"

HILL's educational programs offer one answer to that rhetorical question. Taught in facilities like the recreation building at Elm Avenue Park and Bethlehem Lutheran Church, they run the gamut from urban affairs and anthropology to literature and history.

Instructors are recruited from local educational and cultural institutions, primarily the University at Albany, to teach multi-session courses, open to Bethlehem residents for a nominal registration fee.

Registration for the fall session is open through Sept. 20, but late registrations are welcome, Adler said.

This fall's offerings, which begin Sept. 27, include such course titles as American Political Leaders, Contemporary Bioethics, and The String Quartet.

University at Albany art professor Sarah Cohen will teach on "Art and Spectacle in the Courts of Europe From Caravaggio to Versailles," and her faculty colleague and former World Bank official Ray Bromley will discuss "Visions for Progress: Two Centuries of Social, Economic and Environmental Activism."

An eclectic array of programs they are, to be sure, but Adler has seen many like them since she and her husband Fred launched HILL six years ago.

"Seventy people taking a course on Dante — can you imagine?" she said, speaking of a previous offering, "In the Capital District? I'm convinced there is nothing people won't come out to, no matter how esoteric."

"Extension programs don't have to be just cooking and bridge," Adler said.

The Adlers, with the assistance of a six-member steering committee, personally recruit visiting faculty.

We've both been teachers, and we know a good teacher when we smell one," she said. "And we're in a position to be selective."

They also organize additional education programs offered through HILL, including occasional free "interim lectures" at Bethlehem Public Library, two of which are scheduled for later this year; and a literature discussion group. Books in the Morning, that meets on frequent Fridays at Bethlehem town hall.

But the heart of HILL is its adult education curriculum, which Adler says has gotten more adventuresome with

She anticipates more than 300 enrollees for the fall programs, limited primarily by the size of the venues in which they're taught.

"The Lutheran church is limited to 50 people, but the town park has been wonderful for us. We can accommodate more there," she said.

Like Elderhostel, the program was originally launched with seniors in mind.

"For the most part, our students are people who've retired and have time for an educational experience," she said. "But there are people in their 40s who put their kids on the bus to school and then come and do class. We particularly welcome younger people to our programs too."

The institute is partially funded by a grant from the New York State Council for the Humanities.

Registration forms are available at Bethlehem Public Library and school district offices, or by calling HILL at 439-9661...

Bethlehem police make DWI arrest Police investigating

By Joseph A. Phillips

ADelmar resident was arrested by Bethlehem police on Saturday. Sept. 4, and charged with driving while intoxicated (DWI), while an earlier DWI case involving a Guilderland man was resolved in Bethlehem Town Court on Sept. 7 with his guilty plea to a lesser charge.

The Sept. 4 arrest occurred shortly after 8 a.m. as Officer Jeffrey Vunck, having just completed an earlier motor-vehicle stop on Delaware Avenue, chatted with a passerby; off-duty State Police Sgt. James Halvorsen.

Hearing the sound of an approaching vehicle striking an object that later turned out to be anearby power pole, both officers observed a truck hitting the concrete parking lot posts in the vicinity of The Church of St. Thomas the Apostle before coming to a stop, apparently striking a parked vehicle.

Vunck responded at the scene with Halvorsen's assistance.

According to the police report, the driver, later identified as Zane on Krumkill Road. Jonathan Bathrick, 17, of 10B Tice Lane, admitted to having been drinking the night before.

He passed a preliminary screening test, but further search of his vehicle allegedly produced numerous empty beer cans and evidence of marijuana use.

Tice was arrested and charged with DWI, driving while ability impaired (DWAI) under the influence of drugs, and unlawful possession of marijuana.

He submitted to blood tests to be used in evidence and was ordered to appear in Bethlehem Town Court on Oct. 5.

In an earlier DWI case stemming from an April 11 incident, Robert Joseph LaMountain, 21, of Guilderland Center pleaded guilty to the lesser charge of DWAI in Town Court on Sept. 7.

LaMountain, also charged with possession of a stolen vehicle at the time of his arrest, claimed he had been forced into the vehicle by an unknown assailant and made to drive until the vehicle crashed

With his guilty plea last week, LaMountain's stolen vehicle charge was dismissed.

Là Mountain was fined $300 and assessed a $30 state-mandated surcharge for the DWAI plea, and had his license suspended 90 days.

He was also ordered by the court to undergo a drinking-driver remediation program and to face a victim-impact panel.

Two other DWI cases, both felony charges involving Selkirk residents, were ordered transferred by Bethlehem Town Court on Sept. 7 to Albany County Court.

One involved Cecil A. Davis, 39, of 148 Old Ravena Road, arrested March 13 for criminal mischief and nine traffic infractions in addition to a DWI charge.

The other was a DWI charge against Kathleen Lemley, 35, of Pantages Trailer Park, stemming from a April 9 arrest.

vandalism incidents

By Joseph A. Phillips

Bethlehem police are investigating a spate of Labor Day weekend vandalism believed to have been youth-related, in what one Bethlehem police source characterized as "a last stand before the start of the school year."

The most widespread vandalism was reported in the early morning hours of Friday, Sept. 3 and subsequently in the predawn hours of Sept. 6 and 7. More than two dozen street signs in the Elm Estates development and the Hamagrael section of Delmar were removed or damaged by unknown individuals.

To date, one 16-year-old Albany youth has been charged with criminal mischief and petty larceny in connection with one of the damaged signs. Two other removed signs have been recovered. The total cost of the damage to the custom-made signs, according to Bethlehem Highway Department officials, could be as much as $2,500.

The first incidents reported to Bethlehem police on Sept. 3 involved the removal of two street signs from intersections along Fairway Avenue, at Sylvan and Wisconsin avenues, discovered by public works crews at about 6:30

Subsequently, sometime before 3:30 a.m. on Monday, Sept. 6, street signs were snapped from their poles at all four corners of a single block - bounded by Peel, University and Linton streets and Fairlawn Drive — in Elm Estates. Another sign, at Ellendale Avenue and Vista Lane about a block away, was also damaged, and an additional removed sign was reported later in the week, a block further east, at Ellendale and Fairlawn. When that sign was removed is unknown.

A Peel Street resident witnessed the taking of one sign and supplied Bethlehem police with a license plate number of a vehicle seen departing in the direction of Feura Bush Road. Bethlehem police later that day stopped a vehicle with the corresponding license number. One of the missing signs was found in the rear of the vehicle and a passenger in the car was arrested after admitting to having taken it. Due for an appearance in Town Court on Sept. 21, he has been charged in only the single vandalism incident so far. His name is being withheld by police as a juvenile offender.

That arrest, however, was followed by another incident. Shortly after midnight on Sept. 7, highway department crews discovered that 18 signs had been damaged in a 3-mile loop that extended from Delaware Avenue at Village Drive to Elm Avenue then to Murray Avenue and along Parkwyn Drive to Albin Road, and then back to Delaware along Roweland Avenue. An investigation is continuing.

In an unrelated incident, Elsmere and Delmar fire departments were summoned shortly before 9 a.m. on Sept. 7 to Calvary Cemetery on Route 9W in Glenmont, where they battled a fire in a storage shed. Bethlehem police investigating the fire concluded it was arson, possibly related to an overnight beer drinking party on the cemetery

Cemetery workers told police that the spot is a favorite youth hangout, and a number of beer* cans were found in the vicinity of the shed. Police investigators believe a cigarette may have been dropped into a vent leading to the shed, igniting the fire. No suspects have yet been identified in the incident.

Board OKs Daniel St. stop signs

But residents say more than signs is needed

By Joseph A. Phillips

The Bethlehem town board approved on Sept. 8 a recommen-. dation from the town's Traffic Safety Committee to install two new signs in the Fisher Hollow development in Slingerlands.

But a couple residing in the development made an appearance at the hearing to press for additional safety measures for the newly-expanded neighborhood.

on July 28, the safety group recommended new signs for two intersections in the development

With children and pedestrians walking dogs and bikes and whatnot, the street's design is not terrific," said Berke. "This blind curve is a potential danger. Cars going in both directions are unable to see around the curve."

The Berkes first approached peter at an intersection with the Traffic Safety Committee in

The Berkes had originally "Daniel Street used to end in a pressed for a three-way stop at the two intersections, but the board resolution authorized only single-way stops at the two inter-

"She's actually been very responsive in getting the Traffic Safety Committee to address the issue of the blind curve," he said. "It's generally acknowledged as not a real good design, and additional stop signs are not the solution. There really needs to be more of a road-design fix."

Fuller has asked the town highway safety department to consider possible solutions.

We certainly intend to be in touch with her and with the chairman of the Traffic Safety Committee" Berke said. "We kind of need to bird-dog this and see it through. We have a 5-year-old."

Delmar Fitness for Her team of 60 to Race for the Cure

By Ann Treadway

A team of about 60 women will be representing Fitness for Her in the Race for the Cure scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 2, in Albany's Washington Park.

The fitness center for women on Delaware Avenue in Delmar is getting busier every year since it was opened by D.J. Taylor in 1994. This year's team for the annual race is the largest it has ever signed up.

The Race for the Cure is a national event sponsored by the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer her as she runs the pathways of Foundation and locally by the Junior League of Albany. Its purpose is to raise funds to combat breast cancer by paying for research and local programs.

Sandy Wimer of Delmar will be running with the Fitness for Her team in honor of her good friend, Jeanne Cotrofeld, also of Delmar. They met while doing step aerobics every morning at the fitness

Her friend will be in the hospital on the day of race undergoing reconstructive surgery, after having had treatment for breast cancer. But Wimer will be thinking of Washington Park,

"It's a great time of year, and I little over a year ago, she still is. loved it when I ran the race two years ago," Wimer said. An artist who teaches at Union College, Wimer and her husband have two grown children.

"I have to credit D.J. (Taylor) for getting us in good shape for the run," she said. Some of the local participants from the fitness center have surprised themselves, she said, finding the 3.1-mile distance easy to run.

Sherry Gold, another member of the team from Delmar, said she will run because she said, "It's a good cause," and because most of the money raised through entry fees for the race remains and is used in the local area.

She is also a regular at the early morning step aerobics class, now that her two children, ages 20 and 24, are away from home. She admits to enjoying the "esprit de after every morning workout, she goes to her job as director of treatment services for Capital District Psychiatric Center.

She said she feels "very lucky" that her breast cancer was detected early, so it hadn't spread women, especially those in their 40s and older, to be sure to have annual mammograms.

"But breast cancer is not a death "Just as we all trudge in there sentence," she said, "and it doesn't do any good to worry about it, or Murphy keeps in touch with women after their treatment for as long as they welcome the special attention from someone who's 'been there."

Another Delmar woman, Valerie Zalen, believes as strongly as McKenzie in the need for women to have regular mammograms. In September of 1988, her mother was diagnosed with breast cancer, and two months later she herself, at age 37, received the same diagnosis.

"I just happened to mention into her lymph nodes. Not sur- my mother's problem to my doc-> Zalen said she dates everything from before or after 1988, because it was the same year her husband had a second heart attack and bypass surgery, and her son had a serious bicycle accident - all before those mother-daughter diagnoses in the fall. The Zalens have three children, ages 24, 21 and 14.

Nowadays she walks four or five times a week, watches her diet, and scrupulously schedules regular checkups -- "on my birthday every year, as a present to myself."

She has seen that "We live in a time when we can be helped if we need it," with new drugs and treatments always becoming available. And she said that her family's experiences with two hospitals and many area doctors have all been positive.

Zalen said, "There is so much we can't control in life," but taking. steps - whether literally or figuratively - to monitor and protect our health is one thing we can control.

Which is a sentiment all the staff and workout warriors at Fitness for Her heartily endorse.

Lordy, lordy look who's turning 40

By Katherine McCarthy

earth didn't open up, the sky didn't blacken, and the horsemen didn't ride in heralding the Apocalypse.

In a way, it was vaguely anticlimactic, to have given so much thought to this day and to have it pass exactly like so many before it

COMMENTARY:  $oldsymbol{\mathcal{M}}$ om's () ord

It's not 9/9/99 that carried so much portent, but a 40th birthday. This age, more than any other, seems to evoke anxiety, comment, dread and philosophizing. Perhaps the greatest validation of its import was last week's People magazine cover, "Fabulous at 40" with all those glamorous gals who can afford to spend the better part of the day at the gym gracing its cover.

A clerk at Border's commiserated as he checked my license against the check I'd just written. "Happy Birthday," he said, confiding that he'd just turned 50.

"Forty is the old age of youth," The day came and went, and the he said, "and 50 is the youth of old age.

Is it a final farewell to youth, then, this 40? My mother sneers at this idea, excoriating her children's generation for shirking their adult responsibilities - marrying, bearing children, vacuuming under the couch for too long. When she was 40, I was in college. Her own mother, at 40, was already a grandmother. Not for me, thanks; I relate totally to George W's belief that his wild youth ended at

If all the years leading up to 40 don't necessarily constitute wild youth, they are years of selfcenteredness, self-focus and selfdefinition, softened in memory by the passage of time.

My elementary school days, long forgotten, have been reawakened by the things my children do now, like learning to spell, figuring out division, and riding a bike alone to a friend's house for the first time.

Oh, those awful teen years, full of tears, rebellion, longing, daring, reaching - replaced by going away to college, and the realization that home, after all, had been a pretty great place.

What is sweeter than being in raising the next generation. your 20s, when all of life is yours, and everyone and everything looks so beautiful and fun? The boundless energy of staying up all night, when every party is a new adventure, every new face a potential friend, and each job a minicourse on economics and human relations.

Thirty seemed like a big number at the time, but in a rewarding way. There could still be wild nights, but they were tempered with cozy evenings at home. There were still a number of firsts in my 30s: the births of my children, a first home, a first new car, the first days of school for my own boys.

That's the thing about 40: life isn't only about me any more. We think it's a loss of youth that we're mourning; maybe it's that loss of ourselves as the main focal point. The changes that have been coming on slowly seem crystallized, and the self we've been defining all those years is now busy raising children, paying the mortgage, and caring for aging parents.

This shift is appropriate, even if it carries a sense of farewell to a younger way of life. Who, really, can sustain all that introspection and self-absorption, not to mention late nights, be they from a party or a sleepless baby?

Forty truly is time to enter fully into the world around us; to give and molded us, and do our part in I am ready to travel and enjoy.

With this shift in vantage point comes a time of reckoning, perhaps another reason 40 is dreaded so intensely. What dreams and hopes have been realized? What bitter disappointments marred the road that brought us this far, perhaps leaving a lingering sense of

If 40 is the swan song of youth, its perspective is the breath of fresh air that gives voice to the song that drowns out the notes of regret. All of life's experiences can be gathered up to guide us into the next phase of our lives, where we will shape our children's lives, and leave our mark for future generations.

Maybe this is why life begins at 40. A sense of stoicism borne of a New England upbringing, combined with the evidence of my good life, tell me there's no sense regretting the undone or the mistakes. All around me, people are celebrating 40 with aplomb, sometimes making large, communityminded gestures, and sometimes small resolutions to themselves.

I have no grand gesture, just a sense of thanks for being where I am. I have been lucky to have had to overcome some adversity, to have known joys great and small, and sorrows wide and deep. Mine has been a life overwhelmingly full so.far. Forty may be a crossback, in a way, to all that shaped roads in this journey, but it is one

Two local nurses volunteer at Guatemalan clinic

Two Bethlehem pediatric nurse practitioners, Veronica Armbruster and Barbara Lent, recently spent 10 days in Neuva Santa Rosa, Guatemala, with the Glens Falls Medical Mission Foun-

"Dr. Richard Leach had been on other missions, and found some faults with how they were run," Armbruster said. "He set up his own mission, and for the last five years, has gone to Neuva Santa Rosa twice a year for 10 days."

One of the results of the mission's work is that the Guatemalan government is looking to establish a permanent clinic in-Neuva Santa Rosa.

For now, Glen Falls Medical Mission sets up its clinic in a local church, and people come from great distances for medical treat-

The source of the girl's pain turned out to be more emotional than physical; during the country's war, she had come home to find her grandfather on the ground, his head split open by a machete.

The psychiatric nurse with the mission talked to the little girl about making special time to grieve for her grandfather, and that she could hold her grandfather in her heart. Armbruster hugged the girl, gave her a new pair of shoes, and told her she'd always remember her.

The girl returned a few days later. "She walked 8 miles to tell me she'd found her smile," Armbruster said.

Armbruster still follows the case of a mother and child she met there.

Follow Golden Rule

Three letters to the editor this week point to two serious problems in our society: incurable disease and discrimination.

In the first instance, we are referring to juvenile diabetes, a serious illness that affects children.

One of these children is Tim Carey, a Delmar EditorialS boy and a fighter. He has been afflicted with juvenile diabetes since he was a young child, but he leads a full and active life.

Tim, in fact, has organized a Bethlehem team to participate in a Walk to Cure Diabetes on Sept. 26. He has done a lot of leg work already, publicizing the event over the summer, and he still hopes others will sign up for the walk at Corporate Woods. People like Tim will eventually solve the first problem we mentioned.

Tim is also an inspiration to another Delmar family, the Deitzes, whose 4-year-old son is also afflicted with diabetes. The Deitzes recently were devastated when their son Michael was rejected by an Albany preschool because of his disease. They are devastated as much by the manner in which their son was rejected, as by the rejection itself.

A phone call, rather than an in-person appointment stunned the mother.

We can appreciate the fact that some schools may not be equipped to cope with some medical illness, but we believe this school should have shown more compassion in its decision to reject Michael. Perhaps the school could have even helped the family find a place for him. Happily, the Deitzes found a school themselves. Families like the Careys and the Deitzes deserve our support, and don't deserve to be treated like outcasts.

Good Sam to host event

Don't miss Good Samaritan Homes' celebration of the bonds of family and friendship this weekend at the campus on Rockefeller Road in Delmar.

Friday and Saturday activities include performances, exhibits and displays. Clowns and face painting are on tap for children and a white elephant sale will benefit the residents council fund.

There will also be community safety displays by Bethlehem police, Elsmere Fire Co. and Capital District Ambulance Service.

Area families and friends are invited to attend and participate in the many scheduled events, including displays of Good Sam residents' art and needlework and poetry readings. There will be a DJ on Friday afternoon.

For information about the From This Day Forward event, call 439-8116.

Excellence isn't just making all A's

By Teresa Snyder

The writer is principal of Glenmont Elementary School.

As we prepare for a new school year, replete with possibilities, I will admit I get a little twinge of learned 24,999 ways how not to doubt about our quest for excel-

It is not because I do not value excellence, it is because I sometimes think we mistake certain benchmarks as indicators of excellence, when they are signposts, not destinations.

As a school administrator, having spent my life in the company of children, I become concerned when we narrow our perceptions of achievement to certain markers and ignore the extraordinary moments which are much more likely to indicate learning or understanding.

Those of us who work with children of all ages can recount instances when understanding dawned among students who have struggled with some concept, or we notice the immense growth a child makes from the earliest days of awkwardly grasping a pencil to the day she pens her first story.

I think human growth does not occur without a few bumps and bruises. It is sometimes the resilience of a person which is an indicator of excellence, not the outcome on a particular measure. In many of life's contests, we lose. It is how we deal with those losses which predicts our success, not in the glib or glamorous achievement of short-term goals.

There is an apocryphal story about Thomas Edison, who had predicted to the press that he would successfully create an electric light bulb in six weeks. The press followed his attempts until they became bored with the apparently fruitless endeavor. Edison persisted, taking what he learned from one failure and building on it, until finally one day in Menlo Park, he and a team of engineers discovered a carbon filament which would burn for hours, giving off light inside a glass jar – the rudimentary light bulb was invented - after 25,000 tries.

A reporter asked him how he felt about failing and Edison supposedly replied, "Failed? - I make a light bulb!"

Point of View

Excellence, I think, is a matter of persistence and resilience. In our quest for achievement, we sometimes forget that life is filled with falling down, but what matters is getting back up.

Excellence catches us by surprise. I remember the astonishment Lielt when I looked at a firstgrader's painting on display at our school Celebration of Learning.

Students choose the pieces of school work they want to display that evening and write a reflective piece as to why the piece they chose demonstrated something they learned during the year. This little fellow had selected his glorious painting, "because I just love Matisse."

By some people's standards, this boy would have been unlikely to achieve excellence, a child with many issues which interfere with his smooth adjustment to school expectations.

Excellence leaves us thirsty. The best work is the piece not

I spoke with a master craftsman who was looking at an early piece he had done, and an almost shy grin appeared as he said how proud he had been of this first piece of sculpture, which he now viewed as rather weak — but which his mother still cherishes.

Early works are formative pieces, but because we are beings in process, the piece we have most recently done may not be our best work, our best may be still ahead we are thirsty for more.

Excellence is not a recipe. This is sometimes troubling to those of us who work in schools. If we buy this text book or do well on this test or have students read this many books, we will be gourmets of excellence. A cup of this and a pinch of that does not always result in the perfect cake, anymore than will reading 25 books or getting all 100s on your spelling make you into Robert Frost.

I remember a child I taught in which mesmerized his peers.

I still use one of his images when I am teaching literary imagery. I asked him to describe a farm. He said: "Country cows smell like yesterdays diapers."

I have yet to repeat that phrase without eliciting a scrunched up nose and "EWWWW" response from those who hear it. It is an excellent image emerging from a struggling student.

Excellence is not a commodity. It can not be purchased like the best and most expensive pair of shoes. I seem to recall a runner in the Rome Olympics who won the marathon barefoot.

In a 11 enzied push to match the marketed images of the perfect body, we trash the form which is ours un quely. It is painful to hear young children of both genders comparing the cost of everything from boxers to backpacks, not for the best buy, but for the best contrived image. It is horrific to hear little girls talking about losing weight and little boystalking about being buff and watching small children become convinced that they can be excellent if they just get the right clothes.

I remember being a parent of a player on a youth soccer team where the price of cleats was a source of derision among children under 10. I love Michael Jordan, but I do wish he would stand behind a pair of sneakers which the ordinary child in the United States could afford, because we all know that Michael Jordan's excellence is not really tied to his shoelaces.

Excellence is about drive and desire, not coercion and threat. Our best work does not emerge when we are beaten over the head. Our best work emerges in those moments when we find ourselves wondering – What if? Why not?

Sometimes, I think, coercion and threat do elicit excellent responses, but they are almost always contrived to subvert the oppressor.

One of my favorite children's books is Nightjohn by Gary Paulsen. In it, John is a slave who can read and who goes about the slave quarters teaching children how to read. Of course, it is illegal for slaves to read, because knowledge is power. To keep John from teaching, his master amputates his toes, to discourage him from walking among the shacks. The little novel ends with an image of footprints in the dust, footprints minus middle toes.

Excellence can be humbling. At my old school we had a child who had massive physical problems which kept her wheelchair bound. One of her therapies was to practice "walking" to help her stretch her leg muscles. Her therapist, her aide and I would get her up out of her chair and would try to coax her into moving her shriveled little legs. It was painful and usually resulted in tears.

One day, one of her kindergarten classmates tugged on my sleeve to get my attention. When I turned to her, she said, "It would be easier for her to see where to second grade who struggled with put her foot if you put colored dots print, yet he was an elegant on the floor." Then she skipped speaker, who could create stories off to the water table. It was amazing - a simple observation from someone with baby teeth - and it worked.

> We made it a game to put different colored dots in a row and our little person delighted in trying to step on them. Other children took to the idea and played too, we perfected the idea by changing the dots to dinosaur footprints or puppy paw prints. It was no longer a therapy - it was an adventure. -

> Ultimately, that is what I hope for the children in my care — that life is an adventure, with doses of excellence to savor and the fortitude to get up when they stumble.

> My hope is that they accept stumbling as a learning opportunity, not a defeat. My hope is that they will try - 25,000 times if necessarv.

Editor, The Spotlight:

When I read last week's commentary by Donna J. Bell, I knew I had to respond. I too have those same fears for my child: Will he be picked on by other children, will he fit in, be smart enough or athletic enough? You see, by all appearances my son Michael is a healthy, happy well-adjusted 4-year-old.

However, he carries with him an invisible disease: type 1 juvenile diabetes. Since he was diagnosed at age 3, he has had to endure two injections of insulin and four to six finger stick blood tests a day. I knew from the day he was diagnosed, that life for him would be just a little bit harder. I knew that some of his peers would not understand his disease, and he might be excluded from some things, but I never thought his first experience at rejection would involve educated adults.

Michael was enrolled in the program at an Albany preschool. After meeting with the teacher and director of the school to show them how to care for Michael during the day during the two and a half hours he would be there three days a week, I was called the next day and told he would not be able to attend the preschool. It would be too involved for them, too many other children in the 🚅 class and not enough time to worry about Michael's care. My jaw almost hit the floor. Was I hearing this correctly? I couldn't respond over the phone. I was numb. Michael doesn't really know about that conversation. All he knows is that his mommy cried all that morning, and all of a sudden he was going to a new school instead of the caring environment I had carefully chosen.

In contrast, St. Matthew's School on Whitehall Road in Albany accepted him — no questions asked. They were eager to meet Michael and learn all they could about his care. They have no idea how grateful his mother is.

For those of you who don't know about type 1 or 2 diabetes, buy a book and get educated. For those of you who would like to help cure diabetes, there is a team called Bethlehem Cares participating in the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation's Walk to Cure Diabetes on Sept. 26. The team captain is Tim Carey. My husband, two daughters and I, and of course Michael, will be joining Tim and

Editor, The Spotlight:

I would like to take one last opportunity to thank the entire Bethlehem community for its support of our townwide team, Bethlehem Cares, that will participate in the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation's Walk to Cure Diabetes on Sunday, Sept. 26, at Corporate Woods in Albany.

Thanks to the support of the business community, including those that sponsored our team T-shirt and sold our paper sneakers at their registers, those that donated services, including The Spotlight, Mail Boxes Etc., Grand Union of Delmar and Grand Union of Glenmont, and those that displayed our posters and brochures, we are on our way to raising a lot of money to fund research that will one day find a

I would also like to thank those people in the various schools in Bethlehem Central School District and the Church of St. Thomas the Apostle parish and St. Catherine of Siena parish who have expressed their desire to help us, as well as the families of Michael Deitz and Rebecca Plog for their wonderful support of our team. Without them, this event wouldn't be the success that it is!

Now, our final request is that anyone who would like to participate as a member of Bethlehem Cares send a preregistration form to sign 12 now. The first 175 people to register and turn in $25 or more will get a free Bethlehem Cares shirt. # Stand in boy's shoes

Editor, The Spotlight:

"Don't do this to me. I have 18 already!" This statement was made by a teacher at an Albany nursery school. The reason? Our nephew, 4-years-old, is diabetic. Actually we deem this an educational experience for those participating in the nursery school education program at the college: dealing with children who are "less than perfect."

Our nephew was so very excited, he could hardly contain himself. Then, our sister had to tell him he was not able to attend that school. He would have spent approximately seven and a half hours there each week. Was this too much to handle?

The contention is, they have no medical personnel on staff. Two of the children already accepted have peanut allergies. They pose a greater potential disaster to that teacher than our nephew. Perhaps they need more help at the nurs-

Our sister did not spring our nephew's diagnosis on the school. She called in early spring and told them he was diabetic. She was allowed to make an appointment with the teacher on Aug. 31 to give the teacher information on diabetes. Our nephew was allowed to play, meet the teacher and see his classroom. They spent several hours there and no one said anything. The director of the program called our sister the next morning with the news he could not attend.

We do not know the teacher or if she has a family. If she does, we hope they are all healthy, because if they're not you might hear her exclaim, "Don't do this to me!"

BC coach deserves better treatment

Editor, The Spotlight:

Jesse Braverman should not be hounded for volunteering to coach the Bethlehem Mickey Mantle baseball team. He should not be hounded for "violating" a rule (now guideline) that may be well intentioned but is so arbitrary and near-impossible to enforce as to be useless. This issue should not be decided over a narrowly defined Suburban Scholastic Council rule — it is about what we are teaching our kids — the example we set.

Jesse Braverman is a dedicated teacher, recognized by a Disney Award this year, we believe. He cares about his students — he takes them to movies and includes them as team managers. He calls their Babe Ruth Baseball or Bethlehem Basketball Club coaches to get his kids a break, should they need one.

He has nurtured a generation, literally, of Bethlehem kids, boys and girls, all ages, all skill-levels in what has come to be known as Jesse-ball. Unpaid, summer after summer, he has pitched and pitched and pitched. Jesse-ball has become as much a part of the fabricoi growing up in Bethlehem as the Slingerlands School play or the Four Corners.

The Mickey Mantle program he has developed has been quite successful over the years, often qualifying for state and regional tournaments. This year's team was 24 and 5. Our son was on that team. It is a good program.

He has also been successful with other teams. Bravermancoached Adirondack teams have won three Empire State Games' gold medals in baseball. Jesse coached this year's Bethlehem Central Varsity Baseball Team to the Scetion II, Class A champion-

Our laughter played on Jesse Braverman-coached girls freshman basketball teams for a couple of years. During that period, the team compiled a record of some 51 wins against three losses. More important, our daughter had the kind of coach we all want our kids to have.

We would encourage everyone concerned about this matter to read the Suburban Scholastic Council rules — or guidelines for themselves.

Should we condemn Jesse Braverman, or anyone, for violating rules that prohibit being a volunteer Mickey Mantle coach, but allow high school coaches to run for-profit camps for "under 14 and younger" (sic) and for-profit camps "in which the coach doesn't coach his/her own team?"

How can we persecute a man who only wants to coach baseball (and doesn't even have a son on the team), whose sin is that he knows our son's and daughter's names without looking at a clipboard. Aman who is in "violation" because he has too much character to hide within the loopholes that are so obvious in the regula-

Every article in Time or The New York Times on Columbine or any other malady of our young people points the fingers at the lack of "community involvement." The first lady reminds us that it 'takes a village." Jesse Braverman is part of the village. He is part of the community. He is a good example for our children.

Maybe the Suburban Council should be reviewing its regulations instead of Jesse Braverman's coaching a Mickey Mantle team. Maybe Bethlehem should be giving Jesse Braverman an award instead of a hard time.

I lived in Delmar nearly all my life, and even though I have moved to Orange County, I still subscribe to The Spotlight to keep up with "goings-on" at home.

Agroup of close friends of mine came to Delmar recently to sing at my daughter's wedding. I had planned on treating them to lunch at a local restaurant but was disappointed to find few restaurants open for lunch on Saturday. One person went above and beyond to help me out.

My thanks to Paul, owner of Mediterraneo on Delaware Avenue. Although he was normally closed until 4 p.m., Paul opened for my group and provided an outstanding lunch that my friends are still raving about.

The food was great, the service and friendly atmosphere outstand-

KNEE DEEP

Those who suffer from chondromalacia, also known as patello-femoral syndrome, may experience burning behind the kneecap, pain while stairclimbing, stiffness after periods of inactivity, and/ or painful popping of the knee. These symptoms arise from a softening of the joint surface between the kneecap and the end of the femur. It can be caused by a misaligned kneecap that tilts or pull to the outside of the knee, or tight quadriceps. Worn-out running shoes or sudden increases in running mileage or intensity may also contribute to the problem. With this in mind, it may help to switch to new running shoes at least every 500 miles. And, the quadriceps should be stretched regularly to increase the flexibility of the knee.

Bethlehem gives Guilderland the boot in season opener

On a brilliant September afternoon, the Bethlehem girls soccer team opened its season. Pitted against fellow Suburban Council rival, the Guilderland Dutchmen, the Eagles scored an impressive season opening victory winning a closely contested match 2-1.

season opening game playing second fiddle to a Varsity football game, Bethlehem Coach Tom Rogan had to be concerned how his exceptionally young team would react.

"I'm cautiously optimistic about our chances in a very tough conference," Rogan said about his squad of girls that is suiting up three eighth graders and four freshmen.

Early on Bethlehem was struggling as Guilderland dominated the action by applying heavy pressure. The Bethlehem girls seemed out of sorts, as they could not gain frenetic pace marked by an abuncontrol of the ball to establish any sort of offense. Eventually, after fending off a series of Guilderland. barrages, Bethlehem goal keeper Stephanie Sherman surrendered a goal on a great shot by Pipa Johnson.

As the Guilderland players Added to the pressure of a were revelling, it was as if something was triggered in the Bethlehem team. From that moment on, the Eagles dominated the remainder of the game.

We dug in and really woke up after the Guilderland goal," Rogan

Led by Senior Carrie Getz. Bethlehem turned up its intensity and stormed down the field putting pressure on Guilderland goalie, Steph Zych. With 18:00 remaining in the first half, Getz booted a rocket past Zych, tying the score 1-1.

The game was escalating into a dance of physical play. The girls on both teams were not making dirty plays, the contact was accidental without malice. However, the rugged rhythm of the game was leading to some heavy collisions and hard spills. With one exception most of these incidents were harmless.

In a frightening play that occurred just before the end of the first half, Getz, collapsed to the ground. Spearheading a now potent Eagle attack Getz attempted to make an acrobatic play on a high ball in an effort to put Bethlehem ahead. Soaring through the air, Getz appeared to roll over her right ankle as she crashed to the coarse ground below. For a moment that seemed to last an eternity, the crowd held its collective breath as Getz writhed with pain on the field. Rogan rushed to Getz' aid, and within a short time the embattled teen-ager was on her feet again, limping to the sideline with a billow of support emitting from the concerned excellent shape, flying around the field at great speed, but the timing and execution was not in sync. Sideline throw-ins were off target and errant passes led to loss of control.

As the second half began, Getz made a valiant effort to play through the pain and lead her team to victory. It was not to be, her hobbled ankle impaired her play and left Bethlehem without one of its primary players giving the Eagles with a variety of excuses to use should they lose. Bethlehem could throw in the towel and concede victory to a solid Guilderland team. But that didn't happen.

Led by the fleet feet of the explosive Sara Virgil, Bethlehem roared back. With 19:18 to go in the game, Virgil got the ball, made a majestic drive down the right sideline and blasted a shot into the Guilderland net, putting Bethlehem in the lead, 2-1. For the rest of the game Virgil and Adele Godfrey-Certner among others, made fantastic charges at the Dutchman goal, applying relentless pressure.

Though they were scrambling, Guilderland did have opportunities to re-tie the game. One play in particular gave them a chance when a high, booming shot got past a leaping Sherman, for what appeared to be a sure score. The ball hit the goal post and deflected back out, into the waiting arms of Sherman.

The only thing that is better than being lucky is to be good, and Bethlehem was. With a keen sense of anticipation, junior Susie Breaznell snuffed out many Guilderland rallies before they could begin. Her excellent defensive play helped to clinch the vic-

Brian Riedy, of Elm Estates, recently travelled to Lake Placid, for the US Sprint National Championship Competition in Canoe/ Kayak. On the site of past Olympic glory, Brian conjured up memories of athletic excellence gone by.

In the flat-water sprint races that were held between Aug. 3 through 7, Riedy established himself as force to be reckoned with. Like the mythical King Midas, Riedy displayed that he had the golden touch as he took first place in both the one-man (C-1) and two-man (C-2) high-kneel 500meter bantam class races.

As a member of the Hilltop Hoppers, a local canoe/kayak club, Riedy has been paddling for over three years. He fully intends to continue canoe racing and next year he hopes to duplicate his stirring performance by medaling in the juvenile class.

on the authority of key members of the shrine, had agreed to buy out his contract, and authorized him to take sufficient money to complete the transaction.

"Vella told me to take the money, $27,000, and get out," he merous encounters with specific said.

He partially corroborated that claim by producing an affidavit from a witness to his exchange with Vella. The witness is a former police investigator.

So why did he leave in such a hurry? O'Keefe said he was in fear of his life at the hands of some parishioners he characterized as "neo-Nazis" and "vicious, hateful racists.'

He calls the Glenmont shrine "another Waco waiting to happen. They have warehouses full of guns. Those people scared me. What a nightmare this has been."

O'Keefe arrived at St. Michael's, a parish affiliated with the Traditionalist Catholic movement, in spring 1993.

He maintained last week that throughout his service there, he had grown increasingly alarmed of "right-wing extremism" among some of his congregants. He maintained such extremists were in the minority in a congregation that numbered fewer than 75 during his tenure there.

Last week, O'Keefe cited nuindividuals he claimed were followers of the ultraconservative Liberty Lobby or members of the John Birch Society or right-wing militia groups and hate groups.

His tale includes allegations of caches of unregistered weapons, church money turned to personal use by various members, and strange visits by individuals with shady extremist connections who plied him with Nazi propaganda films and sought unsuccessfully to persuade him to join their cause.

O'Keefe said he contacted the FBI about some of the activities, and feels that it was these contacts, and his refusal to permit anti-Semitic and other hate literature in the shrine, that led to efforts to oust him.

He claimed the majority of his former flock didn't want him out, and that his Connecticut-based bishop, Robert F. McKenna of Catholics Forever, "was completely behind me, more than behind me."

McKenna, according to a receptionist in his office, "doesn't vendetta against me," he said. talk to the press anymore," and declined to be interviewed.

Many elements of O'Keefe's account are difficult to corroborate. Several former church members contacted about the story did not return phone calls; others declined to discuss the case.

is in Germany and could not be reached. Another St. Michael's worshipper, Feura Bush resident Quentin Kratz, dismissed O'Keefe's charges as "hogwash. The main thing is, the proper authorities have completely discredited anything he has to say.

Did Proskin look into any of his client's allegations of goings-on in Glenmont?

"It's not up to me to have an opinion on any of this," he said. "I'm his attorney, I did not indethere are those who did. If it's true, it's frightening, isn't it?"

Would O'Keefe's story have been credible in court?

"Would there be a defense in this case? Definitely yes," Proskin said. "Would a jury accept it? It's difficult to say."

Proskin said he has passed along many of O'Keefe's claims to "various prosecutorial agencies. Whatever they do, they do."

O'Keefe said he is unsatisfied with Proskin's representation.

"My second biggest mistake was to ever hire Arnold Proskin as my lawyer," he said. "He made no effort to defend me. The man did absolutely nothing for me. He said, breeder of the prize-winning "Lake you got the deal of the century. I Keuka" Siberian iris.

> Assistant District Attorney Lawrence Wiest continued to question the validity of O'Keefe's ordination and the extent of his disability. Efforts to reach Wiest were unsuccessful.

One of those who partially con-Vella, according to his mother, firmed O'Keefe's tale is news anchor Ed Dague of television station WNYT. He said he conducted an extensive investigation last February for a series of reports aired on his station, and he is substantially convinced of much of what O'Keefe has to say.

'Is he totally innocent? Who knows?" he said Monday. "There are aspects you will simply be unable to confirm. But he deserved more of a hearing from the criminal justice system than he received. He got no consideration pendently check anything out. But from the criminal justice system as having any legitimacy at all. They considered him a fraud and a common thief, and I'm convinced he's not that.'

Dague said he has spoken to witnesses who confirm many of the events O'Keefe recounted. He also confirmed O'Keefe's ordination at a Saskatchewan cathedral.

"It was incredibly easy to do," As recently as last week, Chief he said, adding that he was puzzled to learn that prosecutors had not bothered to do so.

> "He's legitimate. There's absolutely no doubt about that," Dague said.

Dague also confirmed O'Keefe's contacts with the FBI. and said the agents involved did in fact decline to investigate the priest's charges of right-wing extremism at the Glenmont church.

But he said they told him they would have been more interested had they known of weapons charges. O'Keefe conceded he did not discuss those with the FBI, since he could not prove them.

O'Keefe said he plans to meet this week with an attorney he declined to identify, to begin an effort to clear his name.

"My life is ruined now," he said. "I left jail with only the clothes on my back. I'm making an effort now to set the record straight. It isn't going to be easy."

FORTHER ON FAMILY ENTERTAINMENT

Larkfest expands focus to attract families

By BARBARA OWENS and JOSEPH PHILLIPS

arkfest, the daylong fall street festival of music, food and crafts, has a new centerpiece this year. Two music stages highlighting local jazz and rock will be set up at far ends of the festival on Saturday, Sept. 18, and right in the center will be a new festival within a festival called Kidfest.

For the sponsors of Larkfest, the new main event represents a shift of emphasis.

"We decided to change the focus of the event from an alternative rock festival to a more mellow festival that highlighted jazz and acoustical music. We also wanted it to be more family friendly," said John Samatulski, executive director of the Business Improvement District.

Kidfest was born from the idea that Larkfest had much to offer to adults, but less for children to do — making the festival something difficult for a family to enjoy together.

"We've always had a children's stage, but we've expanded that," says Larkfest publicist Jeannine Edmonds.

With Kidfest, festival promoters and organizers feel that they can create not only enjoyment for people of all ages, but they may even draw bigger crowds.

Kidfest will take place on Hudson Avenue, between Lark and Willett streets. There will be a stage for performers including the Yallah Middle Eastern Dance Ensemble, storytellers, ventriloquists and puppeteers, the Castle Bridge Marionettes, and magician and comedian Merdwyn the Mediocre.

Many of the stage performers will bring their acts into the crowds, roaming throughout the festival — particularly ventriloquist Sylvia Markson, with a trunk full of chatty pals like Chico the possum, Tulips the book-reading plant and her naughty bird sidekick Vern.

"We are scheduling performers and attractions to meet the interests of children of all ages," said Samatulski.

In fact, The Business Improvement District sent out a questionnaire asking children from 4 to 14 what attractions, rides or games they would like to see included.

"While the responses varied, there was one thing that was mentioned by every age group, they all wanted cookies and cupcakes," said Samatulski.

Vanilla Bean Bakery has been invited to help youngsters decorate their own baked confections at a special booth. And in the spirit of the season, Honest Weight Food Co-op will offer a head start on the pumpkin decorating season.

Small children will probably be most interested in the baby animal petting zoo, with farm animals, baby chicks, ducks and bunnies. Also on hand will be pony rides, pumpkin cutting, face painting, balloon sculptures, a coloring contest, sand sculpture and the popular moon walk.

Older children will enjoy the three-in-one attraction featuring bungee jumping, rock climbing and a trampoline, to be located on State Street, since Larkfest organizers believe it will be of interest to parents and other "big kids" as well.

Color Me Mine, the paint-it-yourself ceramics store located in Stuyvesant Plaza, will be on hand with ceramic tiles on which kids can create masterpieces. A painting attraction with a slightly different twist is the Henna artists, who will be available to paint hands in this ancient Indian tradition.

A Virtual Reality Reactor, like a mini movie theater where you feel as if you are a part of the action portrayed on the screen, is also on the agenda at Trinity Church parking lot. Three interactive movies will be featured: "Flying with the Blue Angels" (a ride on a Navy fighter jet), "Superspeedway," simulating auto racing at seven of the world most famous auto racing courses, and "Red Rock Run," where one can enjoy all the ups and downs of a coaster.

The plethora of family-friendly activities may have given Larkfest a new tone, but there is still plenty of adult interest on hand.

Two stages at far ends of the neighborhood will feature the adult music that has always been a Larkfest staple. The music stage at Washington Avenue will feature hour-long sets by local rock favorites, beginning at noon with Rocky Velvet, followed at 1:30 by the Staziaks, at 3 by the Vodkasonics, and rounding out the schedule from 4:30 to 5:30, Show Off.

At the Madison Avenue end of the festivities, the flavor of the music program is distinctly jazz, in 50-minute sets, highlighted at 1:20 p.m. by the Nick Brignola Quartet. Leading off at noon will be Dan Dobeck, Chris Garabedian and the New Eden Jazz Quartet. Pianist Ed Hamilton will perform at 2:40, and Michael Paolo at 4:20 for a long wrap-up set.

And in between, more than 100 crafters, artists, and food vendors, set against the backdrop of a picturesque neighborhood of 19th-century row houses, will offer color for every taste and all taste buds. And as usual, many of the street's regular shops will have sidewall displays and be open for business.

The festival will run om 10 a.m. until 5:30 p.m. Admission is free, but there will be a charge for most games, rides and attractions.

Above, Merdwin the Mediocre will perform at Kidfest this weekend as will the Castle Rock Marionettes, right. Castle Rock founder Steve Boden, below, will be presenting two shows at Kidfest, St. George and the Dragon and Nightingale. Also on hand will be Sylvia Markson, bottom, with her cast of entertaining characters.

The board is scheduled to review the final resolution on the zoning variance at its meeting tonight.

Meanwhile, the prefabricated sections of the Hess Express outlet being installed on New Scotland Road were shipped in by flatbed truck in late August, and assembled by crane before Labor Day. The structure is now in place, and other modifications to the New Scotland location are being completed this month.

The bright orange packet containing the survey was mailed to residents the first week in September, along with a postage-paid envelope for returning it to the district offices at 90 Adams Place in Delmar.
