Right moves

Highway Dept. gets high marks

By LIBBY SCHIRMER

Perhaps most motorists could tell this past weekend, but a private, nationally-published study on snow and ice control has confirmed what Bethlehem Highway Superintendent Gregg Sagendorph has known since he took his position.

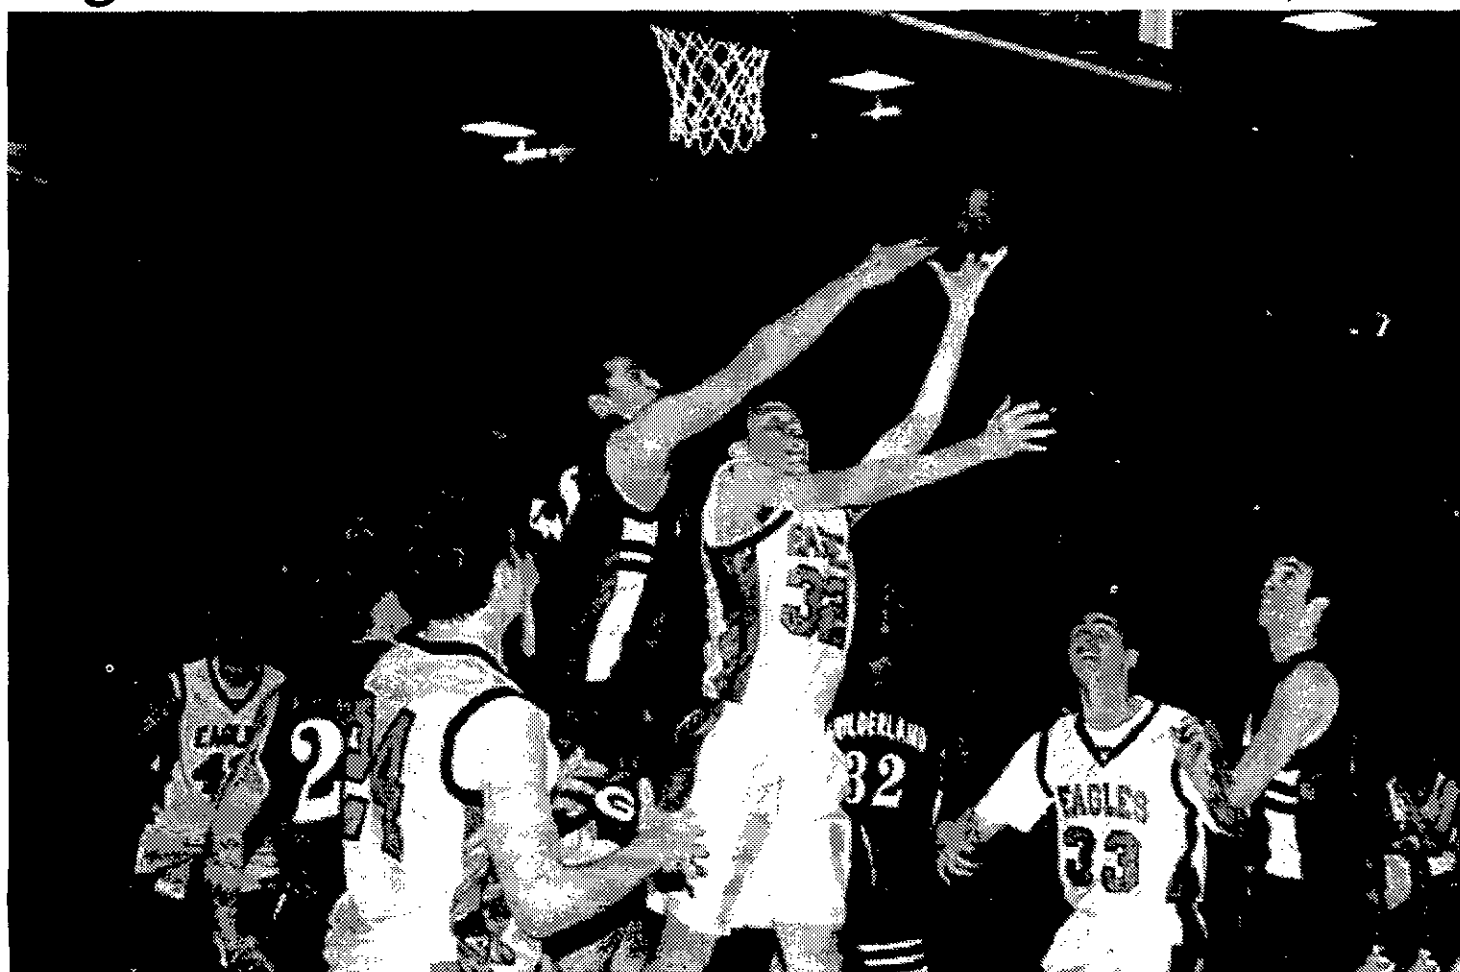

That the town's method of clearing and controlling roads before, during and after snowstorms and ice storms is one of the best in the Northeast.

The study, conducted by Slingerlands resident and former Department of Transportation engineer Duane Amsler as part of the National Cooperative Highway Research Program, considered the chemical and plowing methods of 26 municipalities that Amsler already believed to have efficient techniques in place.

"We participated because we thought it would be worthwhile, and that we could review the results," Sagendorph said. "We kind of knew (that our method was efficient), but just having it confirmed was good."

Details still sketchy on EPA site

Residents fear home values will go down

By LIBBY SCHIRMER

Bethlehem, named in December as one of two finalists for the Hudson River dredging project, is not guaranteed a full dewatering site, a standing room only crowd of about 200 heard from government officials last Wednesday. Judging from many of the comments made by residents who spoke, nothing would make them happier.

"On that property, a couple of things could happen," said Environmental Protection Agency Community Involvement Coordinator Léo Rosales. "It could get a full dewatering facility, it could be a transfer station, where processing wouldn't happen, or the site could just be held onto for a couple of years until 2007, 2008, when it could be more useful. The site is still on the table. It will be used for something."

Residents who spoke wove a common thread of reasons why they believe Bethlehem's 94-acre OG Real Estate site, owned by Victor Gush, doesn't belong as part of the six-year-plus $500 million endeavor that seeks to remove 30 years' worth, or 2.65 million cubic yards of, PCBs from the Hudson.

Two residents in two hours spoke in favor of the project. The rest of the speakers aired concerns about property values, air emissions, noise, odor and a lack of concrete information.

Proponents say the project will decrease the instances of cancer and other health effects in those who consume fish from the river, like humans and birds.

Sixty percent of the PCBs lie in the river bottom in the area around Fort Edward, the other finalist for a dewatering site. A number of residents argued that it's cost prohibitive to transfer something heavy, like the treated water, to an area of the river where the sediment is not PCB-laden. "I don't see why it can't all be handled at the Fort Edward site and this site isn't necessary at all," said Republican town board member George Lenhardt, to applause.

Another resident said that since Fort Edward benefited from the industry and development associated with GE, that town should bear the brunt of the dredging project, too.

"We had nothing to do with GE. We benefited in no way, shape or form, and we should not have to suffer the consequences here," Joan Disare said.

Supervisor Theresa Egan has argued that little, if any, pre-project monitoring has gone on below the Federal Dam in Troy, where the Bethlehem site is.

EPA representatives gave a presentation on what residents could expect with a full build-out of the Superfund project. General Electric, the company that, at the time, legally disposed of PCBs via the Hudson River, hasn't decided on disposal routes or methods, making specifics sketchy at best, said Dave King, director of the EPA's Hudson River Field Office.

"I'm sure GE wouldn't want to build two facilities if they don't need to," King said. "Perhaps the Fort Edward site can handle all of the material, but we don't know that."

The dredging will be a physical process, King said, where the water is squeezed out of PCB-laden sediment. King said that after that process, the water will be up to drinking-level standards. The site, upon the project's completion, will be cleaned up and any structures that are useful for the next project will be left, King said.

Gush, who had a plan in the works for a multi-million dollar mixed-use project at the same site, is in talks now with GE to work out leasing the land.

The Superfund project is the largest of its kind ever attempted.

Because of its status as a Superfund project, no mitigation to host communities is available, leading residents to ask questions about property values, which some believe will decline after the project begins.

Local youngsters need marrow transplants

By LIBBY SCHIRMER

Two school-age children and their families hope a bone marrow drive scheduled for February turns up a match for them, after family members and a look into the national bone marrow database has so far turned up none.

Jackie Hill, a school bus driver for Bethlehem Central schools, has a 16-year-old son, Anthony, who was diagnosed in 2002 with Hodgkin's Lymphoma. Hill said her son, who recently got his learner's driving permit, is looking to "just be a normal kid again." ## State Police arrest contractor for larceny

State Police from the New Scotland barracks arrested a general contractor for allegedly stealing about $20,000 from customers. He was arrested after a 10-month investigation by the New Scotland Bureau of Criminal Investigation.

Thomas P. Cronin, 53, of 56 Blue Spruce Lane in Ballston Lake, was arrested on a grand jury indictment, and now faces two counts of third-degree grand larceny, a D felony; one count of fourth-degree grand larceny, an E felony; and a count of petty larceny, a misdemeanor.

Cronin was working for Four Seasons Sun Rooms out of Long Island when the larcenies allegedly happened.

After getting money from five customers, Cronin allegedly failed to perform the work he was contracted to do, resulting in the charges.

Cronin was arraigned in Albany County Court before Judge Stephen Herrick and sent to Albany County Jail without bail. New York State Police are asking anyone who had contact with Cronin to call them at 768-8161.

Progress Club lists February schedule of meetings

The Delmar Progress Club has announced meetings for the month of February.

On Monday, Feb. 7, a general meeting will be held in Bethlehem Public Library community room at 10 a.m. The literature group will meet Tuesday, Feb. 8 in the town hall room 101 at 2 p.m.

The travel group will meet Thursday, Feb. 10 in the library community room, also at 2 p.m.

The creative arts group will meet in the library board room on Wednesday, Feb. 16 at 10 a.m. The antique study group will meet in the town hall room 101 on Tuesday, Feb. 22 for slides and needlecraft.

On Feb. 28, the knitters will meet in the library board room at 10 a.m.

For information, call Helen Smith at 439-3916.

Bethlehem police make two DWI arrests

Police have made two driving while intoxicated (DWI) arrests since Jan. 10.

According to police, on that date in the area of 25 River Road, police saw a car run a stop sign.

After pulling over Jerome P. Trent, 51, of 93 Morris St. in Albany, police said they smelled a strong odor of alcohol on his breath. A check showed him to have a suspended license from Menands Court and an active bench warrant for his arrest from the town of North Greenbush.

Trent failed field sobriety tests and was placed under arrest for DWI and aggravated unlicensed operation. Another check showed that Trent had a previous conviction for operating a motor vehicle with a blood alcohol content greater than .08 percent.

Judge Frank Milano sent Trent to Albany County jail without bail.

On Jan. 15, at 9:23 a.m., police arrested a 36-year-old woman, who said she was on her way to work, for DWI.

Police noticed inadequate exhaust on the car Erika F. Buckout, of 1643 5th Ave. in Troy, was driving. A check showed an insurance lapse as of July 2004 on the same car.

According to reports, when the police car's lights were activated the officer saw Buckout look into her mirror, though she failed to pull over immediately. When Buckout did pull over, in the vicinity of Leonard Place, police said she did so partially onto the curb area.

Police said they smelled alcohol on Buckout's breath, and she admitted to drinking at a party earlier.

She refused a chemical test, police said.

Buckout faces a DWI charge, a third-degree aggravated unlicensed operation charge as well as traffic infraction charges including no insurance and suspended registration.

Couple conserves water from rainy days

By LIBBY SCHIRMER

One New Scotland resident has solved his water woes, at least for the time being, from the roof down.

With a limited water supply that, at times, is silty and grainy, the town of New Scotland's residents are no strangers to water problems. Peter Kelly, who lives on a piece of land that overlooks the Helderbergs and the very limestone cliffs that perhaps helped to clog his showerheads, took a page out of his native Australia's water book when a barn project he undertook to store outdoor machinery also solved a problem he and his wife had been having since they built their house.

"It was purely an experiment, and I didn't know what would happen," Kelly said. "It ended up becoming a justification for spending the money on the barn to improve our water situation." Much of the house's hot water now consists of rainwater that Kelly collects in a 12,000-gallon cistern, below the barn's ground-level floor. Rain is collected in gutters and follows along a series of pipes down through several fiberglass washers that filter the water, into the 22-foot-long, 14-foot-high and 5.5-foot-wide tank that's lined with a swimming pool liner.

Another series of pipes and an immersed pump send the water 65 feet from the barn back into the basement of the house. The state Department of Environmental Conservation makes no requirements on water after the initial testing when someone moves into a house. When he heard that, Kelly said, he started seriously considering this system.

"It's a fairly complicated pump system. It's fairly well filtered, not sterile, but still very clean," Kelly said. "It's 100 percent soft because it comes out of the sky. No iron, no minerals." Kelly guessed he saved about $9,000 by sealing the tank with a pool liner. Sealing it with epoxy would have cost about $11,000. The Kellys could smell hints of vinyl as their new hot water system, designed by Colonial Plumbing out of Albany, began operating, but Kelly said the smell is a non-issue now.

The Kellys moved into the house about 10 years ago, and Kelly said, from the beginning, loads of laundry would come out with rust stains from the iron in the water. Faucets and showerheads became clogged from the lime silt, Kelly said. His wife began Sunday trips to a coin-operated laundry to spare their wardrobes.

"The hot water is gradually dissolving the minerals that collected in the pipes and the showerheads," Kelly said. "The dishwasher, we used to take the dishes out and they'd all be spotted with hard water. Now, the dishes are absolutely shining and clear. Things I didn't even expect to happen; it's all kind of exciting."

To complicate water matters, their well, though supporting just the two of them, is just 80 feet deep, Kelly said, noting they would use the 120 gallons that it could hold in a day. The Kellys have a 1,300-gallon holding tank in their basement, where they can track the water level. Kelly also said with the old system, he tired of dumping hundreds of pounds of salt into his system to keep the water soft.

The system was finished Dec. 31, 2003. After running for a year, Kelly seems pleased with the investment of his time, money and energy. He declined to say how much he spent on the entire project.

Kelly said the system is common in his home country of Australia, though that country's climate plays less of a role in how the tanks are set up. Kelly, when setting up his system, had to consider winter weather and temperatures that often drop below freezing, so the top of his tank is buried about 4 feet below the surface of the ground, so the water it collects doesn't freeze. The tanks he's seen in Australia are above ground.

"It's got to be deep enough so it's protected by the insulation force of the soil. Four feet down, water won't freeze, so we know it's going to be liquid down there," Kelly said.

On Sunday, Kelly's tank was about three-quarters full, holding about 110 inches of water, or 9,100 gallons. "It's at a pretty decent level," Kelly said.

The tank is completely sealed off from insects and to ensure no groundwater or driveway runoff seeps in, which would contaminate the water supply with insects, salt or bacteria.

Having completed the first year of his experiment, Kelly has yet to see the tank empty. He's gotten down to about 18 or 20 inches, but with water coming from a surface area of about 2,000-square-feet — the barn roof and the east side of his house's roof — he's calculated, from those figures and Albany's average annual rainfall, a collection of about 30,000 gallons a year.

"It's totally carefree consumption," Kelly said. "We use as much water as we want. And the

Porco grand jury resumes investigation

By LIBBY SCHIRMER

After a few-week hiatus, the grand jury for the investigation into the November murder of a prominent Delmar resident and the coinciding attack of his wife will resume this Friday.

A court officer from the New York State Appellate Court, where Peter Porco served as Judge Anthony Cardona's law clerk, showed up at the Porco's 36 Brockley Drive residence on the morning of Nov. 15 when Peter Porco failed to report for work. Joan Porco was found upstairs from her deceased husband, with trauma to the head and body, police have said. Joan Porco was alert before she was taken by ambulance to the hospital.

She remained at an Albany hospital for weeks, with her family keeping vigil beside a police presence before she was transferred to Sunnyview Rehabilitation Center in Niskayuna before Christmas.

The grand jury has heard from "dozens of witnesses," according to Assistant District Attorney Dave Rossi.

The grand jury took a break for the holidays, over which a new district attorney was sworn in, and then took time off, Rossi said, because the terms for the grand jury members, who are regular citizens from all walks of life, had expired.

"We took about two, three weeks off to adjust the schedules of the grand jurors. Their terms have been extended," Rossi said, though he declined to say for how long.

Rossi also couldn't comment on whether an end is in sight for the grand jury, which has met to investigate the murder of Peter Porco, who was 52 when he died.

Rossi has said the grand jury investigation will not necessarily generate charges or an indictment.

When the grand jury is finished hearing testimony, a judge will review the transcripts, though they will not be made public, Rossi said, noting that grand juries and the testimony they hear remain a secretive process. Chris Porco and his 23-year-old brother, Johnathan Porco, who is in the Navy, were called persons of interest at the beginning of the investigation. Both were interviewed by police. Chris Porco's Jeep Wrangler was seized by police for processing after they traveled to Rochester the day of the discovery of Peter Porco's body.

Bethlehem Police have never publicly called Chris Porco a suspect in the attack on his parents. Interviews with Chris Porco ended when Terence Kindlon, whose services were retained by 21-year-old Chris Porco's family, advised him not participate in any more police interviews.

Rossi said the district attorney's office remains in contact with the Porco family.

Life takes us down a long and winding road

By KATHERINE MCCARTHY

The road stretched long and flat before us. In the Canadian provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, it's hard to believe that the earth is round, for the ground moves flat and level all the way to the sky. To an east coast U.S. native, used to rolling hills, rivers and lakes, it feels like there's no point of orientation in all that openness.

The ducks that made homes or stopped to drink from the puddles at the side of the road were reassuring alleviations to the vast expanse of earth and sky. Towns that consisted of three grain elevators, railroad tracks and a post office whizzed by in what seems like a hurried clip from a movie. Traveling with a friend to work summers in Alaska, the road

COMMENTARY:

*Mom's

seemed endless before the prairies of the western provinces yielded to the majesty of the Canadian Rockies.

In the Rhine River's valley in Germany, roads hug the riverbed, so you have to hunker down to look out the car window to see the vineyards on hills and the castles along the ridges. They're more easily viewed from big train windows, and on a sunny day, traveling by boat through the gorges and past the castles of the Rhine can be so breathtaking that you might almost forget to giggle that the trip you're taking is called a "Rheinfahrt."

In New York City, the tall buildings form canyons along broad avenues, and on a January night nearly 21 years ago, I got in a taxi with three other girlfriends and hurtled up Amsterdam Avenue toward what I couldn't have known would be my destiny. We weren't quite as tawdry as Sarah Jessica Parker and her "Sex and the City" pals, but we were all on clearly on the hunt as we headed to the party hosted by male law school students that Wendy's brother had been tasked with recruiting girls to attend.

All these years later, friends still tussle over who introduced Chris and me, but almost from the moment we met, the mapping of our roads together began. My youth wasn't wasted, for in my younger years, I kept a close eye on the scenery as I negotiated the turns the road was taking.

I traveled as much as I could before meeting Chris, and before our lives really began with the births of our children, Chris and I took some great trips together. As happy as we are together, we are very different travelers:

When we're in a strange or new place, Chris is a book traveler. There are pictures of him in front of gorgeous waterfalls and important historical landmarks, nose deep in a Michelin guide. I'm a sidewalk café traveler, happiest at a small metal table, part of but removed from the passing foot traffic, imagining what other people's lives are like.

It's great fun, and I was happy to let my older son in on the game a few years ago, when we were all at dinner and he was the first one finished.

"I'm bored," he said as the rest of us finished our tacos al carbon. How can you possibly be bored in a room full of people? I thought, then taught him how never to be struck with a sense of ennui.

"Christopher," I said, "there are a million stories in this room, and you get to make them all up."

The couple in the corner behind us, he with gray hair and a beard; she with white hair cut in a page boy style? Were they hippies in the 1960s? Did they march on Washington? Are they vegetarians, or is that a beef burrito on his plate? Does he work for the EPA or a bank? Did she ever write the novel she kept in her head during the years she raised her children and blazed the way for women in a corporate board room?

The 10 people in their 20s at that long table across the room, drinking pitchers of margaritas? Who's the designated driver? Are they celebrating somebody's promotion, or is it just a regular Friday night? Did they all go to college together; do they work together? Who at that table will end up married to each other, and eat here someday with their own children, telling them about the night they first knew they'd travel the same road together for the rest of their lives?

I didn't tell Christopher that the road isn't all romantic river valleys and happy family dinners.

Just like Capital District winters, life's thoroughfares can get pockmarked with potholes, giving us a jolt when we least expect it.

Sometimes, that road gets tedious, holding not great adventures, but another load of laundry, another day at work, another moment of reaching the top step only to have somebody call you back downstairs.

In these middle years of our lives, it feels like our job is to hold the course, so our kids can figure out what road they're going to travel. Christopher, now 14 and a freshman in high school, is getting excited about the fact that in less than four years, he'll get to travel his own road. As parents, it means he finally understands that his grades will help determine what road that will be.

Cormac, at 12, is just figuring out that he doesn't like being a passenger on somebody else's road. He's got some ideas about the roads he wants to travel — author, filmmaker, chef, island dweller — but so far his way of getting there is to protest the requirements — homework, chores, pleasant attitude around the house — of the road his parents have chosen for the family to travel now.

Soon enough, both of our backseat passengers will be traveling on their own. The thought of it makes me want to seal shut the windows of the minivan and lock the doors so they can't escape. It also makes me dream about traveling in a small sedan, not the mommy marker, one day. Mostly, it makes me want to take a lot of snapshots of this particular road, for there's sure to be a curve not too far ahead.

And a little child ...

What else but weather (and a whole lot of scandal and downright thievery) is dominating the news this blustery winter? For one thing, the generosity and determination of many in the Capital District to reach out and help tsunami survivors. A story like this usually gets our attention for a few days, but interest generally wanes after that.

What we've noticed is that entire segments of our communities have dedicated themselves to helping out. School children, teachers, artists, civic groups, corporations, churches and individuals have all come forth and become part of the worldwide relief effort.

This type of behavior is refreshing after tales of wanton greed of individuals in various organizations (SPAC, NYRA) throughout the region. Some of these ongoing transgressions will go unpunished despite the fact that many hundreds of thousands of dollars apparently ended up in the pockets of individuals in a number of high-profile organizations.

The news stories often read like a Dickens' novel with villains blithely cutting the best deal for themselves that they can — even when they're on their way out. Their behavior makes the Martha Stewart scandal look like very small potatoes.

We try to teach our children accountability — that there are consequences for their actions, but clearly there are those who ignore these precepts in favor of the almighty dollar.

Are these the role models we want our kids to emulate? Perhaps they should look to our leaders in government as people to look up to. Well, not in New York. Our state legislators are viewed as dysfunctional, and they likely will continue on in this fashion after logging a 20-year record of foot-dragging on passing a state budget on time.

The average person would end up in big trouble if he or she ignored paying his bills for months on end. But politicians play by their own rules.

So we are left with few heroes, mostly made up of common folk, who are giving their time and energy, and in the case of school children, their pennies to help others, also mostly common folk, who lost everything in the wake of the tsunami. The mostly grassroots efforts highlight the importance of small communities banding together to help others in dire need.

Let's hope we learn something from current events and move toward a world that rewards goodness and honesty rather than greed and selfishness.

Fond memories of small town life

By RUTH McDOWELL

The writer is a former longtime resident of Delmar.

It's winter in Delmar and a new year. It's time to sit in front of burning logs and let their glow take you back to past years. This is a "once upon a time" story because, though true, it seems like a fairy tale now. I was a blushing bride when I moved to Delmar in 1941, and we didn't even have a key for the little house we rented because nobody locked their doors.

After all, Dave Main, the only policeman in town, patrolled the street on foot and all was well.

With a pocketful of change, I could dash to the store and buy a menu to please a new husband. Bread was a nickel a loaf, but man cannot live on bread alone, as the saying goes. Two lamb cutlets were just 35 cents and Dempf Pastry Shop was right on Delaware Avenue and specialized in apple squares at just 5 cents a piece and very delicious.

Waltermire's drug store was across the street and had a soda fountain with just three flavors available, vanilla, chocolate and strawberry. For a bit of refreshment, you might treat yourself to an ice cream cone for another five pennies. (The last cone I had was at Toll Gate for $2.50. Of course it was a triple decker and made with an exotic rum flavoring).

On special days we patronized Libby's Restaurant a few doors away and enjoyed a full-course dinner for 75 cents. This included a mid-meal dish of sherbet to "enhance the palate" before the main course. Adams Hardware was a big asset. Earl had stockpiled things you couldn't buy elsewhere. It was a treasure trove.

We lived on a cul-de-sac so all our neighbors became close friends. Frequently one of them churned a bucket of ice cream, and we all gathered for the treat and then harmonized around the piano, just as you see in old movies on television.

There was no TV, so entertainment was mainly homemade. (There was a tiny theater, "The Pit," which catered mostly to the young set for cowboy pictures on Saturdays).

Point of View

In the space of four years, several of us who were already neighbors, moved to larger houses near each other and stayed friends for many, many years.

With a pocketful of change, I could dash to the store and buy a menu to please a new husband. Bread was a nickel a loaf, but man cannot live on bread alone as the saying goes. Two lamb cutlets were just 35 cents and Dempf Pastry Shop was right on Delaware Avenue and specialized in apple squares at just 5 cents a piece and very delicious.

Later, when we all had children, Dooley's gas station on Delaware Avenue and Oakwood Place became a haven for them. It was not just the penny candy he sold that was the attraction, but Mr. Dooley would repair their bikes or fill their tires and not charge anything.

At that time the Firemen's Fair was a big event in the town, a fund-raiser for those loyal volunteers. I still treasure a glass pitcher my son finally won after tossing away so many nickels that he used up his whole allowance, but he knew I collected pitchers, and he wanted to surprise me.

The present site of Bethlehem Central Middle School was the senior high and the annual Christmas festival, later called White Christmas, was held there. It brought the whole town together with 500 people appearing on stage during the evening. There was a Delmar Men's Orchestra, school choirs, a pageant and Home Scene, which I often wrote and directed.

It fostered a great feeling of togetherness with hopes for peace in the near future because war had been declared and made a difference in our lives.

My husband was drafted but was sent back home because of an erratic heartbeat. Meanwhile, as a member of the Motor Corps, I drove a Red Cross truck during the war, delivering medical materials to all the churches where they folded bandages to be sent abroad. One night I had to meet a troop train in Rensselaer to dispense boxes of lunches that I had picked up at headquarters.

A whole train of soldiers was heading for New York City to go overseas, and this would be their last meal until they boarded the ships. All lights were off, and they made a quick stop to pick up our food.

Since the candles of my birthday cake could now heat up a room, I have moved to the sunny climes of Florida to be near my son Walter McDowell who attended kindergarten through graduation in Bethlehem Central schools.

My mind goes back to those thoughts of earlier years. We all look up at the same stars and pray that wars will cease and terrorism ends, and that we may return to that peaceful realm of a small town we once knew those many years ago.

Writer simply wanted more time to review plan

Editor, The Spotlight:

It is puzzling to me why Barbara Ostroff felt a need to reprimand me in her Jan. 19 letter to the editor, "Mud slinging is unfair to reputable man," for comments attributed to me in a Dec. 8 issue of The Spotlight reporting on the second public hearing for the Delmar Fire Station bond. In that issue I was quoted as saying, "We haven't had enough time to talk this through. I feel strongly we should continue this dialogue, and we shouldn't be held hostage by Mr. Verstandig." I acknowledge and stand by this quote.

Had Ms. Ostroff attended the second public hearing she would understand that the quote she cited is out of context and does not represent the full scope and breadth of discussions at the hearing that evening. During the course of the hearing, which continued till 11 p.m., concerned citizens repeatedly asked for more time to review the proposal. Delmar fire district officials indicated that their need to move the bond proposal forward so quickly was to satisfy a contractual agreement with Mr. Verstandig to close the deal by the end of December. Residents requested that the district approach Mr. Verstandig to extend the contract for a few months to allow more time for public debate. We were told by district officials that Mr. Verstandig would not consider a contract extension and that if the district did not purchase the property by the end of December, he would sell it to another interested party.

I do not personally know Mr. Verstandig but have shopped in his store and found it to be one of the gems in our town. To assert that my comments at the hearing were a form of "bashing", "malicious" or "dragging Mr. Verstandig's name through the mud" is nothing short of incredulous.

Pen pal column stirs concerns about bias

Editor, The Spotlight:

I was quite taken by Katherine McCarthy's article on her German e-mail pen pal in the Jan. 12 edition.

How silly of me to think that the generation of Germans who gave us Adolph Hitler and the pogroms may in fact be truly repentant to the world for the actions of a few lunatics.

The fact that 6 million Jews, as well as countless homosexuals and those who had the courage to think politically away from the Fuhrer and his party were massacred simply because they were who they were, would make Lydia of pen pal note weigh the consequences of the "horrible actions" of the Americans over what had befallen Europe.

Perhaps Lydia may have considered the abominations of the war simply an inconvenience to her sleepy little village. Perhaps she didn't consider the atrocities of the day to be so atrocious. Perhaps she has held fast to the belief that the world would be better off in a "genetically pure" state. Perhaps she would have thought differently if her husband had been carted off to the gas chambers along with her children, simply because the family was "born wrong."

I may be overstating the case, but one would like to think that education over the years and enlightenment would find Lydia and her compatriots with a somewhat different vantage point.

I guess because of my own personal bias of trying to find the best in people, I would prefer to think that Lydia is simply regressing in her advanced years to a place that has reality a little bit obscured.

The rose colored glasses she is wearing are showing her a world a bit more slanted than the rest of us see. ... I would like to think that is the case, but alas, I fear she speaks for more of the world than I would like to admit.

Thanks to all for donating toys

Editor, The Spotlight:

I would like to thank the Bethlehem community as well as other local community members who helped to make the Holiday Toy Drive for the Bethlehem chapter of Family-to-Family to be such a major success. I would like to thank both the Glenmont Price Chopper as well as the Slingerlands Price Chopper for being collection sites for new and gently used toys.

Your support in this endeavor was greatly appreciated. I would also like to thank Federal Express which shipped 40 boxes of toys and food to families in West Virginia and Louisiana at no cost.

This is just part of their ongoing support of this national organization as they provide free shipping on a monthly basis to over 25 chapters of this organization across the country. Bethlehem Family-to-Family serves families in two of the poorest areas of the country by having local families and organizations sponsor a family with a week's worth of meals once a month. The toys that the Bethlehem community so generously donated made it possible for these families to have some cheer this holiday season.

Highway

about 60 in all, start by spreading a layer of salt when the snow flies or is expected to fly hard, about 400 pounds per lane mile, Sagendorph said. Plowing begins after a layer of an inch or two of snow.

The half-million dollar study required the department to keep meticulous records of every snow and ice event for three winter seasons, Amsler said. Sagendorph said the department purchased a couple of thermometers, but other than that, the cost of keeping the records, resulting in more paperwork, was worth what the department was going to find out from it.

"The cost benefit was tremendous," Sagendorph said.

Sagendorph inherited the method when he took his post in the early 1990s, and he's adopted the old "if it ain't broke, ..." mantra to keep motorists on the road in the poorest of conditions. The department also keeps up on seminars and schools every year, Sagendorph said. Amsler called Bethlehem's highway department's methods excellent.

"They keep a fairly high level of service after the storm," Amsler said. "It's not as good during the storms, but given the traffic volume and the topography of the area, that's not a big deal."

Amsler said he and his study co-writers considered the application rates of the participants, what levels of service they needed to reach and what results they got for the application, resulting in enormous amounts of data from the 26 participants.

During ice storms, the method changes a bit, with a heavier concentration on salt with additional sand dispersed for more traction, Sagendorph said.

"Ice storms are a whole different ball game," Amsler conceded.

This past weekend, area meteorologists had highway departments all over bracing for a blizzard that, Sagendorph said, never materialized.

"We were prepared, but it was a fairly routine storm. We got about a foot of snow," Sagendorph said, noting the weight of the snow and the ease with which plows were able to move it away.

This winter, after getting a late start, according to Sagendorph, has been a pretty average one, like last year's winter, which included storms during November, December and March, but little snow during the in-between months.

"This winter has started easy. We didn't have plowable snow until Dec. 27 or 28, which is a late start for winter," Sagendorph said.

The difference this year is the freezing temperatures, which prevent salt from doing its jobs. On those days, calcium chloride is added to the salt to improve its performance, but in temperatures below zero, Sagendorph said, little can be done.

This study, Amsler said, will serve as a teaching mechanism for his classes.

State tax dept.: Get ready now

The state department of taxation and finance advises taxpayers to get ready now for the upcoming tax season. The office advises taxpayers to begin organizing records and receipts as well as determining whether their 2003 tax returns are vastly different from what they anticipate earning in 2004.

If changes are dramatic, they may need to consult the tax department's Web site at www.nystax.gov or contact the department's customer service representatives at 1-800-CALL-TAX. The Web site has information on how to obtain or download tax forms, determine whether they qualify for free online

Tax filers can also consult the department's catalogue of frequently asked questions, which provides answers to questions regarding estate taxes, gift and prize winnings, sales and use tax, child support enforcement, technical assistant and help with other tax-related matters. Information on the STAR school tax program, tax help for individuals serving in and in support of the Iraq War, changes to the state's individual and corporate tax forms is also available.

Taxpayers looking for detailed information about tuition tax credits or tax credits for homeowners or renters should log on to the department's Web site and click on publications and technical bulletins. There they'll also get information on earned income tax credit qualifications, tax issues related to domestic help, questions and answers on New York state's Farmers' school tax credit and tax information for nonresidents and part-time residents.

Filers should also be aware that they may benefit from the following changes to this year's tax law: the college tuition tax credit deduction has been increased; a new earned income tax credit for New York City residents; long-term health care insurance credit has been increased; an alternative fuel credit has been extended; new tax breaks for members of the military and militia; and an opportunity to contribute to the prostate cancer research, detection and education fund.

Top children's works are available at library

The Newbery and Caldecott medals honor outstanding writing and illustration of young people's works published in the United States during the previous year.

Considered the Academy Awards of children's book publishing, they are the most prestigious awards in children's literature.

The first place winners for 2005 announced by the American Library Association this month were Cynthia Kadohata, author of "Kira-Kira," and Kevin Henkes, illustrator and author of "Kitten's First Full Moon".

You can find the whole list of honored books on the American Library Association website at www.ala.org and reserve them through www.voorheesvillelibrary.org for your children to enjoy.

"My Mother's Hands," and "The Little Old Woman Who Hated Housework," a participation tale from Scotland by Margaret Read MacDonald.

Dudding is well known in the regional and national storytelling community. She has told stories and presented workshops at many venues in the Northeast. She is co-producer of Story Sundays, a storytelling dinner series for adults, now in its sixth season. She also co-produced the Egg's popular Tellebration event from 1997-2003. Her stories "A Circle of Love" and "The Birth of a Folk Art" were recorded live at the Egg for Tellebration CDs in 2001 and 2002.

Dudding also has published articles in The Museletter, the publication of the League for the Advancement of New England Storytelling, and in The Storytelling Magazine, the publication of the National Storytelling Network.

This program is a charmer for adults and children ages 10 and up. Call 439-9314 to register.

Bethlehem fends off Guilderland comeback

By ROB JONAS

The saying that it's hard to beat the same team three times in a season held true last Friday when Bethlehem and Guilderland met in a Suburban Council boys basketball game.

Bethlehem jumped out to a 20-8 halftime lead and held on for a 43-37 victory over Guilderland that prevented the Dutchmen from moving into sole possession of first place in the Gold Division.

"We knew there was a long streak of them beating us, and we wanted to stop that," Bethlehem guard John Burke said.

"We respect them immensely, and that's why we value this win a lot," Bethlehem coach Jeremy Klugman said.

In two previous meetings this season, Guilderland survived its shooting woes to post victories over Bethlehem by 10 and 15 points. But on this night, the Dutchmen's 1-for-16 performance behind the three-point arc crippled them.

"I think we have to play not to lose, and we have to try to relax out there," Guilderland coach Ron Osinski said.

"I want to give our defense a lot of credit because they made them take a lot of bad three-pointers," Klugman said. "We had a hand in their faces every time."

After missing 12 threes in the first half, Guilderland made a comeback bid by penetrating through Bethlehem's man-to-man defense in the third quarter. Driving layups by Mike Dillon, Josh Miller and Justin Maxwell helped pull the Dutchmen within two points late with less than two minutes left.

"We just started trying to hustle a bit, and that was the difference," Osinski said. "We also were able to start applying full-court pressure because we were making our shots."

Bethlehem had an answer, though. Kevin Stempsey drained a three-pointer to put the Eagles ahead by five points, and then Burke made a short jump shot at the third quarter buzzer to give Bethlehem a 29-22 lead.

"Our biggest problem has been making big shots, but Stempsey came through with that three late, and then Burke hit that shot at the end," Klugman said. "Without those shots, we don't have the ability to stop the (Guilderland) run."

Burke continued to make key contributions for Bethlehem in the fourth quarter. He opened the period with another short jump shot off a scramble, and then he made a layup to end a brief Guilderland rally.

Burke's biggest contribution came in the final 20 seconds. With Bethlehem clinging to a four-point lead, the reserve guard grabbed a defensive rebound following two missed Guilderland shots and was fouled. Burke then calmly sank two free throws to put the game out of the Dutchmen's reach.

"I grabbed that rebound, and I knew they'd start fouling," said Burke, who finished with 10 points off the bench.

"We said in the locker room that (Burke) was the best player in practice the last two days," Klugman said. "He provided a huge spark for us."

Stempsey, who scored the game's first seven points, led Bethlehem with 12 points.

"He has the potential to do that," Klugman said. "He has the confidence in his scoring ability, and we believe in him."

Dillon scored 11 of his team-high 13 points in the second half to lead Guilderland's comeback bid.

"That was probably the best game he's played all year. That was the good thing that came out of (the loss)," Osinski said.

The win against Guilderland capped the best week Bethlehem has had this season. The Eagles ended a two-game losing streak with a 52-48 home victory against Ballston Spa last Tuesday.

"This is definitely going to give us a big boost for the Suburban Council Tournament and hopefully a good seed for Sectionals," Burke said.

Meanwhile, the Dutchmen are searching for answers after losing two of their last three games and dealing with early deficits during that stretch — even in last Tuesday's 66-38 victory over winless Mohonasen.

"I think the guys felt going into the season like they were going to be the team to beat," Osinski said. "Now, they're realizing that other teams are bringing their 'A' games when they play us."

Bethlehem and Guilderland are off until Friday because of midterm exams week. Bethlehem travels to Blue Division co-leader Shaker, while Guilderland meets Saratoga.

with Abbey Farbstein
COLDWELL BANKER PRIME PROPERTIES

Accessories that appeal to Home Buyers

When preparing your home to sell, you can enhance the environment by purchasing some attractive home accessories, using them to stage the sale, then packing them up to enjoy in your new home.

Create the look of luxury in your living room or great room with silk pillows and a soft cashmere throw on the couch. An ottoman suggests "come home and put your feet up." Place a high-backed armchair next to a side table with an adjustable reading lamp and a tea tray, suggesting the pleasure of curling up with a good book. Place a down comforter with an attractive duvet cover and piles of pillows in the master bedroom. A silver carafe of water with a crystal glass is an elegant touch for the bedside table. Evoke the pleasure of pampering by filling your bathrooms with aromatic soaps, scented candles and bowls of potpourri. Cover a heated towel rack with soft egyptian cotton bath towels. Bath pillows and a dressing stool are additional small touches of luxury. Place bouquets of fresh flowers in every room in simple, tasteful vases that complement the décor.

With a little planning and the right accessories, your home will be irresistible!

Hockey club continues to grow in Bethlehem

By ROB JONAS

This is part of a continuing series of stories about community sports programs in Bethlehem.

The Bethlehem Youth Hockey program nearly had to leave the town it serves. When the Bethlehem Ice Group (BIG) Arena was put up for sale last spring, there was concern that the two ice rinks would be melted for good and that programs such as Bethlehem Youth Hockey would have to find new homes in existing arenas that were already crowded with other Capital District clubs.

"We were disappointed," Bethlehem Youth Hockey president Bob Lane said. "Last season went very well for us, and we were aware of the financial problems the arena had."

Fortunately for the 6-year-old Bethlehem Youth Hockey program and the other clubs that used the BIG Arena, the Capital District YMCA came to their rescue. The local YMCA chapter bought the complex and kept one of the two ice sheets open — choosing to melt the other to make way for a gym and a swimming pool.

The drop in the number of available ice rinks at the former BIG Arena (now known as the Bethlehem Area YMCA or BAY) has not hindered the town's youth hockey program. Though team practice times have been shifted around due to the 50-percent cut in available ice, Lane said everything has worked out.

"We're thrilled with the way the Y has run the arena," said Lane. "I think with their help, this season has gone as smoothly as it has."

The emergence of Bethlehem Youth Hockey is tied directly with the construction of the BIG Arena. Before the Delaware Avenue complex was opened in 1998, the town had some youth travel teams, but not a full-fledged program.

"There were a group of people — Frank Murray and others — who played in other programs, and they felt that Bethlehem was a community that could support (a youth hockey club)," Lane said.

The key was building an ice rink in Bethlehem. With several region-wide clubs occupying rink time at other facilities in Albany County — the county rink in Colonie and Albany Academy's field house — the founding members of Bethlehem Youth Hockey felt the program needed its own facility.

"That really allowed the program to blossom as it did, and that group of people was largely responsible for getting the BIG Arena built," Lane said.

Today, Bethlehem Youth Hockey has approximately 215 children from the town and outlying communities such as Guilford, Voorheesville and Ravena playing in 12 travel teams from the mite (7- to 8-year-olds) to the midget (15-17) divisions. Additionally, the club started a learn-to-play program this season.

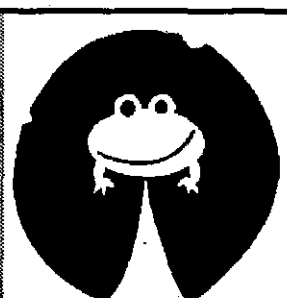

"I think we have a very good philosophy," Lane said. "Hockey gets a bad reputation sometimes, but we emphasize that hockey is a great team game that is a lot of fun."

Tryouts are held every September, and the season lasts from October through March.

Cracked Tooth Syndrome

Cracked tooth syndrome is a condition that may take time to diagnose. The reason many people may walk around with this condition without seeking treatment is due to their ability to overcompensate for the discomfort, or even ignore the sporadic twinges of pain.

A tooth may crack from chewing on hard objects, clenching and grinding, or if trauma has occurred to a tooth. Cracked tooth syndrome is common when a loose filling weakens a tooth.

A tooth that has had a root canal and has not been crowned can also be susceptible to a crack.

A cracked tooth is treated based on the size and location of the crack. Treatment varies from bonding to root canal, and in extreme cases the tooth may need to be extracted. So the next time you feel a sharp pain when you bite on something hard, do not chew on the other side, call your dentist for an exam.

CALENDARS ♦ ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Two married actors, Meta Wolff (Laurie O'Brien), whose grandfather was Jewish, and Aryan Oskar Weiss (Norbert Weissner), are caught between their love for one another and love of their country when Hitler begins his rise to power in the 1930s in "Times Like These" written and directed by John O. Keefe.

Oskar Weiss (Norbert Weissner), applauds his wife Meta Wolff (Laurie O'Brien) great success and acceptance as a star just before Hitler and the Nazis begin their quest for power in the early 1930s.

Cap Rep opens two politically minded plays

By ARTHUR LENNIG

Political issues are always with us, often too much so. On stage they can be dreary and preachy, but this is not the case at Capital Rep where for the next month two plays will be offered in rotation, Times Like These and A Walk in the Woods. One deals with pre-war Nazis, the other with post-war Russians. Both are — hard to believe — entertaining and extremely well acted.

Times Like These is a two character play dealing with a married couple during the 1930s in Berlin. The wife is a gifted and famous actress, a star of the German theater. Flamboyant and aggressive, she coaches her less talented husband who seems doomed to unimportant roles. But their positions will be changed by Herr Hitler when he becomes Der Fuehrer. The woman has no religion—"I'm an actress!"—but she has a Jewish grandparent and therefore is banned from her profession, whereas her husband—a pure Aryan—now succeeds. In several dozen vignettes, we witness how their relationship changes to the outer world and to each other.

Skillful, indeed, is the playwright's ability to create within one room and with just two players the dramatic transformation of an entire nation known for its culture into a barbaric realm beset by storm troopers and prejudice. Despite the superb acting, the first act runs about 10 minutes too long and some judicious pruning would make it even more effective.

The second half of the play is more problematical, but is so energized by the acting and the drama of actual historical events that the viewer accepts some of the playwright's deficiencies. The wife lets out her frustration at being banned from her profession by urging her husband to make his role as Hamlet into a protest against the Nazi regime. Orson Welles staged Shakespeare's Julius Caesar back in the 1930s in modern day fascist costumes, but it is a bit of a stretch to convert Hamlet into a political document. The ideas may be a bit shaky, but in the theater one tends to accept this Hamlet-Aryan-storm trooper concept without questioning the author's facile comparisons. The play moves engagingly on and is such a lively drama and so emotionally powerful that it is not as grim as the subject could be.

Some lines take on additional meaning for they can be applied to our present situation in Iraq, but actually all plays dealing with political matters to some extent light up contemporary issues. Individuals and countries may change, but good political drama always pertains to the nightly news.

One complaint could be the set. It is supposed to be an opulent apartment furnished in art-deco modern style worthy of a leading actress, but it looks more like a slightly run-down Greenwich Village dig badly furnished and shabbily decorated. The pea-green radio is a particular horror!

The second play, A Walk in the Woods, with delightful lines that could have stemmed from George Bernard Shaw, traces the conversations between two negotiators trying to sign a disarmament treaty in Geneva. One is a cynical, charming Russian with an odd sense of humor and the other a dedicated and idealistic American who is trying in his earnest way to save the world from nuclear disaster.

Despite the serious issues — one thinks here of the grotesque film about Dr. Strangelove — the play is in fact a comedy. The realistic Russian points out that as soon as they agree on some aspect, the scientists on either side think up new weapons, so that the negotiations are always one step behind and thus are always fruitless.

Both plays received standing ovations—perhaps all too common today—but in this case these performers deserved the accolade.

The two dramas will run in rotation. Call Cap Rep box office at 445-SHOW (445-7469) or visit www.capitalrep.org for dates.

Regular performance times are 7:30 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday; 8 p.m. Friday; 8:30 p.m. Saturday and 2:30 p.m. Sunday. Ticket prices range from $31 to $39.

Transplants

lymphoblastic leukemia, or ALL. Shania's mother characterizes her daughter as an avid outdoorsy girl who loves animals, softball and hiking.

The two mothers were paired up through the clinic at Albany Medical Center a couple of months ago and have joined forces to find marrow matches for their children.

Anthony Hill, who attends Berne-Knox-Westerlo Central Schools, found a match among the 5 million people in the marrow bank, but tests later showed Anthony Hill's match to be suffering from his own health problems.

"Something was seriously wrong with him, so it's actually a good thing," Jackie Hill said. "He was able to get his own help, which he needed."

"I just need to get 5 million more people in there," she said. Anthony Hill underwent chemotherapy and two weeks of radiation, sending him into remission for three months, Jackie Hill said, until he found out this summer around his birthday that, "It was back."

Anthony Hill then went through another eight months of chemotherapy, ended up having his appendix removed and then another 10 days of radiation.

Shania was first diagnosed in 2001 as having rheumatoid arthritis, her mother said, which led to steroid treatment, chemotherapy and a false remission.

"When they diagnosed the cancer, she had already undergone chemotherapy, and we knew there was less of a chance of it staying in remission," Clark said.

Clark said she and Shania and the rest of the family were surprised when the cancer came back, because "she had been doing so well."

Shania needs a bone marrow transplant. Clark said family members have been tested, but no match has been found. Clark said she has not looked in the database for a match for Shania.

According to the National Marrow Donor Program, which provides marrow and blood stem cell transplants for leukemia patients and others, 30 percent of those suffering from those diseases which require a stem cell transplant will find a match in their families. The other 70 percent will have to look for an unrelated donor.

"She's been kind of down in the dumps," Clark said of Shania, who has been keeping in touch with friends from school through notes and e-mail. "I think she's had kind of a turnaround this weekend, though."

This past weekend was Shania's first home visit in about three weeks, Clark said. Meanwhile, the Hill family is suffering from chapped hands, Jackie Hill said, because of all the sanitizer and anti-bacterial soap the family's been going through lately, to minimize the amount of germs brought into the house. When one of Anthony Hill's sisters comes down with a cold, she either sleeps with a mask over her face or is sent to her grandmother's house, Jackie Hill said.

Doctors tried to harvest

Anthony Hill's own stem cells to fashion a cure for him, but it didn't take.

Anthony Hill hasn't been attending school, Jackie Hill said, which he misses.

"There's too many germs, it's too risky. He doesn't feel good," Jackie Hill said.

He did go to school the first few days of this year, but then came down with pneumonia. "We're fighters, he's a fighter," Jackie Hill said of her son. "He's very positive, very well-liked. It's just so good to hear him laugh." Rain or shine, barring any sudden sickness, both families will be at the marrow drive, where the American Red Cross will take two small vials of blood from each participant to put into the national database. Participants will have to sign a medical consent form to be in the database. Jackie Hill encourages anyone between the ages of 18 and 60 who is in generally good health to attend the bone marrow blood drive. The drive will be held at Delmar Reformed Church, 386 Delaware Ave. in Delmar, on Saturday, Feb. 5, from 11 a.m. until 3 p.m. The test costs $65, though Jackie Hill said she's making efforts to defray the cost for those who cannot afford it. Another drive is likely, Clark said, perhaps closer to Shania's home.

Anyone with questions can call Cheryl Udell at 439-3786 during the day or Bev Hannay at 797-3575 in the evening.

Sketchy

A community health and safety plan will be developed with community input, King said, under the direction of EPA, Department of Environmental Conservation, state Department of Health and GE officials.

That plan will outline standard levels for odor, noise and air emissions, as well as define protocol for any spills or other incidents that happen. King called the standards already in place "restrictive."

The stretch of river near the Bethlehem site is a known breeding ground for short-nosed sturgeon. The site itself lies in a 100-year floodplain. But EPA officials point to access to two rail lines, and the site's location below the Federal Dam as a suitable means to an end. The position below Troy means the site is capable of handling deep water, or ocean-going barges, which, if ultimately decided on as a method of transfer, can carry significantly more tonnage than other barges.

EPA officials were pleased with the turnout; previous informational meetings this year when Bethlehem's site stayed in the running as others were withdrawn, drew sparse crowds at best. Wednesday's turnout included county legislators and local business people whose businesses abut the OG Real Estate site.

Cathy Barber, of Port Welding, Inc., said her business is within 100 feet of the site. "It scares the heck out of me," said Barber, who has offered her business site as a monitoring site for the project.

Rosales attributed the increased community interest to the certainty that the site is one of two to be part of the dredging project.
