Stepping up the fight

Schools aim to prevent reactions to food allergies before they happen

By ROBERT IRWIN
irwin@spotlightnews.com

Recent studies that have shown food allergies in children to be on the rise have school districts, politicians and parents working to ensure the safety of children who might have potentially dangerous reactions to everyday foods.

In a report from the non-profit Food Allergy and Anaphylaxis Network, or FAAN, it was noted that little progress has been made in effectively preventing and treating food allergies over the past five years.

A December 2003 study of "The Journal of Allergy and Clinical Immunology" showed the number of children with reported peanut allergies had doubled between 1997 and 2002.

Those numbers have politicians and school officials looking at ways to prevent food allergy reactions in school-age children before they arise.

Several thousand mourners, including a large contingent of New York State Troopers, were expected to be in Bethlehem at 11 a.m. Wednesday, May 2, for the funeral of fallen trooper David C. Brinkerhoff at the Bethlehem Lutheran Church.

Brinkerhoff was killed Wednesday, April 25, outside a farmhouse in Margaretville, Delaware County, while searching for 23-year-old shooting suspect Travis D. Trim. Trim was hiding out in the secluded property after shooting another state trooper, Matthew Gombosi, the day before.

Local Bruegger's updates spread

Delmar bakery's new look invites patrons to stay awhile

By JIM CUOZZO
cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

The 16-year-old Delmar Bruegger's Bakery has a new interior look.

A spokeswoman for Flour City Bagels, a franchise of Bruegger's Bakeries, said she believes the new decor will make the cafe experience more pleasurable for customers.

The Bruegger's at 19 Clifton Country Road in Clifton Park has also been redecorated in the same style as the Delmar one.

"Delmar and Clifton Park Bruegger's have been updated to appeal to patrons that enjoy lingering in the bakery's dining area during their meal," said Manuela Eckert, director of marketing for Flour City Bagels. "These areas are where we are successful, and for Delmar it made sense because we leased the space next door."

The added space is decorated with farm-style decor and features overstuffed chairs and wireless Internet access. The new look also includes softer colors, new countertops and an added entrance vestibule, eliminating cold drafts in the winter and hot summer weather.

"It's bright and airy," said George Wuttke, Bruegger's area manager, who said the Delmar location has been a good one for the company.

"The change was made because it was time to update it," Wuttke added. "The store needed a fresh look, and it certainly got that."

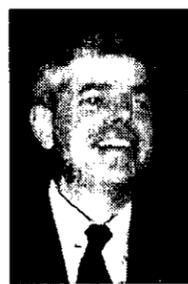

Wuttke said the wireless Internet access also encourages a more casual atmosphere.

Bruegger's started in Troy 20 years ago. The company now has 260 locations throughout the country, including some in California. Hot Restaurant Group owns and operates Flour City Bagels, LLC, which is the largest franchisee of Bruegger's Enterprises in the country, with 34 Bruegger's Bakeries in Albany, Rochester and Syracuse.

Supervisor jumps right in

Cunningham's first weeks keep him on his toes

By JIM CUOZZO
cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

"It's been very busy. I'm really enjoying the job."
Jack Cunningham

Jack Cunningham's first two weeks as Bethlehem supervisor have been anything but boring. He has faced water breaks, flooded basements, updates on the Vista Technology Park, Route 85 roadwork and last-minute arrangements regarding the funeral of a fallen state trooper.

"It's been very busy," said Cunningham. "I'm really enjoying the job."

Cunningham, a former Albany County legislator, replaced Theresa Egan as supervisor April 12. Since then he has been working to provide a seamless transition in leadership for the town.

"I spent about 10 hours with Terri prior to taking over," said Cunningham. "Most of the projects she was working on I was familiar with."

Cunningham said every day brings a new experience as supervisor.

"Something different is coming at you all the time," said Cunningham.

The range of issues in the course of one day can relate to personnel, finance, public safety or just resident complaints over town services. "Last night I didn't get home until after 10 p.m.," said Cunningham inside his new office at town hall on a recent Friday morning.

Attending an Arbor Day ceremony at Maple Ridge Park, meeting with public works director Oliver Holmes, and heading to Colonial Acres Golf Course for an update on the acquisition of the property were all on Cunningham's agenda that day.

And that was one of the quieter days.

"Friday's schedule is a little bit lighter," said Cunningham.

Cunningham is the interim supervisor until the end of the year. The seat will be up for election in November, when Cunningham will be running against at least two, if not three, other candidates.

"It was always my intention to run for this office when Terri decided not to run," said Cunningham.

Cunningham said he has a strong campaign team which supported his runs in the past, including town board member Kyle Kotary, Mark Levine and Mark Hennessey.

One of the pressing issues the new town supervisor faces is the area's growing infrastructure needs, including improvements to the water and sewer lines, along with the need for more space.

"How we are going to address those issues is going to be a challenge," said Cunningham.

Cunningham recalled a recent conversation with past supervisor Ken Ringler.

"He said, 'You have the best job in the world,'" Cunningham said.

Panel to review comprehensive plan success

Committee to see what past two years have brought

By JIM CUOZZO
cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

The town of Bethlehem is establishing an oversight committee as the two-year anniversary of the adoption of the comprehensive plan nears.

In August, the town will mark the anniversary of the plan, and Economic Development Director George Leveille said the executive summary calls for formation of an oversight committee that will review adherence to the plan.

The suggested makeup of the committee would include the town supervisor, director and executive director of economic development, the town engineer, highway superintendent, public works commissioner, parks administrator, planning board chair, zoning board of appeals chair, and a town board representative.

Board member JoAnn

Dawson asked the board to appoint two members from the public.

"I would add at least two more positions to this list that would allow for public participation," said Dawson.

The town board unanimously approved the recommendation at the Wednesday, April 25, meeting.

Leveille said the committee will meet over a four-month period and prepare a preliminary mission statement and implementation plan that will be presented to the board for approval.

"We think we will start with what actions have or have not been taken to date."

Board member Dan Plummer

said the new comprehensive plan was needed and has been so far successful.

"It seems to have resulted in better management of town development, and that's helped," said Plummer.

One of the first items implemented two years ago when the plan was approved included a temporary six-month moratorium on any new development.

"From the 1980s to early 2000, the town grew. It was constant and almost seemed unchecked," said Plummer.

Plummer said previous town boards tried to form a comprehensive plan, but it did not receive approval until former Supervisor Theresa Egan took over.

"It was clear the community was screaming for this when Terri became supervisor," Plummer said.

Leveille wrote that the new committee would create what he called a "blueprint for action." One of those actions could possibly include a partnership with the Albany County Land Conservancy to initiate development of a greenway recreational trail network.

Meetings of the newly formed oversight committee will take place from May through July and draft recommendations for consideration by the board will be held in July. A final report is expected to be prepared and published by late August or early September.

New phone features produce frazzled feeling

By Robin Shrager Suitor
news@spotlightnews.com

Last year a salesman rang my front door bell. He wanted to talk to me about getting a new phone service. I didn't really know or care much about what he was talking about. I was on my way out. I told the man I was not interested.

Then the man named one of my neighbors and told me they already had the service. He must have thought this revelation was going to incite in me some sort of "keeping up with the Joneses" (not the neighbor's real name) desire to install it. It didn't.

"I'm happy with my phone service as is," I told the man, knowing vaguely that whatever he was selling had something to do with the phones.

Many months later, my husband and I realized we were paying a ridiculous sum for long-distance service we rarely used because we used our cell phone. This led my husband to research telephone service options, which led him to the service we'd been offered.

I remember the day the new service was installed. The phone rang during our frantic morning routine. Who could be calling while we were trying to get off to work?

"It's the phone company," said my daughter, handing the cordless phone into the bathroom.

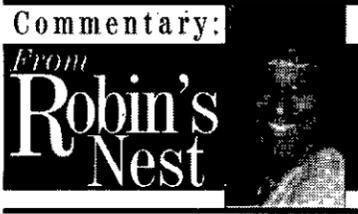

"We're on our way to install the (phone service)," said the man from the phone company.

"You're on your way?" I asked, wishing my daughter had passed the cordless phone into the upstairs bathroom where her dad was shaving. I had an idea that he was behind this installation. I wondered if it would prevent people from calling while I was in the bathroom.

I found my way upstairs where we had our first new phone service skirmish.

"The phone company is coming in 15 minutes," I reported curtly to my husband.

"They told me they'd be coming after 9," he said.

I explained that they must have changed their minds. I clearly heard, "15 minutes" even over our old line.

It was school break week and Jeff was supposed to be dropping off our daughter at a program downtown. I was supposed to be getting to work on time. But now he had to be home for the phone company. I was going to have to take care of the drop-off.

Our second phone service skirmish was about "call waiting," a bonus feature that came "free" with the new service.

I don't care for call waiting. First off, the name is misleading. It should be referred to as "call interruption."

With call waiting, you can toggle back and forth between two calls. It works as follows: While you are on the first call a second call comes in. You hear a beep or a click and you can switch over to the second call and say, "Hi. I'm on another call," and then switch back to the first call.

The original way to tell people you were already on the phone was via an automated feature called the busy signal.

I understand the value of call waiting, but as an adult I just want to be able to finish a conversation uninterrupted. I only want to talk to one person at a time. I don't want to toggle back and forth between two calls.

My parents got call waiting when I was a teenager because I was always talking on the phone. The few people who might have tried to call my parents, such as my older siblings or other relatives, would only get busy signals. Mom and Dad thought call waiting would fix this problem.

However, teenagers don't want to interrupt their conversations to answer calls from people other than their friends. When I was a teenager I would often forget to tell my parents that someone "beeped in." Worse yet, sometimes I would switch over to the new call and tell the person to hold on. Then I'd switch back intending to say goodbye to my friend, but then my friend would say she had "one more thing to tell me." I'd completely forget about the other person.

When we paid by the minute we were more efficient about our calls. We didn't waste time on the phone. We had to choose our words carefully. We had to break off and say goodbye for things like food and sleep.

If I was on the phone with my sister, she would refuse to be put on hold if a second call came in. She'd say, "No, I'm not hanging on, I'm hanging up if you're switching to the other call." As a teenager it was difficult to ignore the incoming call and face the possibility of missing news from a friend.

Of course, that was before caller ID. Now you know who is calling before you even answer the phone. Now you can decide who is worthy of interrupting your dinner or making you late when you are on the way out the door.

Some phones not only display a caller's name and telephone number, but also have computerized voices that will say the name. It's like having an automated servant announce who is calling.

I wonder if there's a way to shout back at the phone "We're eating dinner now, please call again later" and have the automated voice relay the message to the caller.

In our house the automated servant is called an answering machine. Amazingly this machine allows you to hear the caller's voice.

We only use the machine to screen out telemarketers (who usually just hang up on the machine) or to record calls while we are eating dinner.

Sometimes my parents will leave a message that begins with "If you're there, pick up the phone." Well, obviously we can't pick up the phone if we're NOT there. I feel bad that my parents think I would screen out their calls. I would feel much too guilty to screen out my parents.

When I was younger, I tied up their phone line, neglected to give them their messages, and ran up their bills by calling out-of-town friends. And I don't remember feeling terribly guilty about that.

I do remember trying to make the long distance calls when the rates went down. In those days we paid by the minute. I'd call the operator and ask for the rates to the area code I was calling. The operator would give the information, such as "26 cents for the first minute and 14 cents for each additional minute."

When we paid by the minute

we were more efficient about our calls. We didn't waste time on the phone. We had to choose our words carefully. We had to break off and say goodbye for things like food and sleep.

My new plan includes unlimited long distance. You pay a bunch of money up front instead of getting billed later by the minute. Somehow this worked out to be less expensive than the plan where I paid by the minute even though I didn't use any minutes.

Unfortunately this "savings" was offset by the fact that the Internet connection over the fiber line initially failed a lot. This led to our third phone service skirmish.

"We should've found out if the Joneses were satisfied with their FiOS connections," I told my husband.

Again the phone rang early one weekday morning. This time I knew it was the phone company. They came over and fixed the Internet connection issue. We all breathed a sigh of relief.

On the other hand, maybe having less access to e-mail was a blessing in disguise. After all, without the Internet access we would have had the time to make all those unlimited long-distance calls.

IN BRIEF

State museum plans family fun weekend

Joan Steiner's "Look-Alikes" book series will be the theme of the state museum's next Family Fun Weekend, Saturday, May 5 and Sunday, May 6.

Family Fun Weekend takes place from 1 to 4 p.m. both days. Free activities are held mostly in Bird Hall on the museum's first floor.

The program coincides with the opening on Saturday, May 5 of Steiner's new exhibition at the state museum, "Look-Alikes: The Amazing World of Joan Steiner." A Hudson artist, Steiner uses everyday objects to create three-dimensional dioramas in which the objects themselves become hidden. Her books "Look-Alikes," invite readers to locate familiar items — a pretzel, coin or zipper — from within the scenes she creates of a park, ice cream shop or zoo.

At 1 p.m. Saturday, Steiner will present a 30-minute slide show in South Hall and will be available to greet visitors after that. At 2 p.m. Saturday, Lou Pollack, a designer-illustrator from Bearsville, will talk and demonstrate how to make a picture book. Children will be able to make their own book to take home.

Throughout the day on Sunday artists represented by "The Bad as Art Gallery," based in Albany, will present an interactive illustration workshop. Participating Albany-area artists include Dave Geurin, Heidi Weinman, Lisa McLain, Stephen Mead and Marcus K. Anderson.

Throughout the afternoon on Saturday and Sunday, visitors will be able to make their own "Look-Alike" picture collage by choosing from hundreds of pictures from magazines. They can also make a craft straight from Steiner's "Look-Alike" books, use lollipops and Bugle snacks to create an elf and participate in a "Look-Alike" scavenger hunt and win a prize. Family Fun activity packets also will be distributed.

The museum is at the Empire State Plaza on Madison Avenue in Albany. For more information about museum programs and events, call 474-5877 or visit the museum Web site at www.nysm.nysed.gov.

Growing pains are worth it

Our commutes feel a little slower these days, as state Department of Transportation crews repair and rebuild roads and bridges throughout the Capital District.

All that construction tests our tempers. We tailgate, toot horns and compulsively check timepieces as we wait for the traffic to move. We fret about being late for work, late to pick up the kids, or late for the start of the movie.

At another level, perhaps we are fretting about the future of the towns we call home.

Two memories seem common to anyone over the age of 21: It snowed more when we were children, and there was less traffic on the roads.

Some recall an era when everything happened at the local level, whether it was buying groceries, clothing or going to the movies. Others remember when getting into the malls didn't require a special turn lane.

But the area has grown, and we need it to grow a little more. Government and private businesses have invested a lot of time and money into creating Tech Valley; having a source of good and well-paying jobs from high tech industries can only benefit all of us. More jobs will keep young people in the area, and their energy and creativity will keep the Capital District a place where arts and entertainment flourish, and local businesses have a chance to compete against national chains.

Thriving businesses mean a strong tax base, which means good schools, good municipal services, and yes, better roads.

It's encouraging that the residents and elected officials of the towns that make up the Capital District are striving to grow in an attractive manner. Comprehensive plans with zoning that let us retain some of the small-town feel that we all like, abound in the area. That's good, because even as we need growth, we need areas that remain undeveloped, too.

So as you sit impatiently in your car waiting for work crews to finish their tasks, remember that they're helping to build the good old days for all of us.

Cultures don't have to clash

By SUSAN S. CHEUNG
news@spotlightnews.com

The writer is a transplant from London, England, via a short spell in Florida. She lives in Guilderland with her family and is currently on a career break to raise two young children.

Look around your neighborhood and I bet you will have seen some new faces and heard different, non-American accents over the past few years. The population of the Capital District is slowly becoming more diverse and multicultural.

I live in Guilderland, and I have neighbors from India, China and Cyprus. According to the Census 2000 demographic profile of my ZIP code, 12 percent of the people surveyed are foreign born and 15.5 percent speak a language other than English at home. My friends in the Capital District include people from Sri Lanka, St. Kitts, England and South Korea. I say hooray for this influx! Why? Because, I am one of the foreigners.

I have often wondered how the people I have met from all corners of the world ended up here in the Capital District. I guess my own odyssey serves as an example. I immigrated to the United States for love because my husband (a fellow British Chinese person) was offered a job in Albany after his postdoctoral stint in Florida. I responded by saying: "Where the heck is Albany?" immediately followed by some frantic Googling. (Forgive me, but my knowledge of U.S. geography at this point was limited, and I was hesitant about moving to a smaller place, coming from the metropolis of London, England.)

Up to that moment, I had a stereotypical image of America gleaned from television and movies. I remember sitting in the food court at a mall in Florida staring at my large plate of food and feeling very American.

Point of View

My education into all things American began in earnest when we came to Albany. When you settle in another country, it is as if you are a child again, learning and stumbling through your day-to-day existence.

Consider all the layers of daily life — from writing a check to mailing a letter — things that are second nature to you but, now, presented as something alien. Imagine what it would be like if you had to relearn everything. From doing battle with your health insurance company, when you are used to a universal health-care system, to learning about the education system when you grew up in a school system where sixth grade is called the first year of secondary school.

All the while, you have to remember to slow down your speech when making inquiries, knowing that you will have to repeat yourself, and anticipating the look of surprise as people hear the British accent come out of your mouth.

Many moments are etched in my memory as I recall the initial shock of adjusting to life here in the United States.

Grocery shopping was certainly an adventure for me. Everything seemed bigger over here, and there were more choices — I remember being overwhelmed by the sheer amount and endless variety of cereal on offer. I would hang around the customer service desk seeking a translation for the produce I needed. We may as well be speaking another language when I have to substitute zucchini for courgette, eggplant for aubergine and heavy cream for double cream.

Although we are supposed to share a common language, The Queen's English and American English have many differences, which can lead to misunderstandings.

The line: "You like tomato and I like tomahto" from the Cole Porter song "Let's Call the Whole Thing Off" sums it up for me. I am reminded of a meeting at work where it was agreed to table a proposal. I was confused when we came to the end of the meeting and the proposal had not been raised. You see, in the United Kingdom, "to table something" means that you are putting forward an item for discussion.

As if it wasn't daunting enough for me to acclimate to a different work culture, getting to my new workplace in Troy was an even more daunting prospect. Until I came to America, it was normal for me to use public transportation, having lived in a city all my life. For most of my working life I had ridden a subway train (called the tube) into work. I presumed I would be able to use the bus system here. However, I became frustrated with the inaccessibility of bus routes, which required three changes of buses for me to get to work. People were surprised that I didn't drive, and I felt like a second-class citizen. Finally, after I plucked up the courage to drive on what was for me the wrong side of the road, I took all the routes that did not require left turns, unless there were traffic lights!

Undoubtedly, the hardest thing for me about moving to another country was the separation from family and friends. Right from the start, it became important for me to create a network of friends and contacts. However, meeting new friends was a hit-and-miss process. I would sit in Starbucks and smile at people in the hopes that they would talk to me. Slowly, I connected with people and made plans to socialize with them.

As in many cultures, going out to eat is a customary way to socialize. Yet, I found this to be intimidating. The first time I went to a diner I thought my head would explode, as my server spoke too fast and presented me with too many choices: How would I like my eggs? Scrambled, sunny-side up, over easy. ... What sort of bread would I like? White, wheat, rye. ...

There is one thing about eating out in America that irritates me and that is being given the check before I have finished my meal. In Europe, it is extremely rude for a waiter to place the check in front of you unless you asked for it first.

Now, I have a wonderful group of friends and, in the interest of cultivating cultural awareness, I have confounded them with conversions of American measures to the metric system. They have experienced an English tea party and eaten homemade, traditional Chinese food at a Chinese New Year party.

All new immigrants experience degrees of homesickness. You miss your family and friends, and reminisce about familiar things — for me, it is the British sense of humor, the media and chocolate. Adjusting to life in a new country requires moving beyond the homesickness toward acceptance of your new situation. You rise to each challenge and look for the opportunities.

Perhaps I am no different than earlier immigrants who came to this country looking for their American dream. I am creating a path for my children, who are American citizens. Despite the present geopolitical conflicts, I believe the world is getting smaller, and we can learn from one another's diversity. Please do me a favor, the next time you see your new neighbor, stop and say hello. Start a conversation, and you might be pleasantly surprised with how much you have in common.

School board works hard to create a good budget for all

Editor, The Spotlight:

This letter is in response to Mr. Robert Livreri's letter in The Spotlight's April 25 issue urging the defeat of the proposed 2007-08 Bethlehem Central School District budget in the upcoming May 15 vote.

It was my privilege to serve on the Bethlehem school board from 1971 to 1981. Every year, the board worked hard (as I am sure the present board does) over several months to prepare a budget fair to our students, the staff and the taxpayer. Whenever, at our public meetings, somebody would say that the board was not properly concerned with the burdens of the taxpayers, I would respond by saying that when he/she was looking at the board he/she was looking at seven taxpayers, that any tax increase would affect board members like all other taxpayers.

Mr. Livreri mentions tax abatements, granted to some businesses. The school board has no involvement in or control over these abatements, which do NOT apply to school taxes. Similarly, the board has no control over pension costs. Every year the state tells the district what it has to pay for pensions in the ensuing school year. And, unlike private businesses that can decide whether to absorb or pass on increases in health insurance costs, public agencies do not have this option. They have to pass these costs on to taxpayers.

Our responsibility as residents and taxpayers is to provide our children with a good education, whether our own children are in the schools or not (as ours have not been for almost 30 years). And a good school system, making ours a desirable community, maintains the value of our homes.

Therefore, I strongly urge our community to support the proposed school budget on May 15.

Teacher made a difference for all of school's students

Editor, The Spotlight:

I am writing this letter to the family, friends and colleagues of Jeremy Klugman. I knew Mr. Klugman as a coach, a teacher and as an advocate for my children in the Bethlehem Central School District.

I was driving by the middle school recently and I was sad for all of us in this community over his life ending.

He will be missed by the students he cared about and the parents who trusted him.

As a parent of six children, you learn about the teachers by what your own children say about a teacher. Not only was "Coach" loved by his team and students, but he was respected.

He will be missed, as he showed a genuine concern for all. To his family and his children - we are so sorry for your loss and for our loss in this community.

Coach Klugman made a difference in our lives. Peace.

Bierman has the right experience

Editor, The Spotlight:

I would like to encourage people to vote for Laura Bierman for the Bethlehem school board. She is an extraordinary individual with a history of service to the community. I served on the board of the Albany County League of Women Voters when she was president. Laura is bright, dedicated, hardworking and committed to her family and the community.

Her master's in public administration and her enormous amount of community service in groups like Tri-Village Nursery School, Bethlehem Opportunities Unlimited, the school budget advisory committee and the PTA, would make her an outstanding member of the board of education.

She brings the experience of serving on a school board in a different location. I cannot speak highly enough about Laura and the wisdom and good sense she would bring to the Bethlehem school board.

Parent thinks Bierman is the best candidate

Editor, The Spotlight:

I met Laura Bierman 17 years ago when our kids were small and even then, while her first priority was her children, she was always compelled to give back to her community whether through PTA, Bethlehem Opportunities Unlimited, as president of the League of Women Voters in Albany County, or president of the Tri-Village Nursery School Board.

I was thrilled when Laura announced her candidacy for the open seat on the school board. Laura is a very committed and dedicated person, both to her family and the organizations in which she is involved. Laura has a commitment to children and education evidenced by her service of eight years on the school board in Glenville, Ill., including two years as vice president, and her involvement in many volunteer organizations.

Her resume is impressive but more importantly, Laura is the real deal.

She will work tirelessly for what is best for our children and schools. I intend to vote for Laura Bierman on May 15. She will be a great asset to our school board.

Spotlight Newspapers starts Milton edition

Newest paper to focus on town in Saratoga County

By CARI SCRIBNER
scribnerc@spotlightnews.com

Spotlight Newspapers proudly announces the arrival of the newest family member, The Milton Spotlight, which makes its debut this week in the Saratoga County town of Milton.

John McIntyre, vice president of Spotlight Newspapers, said the expansion into the town is a natural extension of the comprehensive local coverage offered by the existing 11 Spotlight editions.

"We've covered so many towns and villages around the town of Milton, and the time has arrived for us to take our town-by-town approach north to Milton," said McIntyre. "The area is growing so quickly; there's so much change and potential for the future. Every town should have a news source to shape its identity and let people know what's going on."

Spotlight Newspapers is a chain of weekly newspapers that cover the suburban communities in the Capital District. That market features a high percentage of homeowners who seek coverage of their communities, their school districts and their neighborhoods.

Spotlight Newspaper's online news service, www.spotlightnews.com, offers up-to-the-minute coverage on the stories affecting suburban families, including updates on schools, town budgets, local political candidates, and feature stories. On the Web site, there are also blogs on topics ranging from parenthood to theater to nightlife. Also on the Web site are comprehensive classifieds for vehicles, employment, real estate, services and more.

"We continue to cover the news that matters the most to families," said Editor in Chief Katherine McCarthy. "That means we keep a close eye on school districts, budgets, events and local government. These are stories our readers count on us to give them."

Advertising Director William Kellert said he makes it his business to immerse himself and his staff in the hustle and bustle of each Spotlight coverage area. Kellert said he's looking forward to getting the buzz from members of the Milton businesses community.

"We're all about local news, and we'll deliver to people the information they need about what's going on around town," said Kellert. "From an advertising and marketing perspective, The Milton Spotlight will be an excellent resource for businesses to get their name out there."

Spotlight newspapers remain in the home for the entire week and are read at the reader's convenience. Advertising in Spotlight Newspapers generates reader response all week long and Spotlight Newspapers provide information available nowhere else. Spotlight Newspapers' local news stays fresh all week long because it has a direct impact on the people who read it.

The Milton Spotlight joins newspapers in the following communities: Bethlehem and New Scotland; Colonie; Loudonville; Guilderland; Niskayuna; Rotterdam; Scotia-Glenville; Clifton Park-Halfmoon; Malta; Burnt Hills; and Saratoga Springs.

Spotlight Newspapers also publishes Capital District Senior Spotlight and Capital District Parent Pages, both distributed monthly.

Voorheesville residents will choose from three candidates

All have been active community volunteers

By ROB IRWIN
irwinr@spotlightnews.com

Three candidates have come forward to run for the one available school board seat left vacant by the retiring Richard Brackett. Whichever candidate is selected by a vote on May 15 will serve a five-year term on the seven-member board.

Thomas Jones
Thomas Jones, a resident of the Voorheesville school district for 18 years, is associate director of information technology services at the University at Albany. He said that this is an appropriate time in his life to run for the five-year term and continue his service to the community. Jones has been a volunteer on the village's parks and recreation board and served as a coach and currently as president of the New Scotland Soccer Club.

Jones has had a daughter and a son go through the district from kindergarten to 12th grade in Voorheesville, and currently has a son in eighth grade.

Jones said there is "no single push-button issue" that compels him to run, but he is dedicated to keeping the Voorheesville school district, as he called it, "the jewel of the community."

"Overall, I think the school district is well run and it's been fantastic to my kids," said Jones. "I would like to keep it that way."

Jones said he would serve the board by being a careful listener.

If elected, said Jones, the budget is one area in particular that he looks forward to being able to work on.

"I think taxes are high," said Jones, and added that he would hope the district would be able to continue to "strike that balance between taxpayer expectation and school priorities."

Jones said that having had two children go through the district and one in the schools would make him a valued member of the board. He also feels the historical perspective that comes with that and having been a member of the community for nearly 20 years would be of assistance to the board.

"I think it's something that's important to my kids as well as to the entire community," said Blow.

Sean Signer

A Voorheesville school district resident for 17 years, Sean Signer would like to use his background in technology to serve the district.

A network engineer for five years at the state health department's Women, Infants and Children Program, Signer has been a state civil servant for 31 years.

"I believe I can make a difference," said Signer, who said one of his goals is to keep Voorheesville students competitive in a global economy that increasingly leans on technology.

"It can't just be math, science and English. My priority is to make sure (children) are getting the best education possible," said Signer. It is his hope, he said, to ensure that Voorheesville children can continue their quality education after high school and move into successful careers. It is the responsibility of the school district, he said, "to make sure (children) have the right tools to do that."

Signer, a father of three, has a fifth-grade son in the district.

Signer said he believes that strong, responsible fiscal management is needed to maintain and increase the quality of education and educational programs in the district. And he added that the school board needs to communicate to the public that to improve the quality of services in the district, taxpayers needs to understand that some programs and measures are going to be expensive.

"You have to be able to explain to the public that it's in their best interest," he said. "By improving the district, you improve the quality of life in the community."

"The taxpayers' dollars are hard-earned and (the money) needs to be spent wisely and appropriately," said Signer, "and all cost savings measures need to be looked at to make that dollar go further."

Timothy Blow

Timothy Blow, a resident of the district since 1990, said he would like to add school board member to his service to the district.

"I think the school board is a natural progression," said Blow.

When he is not working at his job as executive vice president and chief financial officer of Ballston Spa National Bank, Blow said he volunteers as treasurer for the New Salem Fire Department, basketball coach and treasurer for St. Matthews CYO, and also has been involved with Kiwanis Little League and Guiderland Babe Ruth.

Along with his passion for helping kids, Blow said he brings to the board experience and knowledge of finance and budgeting, auditing, internal controls and more. Blow said he could use that knowledge well to serve the board.

"I'm all for improving and keeping the high-quality education Voorheesville provides," said Blow, who has one child in each of the district's three schools.

Blow said in recent years he thinks the focus of the board has been shifted and needs to move back to what's most important in the district.

"I think it's important to keep the focus back on the education of the kids," said Blow.

Blow said that, if elected, he would serve the district as best as he could with the time allotted.

County moves ahead with plans for jail annex

Facility would provide better care to inmates with mental health issues

By GRAHAM S. PARKER
parkerg@spotlightnews.com

Initial steps have been taken to begin work on a $13.5 million annex at the Albany County Correctional Facility.

Albany County Sheriff James Campbell, superintendent of the correctional facility Thomas Wigger and county officials met last week to plan the construction of an estimated 80-bed annex to house mental health inmates and replace four aging trailers. A plan for the annex will be sent out to area contractors May 21.

Thomas Wigger

Money for the annex has been a part of the county's capital project budget since 2005. The county had asked to put the annex on hold because of financial issues. But four suicides at the jail in the past two years and a growing population of inmates who need mental health care spurred the county into action.

"It's the right thing to do," said Campbell. "I'm looking for construction this year. The thing being held over my head is the four trailers. I've got to get them (the inmates) out of there."

Those four trailers were installed in 1989 and were intended to last five to six years. Campbell said the trailers are falling apart and riddled with electric and plumbing problems. The 72-bed trailer annex houses inmates who are allowed to work in and outside of the jail, under supervision.

The new annex will free up space in the jail's general population, allowing those inmates to live in better conditions. It will also move inmates under watch for mental conditions into a state-of-the-art facility that will allow staff to better watch and care for them.

Currently, the mental health wing is a 50-single-cell unit with another constant observation area elsewhere in the jail, said Wigger. Staff of the mental health wing are also located elsewhere in the jail and make routine checks on inmates many times throughout the day.

Inmates in the constant observation section of the jail are routinely exposed to general population inmates and can be subjected to taunting and ridicule, Campbell said.

They are separated in a bank of 25 cells and are under watch with one correctional officer for every four inmates. Depending on the day, the bank of cells can see two to 20 inmates under watch, said Wigger.

Wigger said jail officials would like to see an annex solely serving the mental health inmates. The annex would also be able to keep medical staff readily available and inmates in plain view.

Talks about the annex's design include a facility that provides a 360-degree view of inmates from centrally located correctional staff. That way, inmates will no longer be able to take advantage of the few minutes after officers pass their cells to attempt, and sometimes succeed, in suicide.

What exists at the jail now is not a cohesive mental health program, he said.

AAA offers free passport photos

To make it easier for travelers, AAA Hudson Valley will offer free passport photos for members at its Albany service center from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Saturday, May 5. Each AAA member is limited to one set of passport photos.

The event is part of the club's Member Appreciation Days. The event is free and open to the public. Both members and non-members will be able to participate in member appreciation activities and giveaways.

Passport applications are also available, but the auto club does not process them.

AAA is offering the passport photos because Americans traveling to Canada, Mexico, Bermuda, South America, Central America and the Caribbean by air will need a passport for the first time this summer. The increased demand for passports has delayed processing, and a new passport can take up to 10 weeks to arrive.

AAA Hudson Valley's office is at 618 Delaware Ave. in Albany.

Cunningham later said the board was merely filling a position left vacant by a resignation.

The board unanimously approved a resolution to appoint Robert Leslie of Colonie to the planner position left vacant by Janine Saatman, who resigned in February.

"I am confident Mr. Leslie will contribute significantly to the attainment of the town's planning and development related goals and objectives," wrote Assistant Economic Development Director Mike Morrell in a letter to the town.

Leslie has been a planner for Clough Harbour & Associates since 2003 and received a master's degree in regional planning from the University at Albany.

"With the local waterfront development plan, the Route 9W corridor study, and the New Scotland hamlet area, it seems to me this is a key position we need, and I am supportive of this," said board member Sam Messina.

Jasinski asked Cunningham to change the time of town meetings from 5:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. to accommodate more residents coming home from work. What Jasinski did not know is that Cunningham had prepared a resolution to change the meeting times from 5:30 to 5 p.m. That measure was approved by the full board and will be implemented with the May 23 town meeting to be held at 6 p.m.

Rita DeGonza of Albany was appointed as account clerk to fill a position in the receiver of taxes department. DeGonza's salary is $29,541, and she will assume those duties on May 2.

Cunningham also asked the community to volunteer for regular clean-up days that will be held once a month throughout Bethlehem. The locations and dates for the clean ups will be posted on the town's Web site.

"We will establish sites to be cleaned up, and maybe Bethlehem High School participation in government students can be a part of clean-up day," said Cunningham.

A lengthy discussion regarding work on a proposed map of existing conservation and recreation space in the town was held with representatives of the Citizens Advisory Committee on Conservation. The group was seeking clarification of the task assigned to it.

After six resolutions, one public hearing, two public comment sections and one hour and 20 minutes later, Cunningham's first meeting as supervisor was over.

"Thank you for making my first board meeting relatively easy," Cunningham said.

Board member Dan Plummer said Cunningham will be very accessible to the community.

"I thought he did a great job," Plummer said. "He was very professional and comfortable."

See related story about Cunningham's first week as supervisor, page 3.

rounded the house where Trim was inside.

Preston Felton, acting superintendent of the state police, said, "The medical examination on our deceased trooper, David Brinkerhoff, has revealed two things. First, that he was shot in the chest by a high-caliber round we believe was used by the assailant. This round was stopped by the trooper's protective gear. Second, that the fatal wound to the trooper was made by a .223 tactical round. This round is believed to have been fired by an MRT team member. Sadly Trooper Brinkerhoff appears to have been killed during an extremely intense firefight that occurred inside the Margaretville home."

Bethlehem was chosen as the location for services because Brinkerhoff and his wife lived in Delmar for more than three years and have been members of the local Lutheran Church since 2002. "He lived on Kenwood Avenue and was married in Bethlehem," said town Supervisor Jack Cunningham, who was alerted late Thursday, April 26, that Brinkerhoff's funeral would be in Bethlehem.

"It's been sobering; I can't believe it," Cunningham said of the tragedy that left Brinkerhoff dead. About 8,000 people were expected to attend the funeral, including Gov. Eliot Spitzer, who said there will be a thorough investigation with full disclosure of all facts surrounding Brinkerhoff's death.

"A tragedy occurred, and state police are now investigating the exact circumstances of Trooper Brinkerhoff's death," said Spitzer in a prepared statement.

Brinkerhoff is survived by his wife, Barbara, and his 7-month-old daughter. He and his family had attended services at Bethlehem Lutheran Church the Sunday before his death.

the store for more than 20 years. "I really feel honored because of the people who have been chosen before me."

Marty DeLaney, president of the chamber, said Brookins has pounded the pavement asking businesses to join with her to promote Bethlehem and the Four Corners area with events like the holiday Winter-Fest.

"She was instrumental in keeping that event going," said DeLaney. "It means a lot when someone can stay with something year after year."

Brookins said she is faithful in her efforts to continue to remind people to shop locally.

"It's hard to find volunteers to help, but it's so worth it when you see the number of families who participate in these events," Brookins said.

The chamber named Dr. Robert Herzog Bethlehem's Citizen of the Year. Herzog, a dentist, is owner of Primomo and Herzog in Delmar. He has been recognized for his volunteer efforts, including adopting a highway in Slingerlands, becoming an assistant Scoutmaster for Delmar Troop 58, overseeing Toys for Tots and driving for the Equinox program on Thanksgiving Day.

"Everyone does very good things for the community, but he stood out among the other nominees giving a lot of himself," DeLaney said.

Herzog said it is important for people to volunteer because he believes it makes small communities like Bethlehem better.

"I was definitely honored and surprised," said Herzog of the chamber award.

Herzog, through his dental practice, has also developed a tradition of adopting needy families in the area, providing them with comprehensive dental care at no cost. He and his partner at the dental practice also offer annual scholarships to Bethlehem high school seniors pursuing a health-related field.

Brookins

Herzog

"I am fortunate to be recognized for this," Herzog said.

Jim Spinoso, 94, received the Community Spirit Award.

Spinoso, who works at the Delmar Hannaford, was nominated by several people because of his cheerful, outgoing personality.

"He has a long history in the town, and he is the most positive, upbeat guy you want to meet," said DeLaney. "He has such a positive attitude."

Bill Marinello, manager at the Delmar Hannaford, said he hired Spinoso four years ago and knew Spinoso when he owned Van Allen Farms in Glenmont.

"He said he was looking for a job and just wanted to get out of the house a couple days a week," said Marinello. "He is a dedicated Hannaford employee and always treats you like family."

The Chamber's 50th Anniversary Dinner is Friday, June 1. For information, call 439-0512.

Big Read events begin this month at Bethlehem library

This Friday begins a month of regional events celebrating The Big Read — an initiative of the National Foundation for the Arts designed to promote shared literary reading among residents, community groups and civic organizations.

Cosponsored by the New York State Writers Institute and the Upper Hudson Library System, our area's Big Read will focus on Their Eyes Were Watching God, the Harlem Renaissance classic by Zora Neale Hurston.

The Writers Institute kicks off the festivities this Friday, May 4, with a screening of the film based on the novel. The film will be shown at Page Hall on the University at Albany's downtown campus at 7 p.m. Commentary by the author's niece, Lucy Anne Hurston, follows. Hurston is a literature scholar in her own right, and author of Speak So You Can Speak Again: the life of Zora Neale Hurston.

Set in the deep South of the early 20th century, Their Eyes Were Watching God is a lyrical blend of history, folklore and magic-realism. The novel is the subject of our two adult book discussions this month: DayBooks on Monday, May 7 at 1:30 p.m. and AfterDinner Books on Wednesday, May 9 at 7 p.m. New members are always welcome.

Zora exhibit

Church offering new contemporary worship service

The Slingerlands Community United Methodist Church, 1499 New Scotland Road, Slingerlands, is offering a new contemporary worship service titled "A Gathering," Thursday from 6:30 to 7 p.m.

During the service, lay persons of the church will offer spirituality, including meditation, discussions, Christian teachings, music and song.

Informality will be the theme throughout, and participants are encouraged to dress informally, and suggest subjects for discussion.

Children are welcome, and child care will be provided.

CHECK IT OUT

"Zora," a work of fiber art by Estelle Kessler Yarinsky, will be on display at the library for the entire month of May. Yarinsky made the wall hanging for the 2004 Big Read in Palm Beach County, Florida. It was exhibited at the Delray Beach Library that year; this year it was also displayed in the Boca Raton Historical Society. The piece depicts Zora Neale Hurston herself, surrounded by scenes and characters from her rich literary legacy. Don't miss this vibrant depiction of an author's life and work.

More Big Read events

Mark your calendars for a performance by jazz guitarist Kevin McNeal at the library on Sunday, May 13 at 2 p.m. McNeal will play and talk about music of the Harlem Renaissance.

Born in Troy, McNeal is recognized as an outstanding performer, recording artist, educator, composer, and author. He lives in New York, where he has played the jazz scene for several decades and leads the group BluesWing.

The concert is free and open to the public.

Watch this column for more Big Read events at the library. A complete schedule of Big Read events is available at www.bethlehempubliclibrary.org.

Area potters fire up visitors in Albany County

Festival features a series of demos, displays and sales

By GRAHAM S. PARKER
parkerg@spotlightnews.com

From functional to artistic, dozens of works forged by area potters will be displayed throughout the Capital District this weekend and through May.

At the Shaker Heritage site in Colonie, 35 regional potters will show off their wares and give novices a hands-on opportunity to create their own masterpieces at Pottery Fest 2007.

As one of the oldest forms of art and design, pottery is making a comeback, said Troy potter Barbara Reeley, and the Albany area has rich history in pottery and ceramics.

"There is a resurgence of people who want to get their hands in clay," said Reeley. "Most everyone has touched clay in their lifetime and want to do it again."

On Saturday and Sunday, May 5 and 6, Reeley will showcase Raku kiln-firing, a Japanese technique that uses fire and smoke to accentuate patterns in pot glazes.

Reeley and members of the Collar City Clay Guild, an organization of Upstate sculptors and potters hosting this year's Pottery Fest, will be demonstrating the many techniques they use in their craft.

Festivalgoers will have the opportunity to experience throwing clay on a potter's wheel, sculpting and demonstrations.

If, after all the exposure, they have caught the clay-bug, then they can always catch "Earth and Fire: A Celebration of Clay and Ceramics" at the Albany Institute of Art and History in downtown Albany, which will run until May 27. The three-part exhibit features the works of eight area potters whose forms range from functional and classic to contemporary.

The Albany Institute exhibit will feature the works of Colonie native Michael McCarthy, who for the past six years has been creating pottery pieces out of his studio in Goshen, Mass. McCarthy's display is the culmination of 10 years of work at the wheel and kiln. His said his works are functional. The shapes are symmetrical, and each pot is made with ergonomics in mind. The handles are placed perfectly and the spouts pour flawlessly.

"I make functional work. Nobody needs what I make. You can buy it somewhere else for a lot cheaper," said McCarthy.

However, unlike assembly line pottery, his work is not cast in molds. Each work is one of a kind and displays the characteristics of a hand-thrown, wood-fired pot, he said. Even though they may just be teapots or butter trays, they are throwbacks to early designs and techniques in pottery that have been brought into the contemporary realm.

McCarthy fires an average of 1,000 pots in a year. He uses a traditional, wood-fired kiln that creates natural-looking glazes and effects, he said.

Firing takes a full day in the large kiln.

Other works, featured at both the Pottery Fest and the Albany gallery, will feature the famous Albany slip glaze. Slip is a liquid form of clay that can be used in plaster molds or as a glaze. Made of talc, ball clay and feldspar, the ingredients are taken from quarries, one of which existed in the Albany area for centuries. The Albany concourse now rests over it.

Like the resurgence in pottery, Albany slip, or slip made to mimic it, is appearing on many area pieces. The signature earth tones and rich glaze it produces after firing are sought after traits in pots, both McCarthy and Reeley said.

Worldwide, Albany is known for its slip.

This year's Pottery Fest will be from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday, May 5 and 6. Admission is $4, with free admission for children younger than 12. The festival will be held at the Shaker Barn and Shaker Meeting House on the grounds of the Ann Lee Home on Washington Avenue in Albany.

McCarthy's works will be on display at the Albany Institute of Art and History until Sunday, May 27.

Harlem Renaissance is the focus of The Big Read

F. Scott Fitzgerald coined the term "Jazz Age" to reflect an era of ragtime, jazz, stylish automobiles and uninhibited young women with bobbed hair. This same era - the 1920s - also marked the Harlem Renaissance, the artistic, political and cultural birth of a new black voice in literature and art.

Similar renewals were happening in Chicago, Philadelphia, and Washington, D.C., especially through the influence of Louis Armstrong's and Duke Ellington's jazz.

Most of the literary Harlemites were not from New York, nor did they depict Harlem life in their writing. The decade was a creative outpouring of how black artists chose to convey their African and American heritage. Their stance was no longer one of apology or defeat, but rather of assertion and pride.

Despite still-flourishing Jim Crow laws, many white New York writers, publishers and patrons rallied behind black writers and intellectuals, who in turn vociferously protested injustice and racism. You can read about this fascinating historical era in the novel "Their Eyes Were Watching God" by Zora Neale Hurston, which will be the topic of the adult book discussion at 7 p.m. Wednesday, May 16. Hurston's book was chosen as the hallmark of the national reading initiative called The Big Read, which is being celebrated during the month of May.

group meets at 7 p.m. Monday, May 21, to discuss "No Place to Hide" by Robert O'Harrow. O'Harrow describes technologies used by companies to track consumer interests, purchases and movements, and the ways in which the government "mines" the billions of records. All of this is being done in the name of national security. What are the ramifications of this electronic snooping, and what is happening to privacy? Sign up requested.

district policies for food allergies has just been returned to the floor for consideration. The bill is sponsored by Jose Rivera, D-Bronx, chairman of the Task Force on Food, Farm and Nutrition Policy.

Robert Stern, the task force's program manager, said the bill was introduced because Rivera wanted to see a plan in place to ensure that all school districts can respond adequately to problems raised by students with food allergies. The bill would direct the state health commissioner to develop guidelines for districts to use to draft policy, which would then have to be enacted in 2009.

According to FAAN, food allergic reactions result in more than 30,000 emergency room visits each year, and it is estimated that 150 to 200 people die annually from serious reactions. Twelve million Americans have food allergies, including approximately 2.2 million children.

In Saratoga Springs schools, parents of children who have food allergies inform school nurses, who then tell the district's food service directors. Other local districts have similar plans in place.

Margaret Lamb, the school lunch director in Saratoga Springs, said once she is made aware of a student with food allergies, parents are sent the menu for the month and can select allergen-free choices for their children. When the district receives food shipments, the food labels are scanned for required warnings alerting service personnel to potential allergens. The most common offenders are peanuts, tree nuts (walnuts, almonds and hazelnuts), wheat, milk, eggs and soy.

If a meal includes any of these, parents are notified before selecting their meal choices. Even if foods are produced on the same manufacturing line as a potential allergen, like peanuts, the meal would be scrapped from the child's choices. If no adequate choice is available, Lamb said, a special meal could be prepared.

The Saratoga district uses other precautions, including preventing cross-contamination in the cafeteria that could occur, for instance, with serving utensils.

"We're trying to avoid someone using a scoop for peanut butter and then using it for chicken salad," said Lamb.

Similar precautions are in place in the Guilderland school district.

Food service Director Linda Mossop said that in addition to checking labels and choosing meals, the district offers "peanut-free classrooms." The nut-free rooms are generally those that are shared between all students, for example music and art classrooms.

Both Mossop and Lamb said that the precautions have been successful in combating problems associated with allergies.

Kathy Oliver, head school nurse in Guilderland, said that the nursing staff is constantly discussing their approaches to the problem.

"Each year there seem to be more and more students with this," said Oliver. "We try as best we can to make it a safe environment for the child."

While school districts try to ensure a healthy environment for their children, doctors and scientists are researching the causes and possible cures for the afflicted.

"At this point, scientists don't know why the immune system decides that one harmless food is harmful and attacks it," said Anne Munoz-Furlong, founder and chief executive officer of the Food Allergy and Anaphylaxis Network. "It appears that anyone with a history of allergy to anything — dogs, pollen, inhalants — is at increased risk for developing a food allergy because their body is already 'trained' to create allergy."

Food allergies are caused when the immune system determines proteins found in specific foods are recognized as foreign and then produces antibodies to combat the "invader." As the body fights the foreign object, symptoms such as swelling lips, stomach cramps, vomiting, rashes and breathing problems can develop.

Despite some tests that can be conducted to determine whether food allergies are present, the most reliable way, and the most common, is by noticing a reaction to a food that has already been eaten.

"The key for individuals is to report any symptoms, such as lip-swelling or mouth-tingling, that are caused by a food to their physician — even if the symptoms go away on their own," said Munoz-Furlong. "These may be the early warning signs of the development of the allergy."

Once an allergy is diagnosed, the only way for an individual to avoid a dangerous situation is to eliminate that food from his or her diet. If the food is eaten, and an anaphylactic reaction occurs, people commonly use an injection of epinephrine, an adrenaline, which is carried with them to treat severe reactions.

Experts recommend that food allergy sufferers carry an EpiPen or other treatments with them at all times. Studies have shown that children often will not carry an epinephrine injection with them, for fear of being embarrassed in front of their peers — a dangerous choice that can have serious consequences.

Despite the rise in the number of those affected by food allergies, Munoz-Furlong is optimistic about the future.

"There is lots of research going on in the U.S. and around the world. Scientists are trying to determine how to predict who will develop an allergy, how to prevent it from developing and how to shut down the allergy once it develops," said Munoz-Furlong. "In the next 10 years or so, the landscape for food allergy diagnosis and treatment should be much better than it is today. The future looks promising."

Two parents cope with children's allergies

By JIM CUOZZO

cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

Some parents have witnessed their children with rapid pulse, nausea, dizziness, blue lips, and loss of consciousness, and might think the child is choking or having a heart attack. To their surprise, they learn these are the warning signs and symptoms from someone with a deadly allergic reaction to certain foods.

When her daughter was 15 months old, Mary Ann Pastrana found out she was allergic to peanuts.

"I was having a piece of toast with peanut butter and I gave her a little piece in her high chair and she had a reaction," Pastrana said. "Her face became red, she began to sneeze and cough."

The attack alerted Pastrana that her daughter might be one of the many million in the United States affected with anaphylaxis.

"I was scared, but she was able to breathe," said Pastrana.

Peanut allergies are triggered when the immune system reacts to proteins found in peanuts. People who have family members with food allergies are most at risk. Pastrana knew food allergies existed on her husband's side of the family. A trip to the pediatrician for a blood test was in order after her daughter's first allergic attack to determine if Pastrana's little girl was allergic to peanuts.

"The doctor said the first reaction can be mild, but the next reaction can also be more severe," Pastrana said.

Pastrana's daughter is eight years old now and she has learned that balancing a child's food intake without peanuts in the daily diet can be a difficult task.

Daily dilemma

"When she goes to birthday parties, sometimes she can't always have the cake," said Pastrana.

Many types of chocolate and candy are excluded for people with peanut allergies because the candy can be processed at a food plant where peanuts are also processed.

"If she sees something she has never eaten before she will check with me," Pastrana said.

Robyn Ryan's 7-year-old son emergency injection of adrenaline or epinephrine will ease the allergic attack, but the only sure cure to make it go away is to avoid peanuts entirely.

"There is a routine we go through anytime we are out," said Ryan. "We always have to ask and see what kind of answer we get."

Ryan recalls a trip to New Jersey when she stopped along the turnpike at a fast food restaurant to order French fries for Aidan. Then the question came. Do the French fries in any way contain peanuts or traces of peanuts?

"The restaurant told me they cook their French fries in peanut oil," Ryan said.

Both Ryan and Pastrana, who live in Bethlehem, know several families in the area with a son or daughter who has a food allergy.

"I am finding this is more common," said Pastrana. "I don't even remember hearing this as a child."

Pastrana can relate to the close call Ryan had with the French fries in peanut oil and will not allow her daughter to eat any Asian food because a lot of Chinese food is cooked in peanut oil.

"No Oriental foods if you have a peanut allergy," said Pastrana, who also packs safe snacks for her daughter wherever she goes.

"If she sees something she has never eaten before, she'll check with me," Pastrana said.

The Center for Disease Control believes prevention is the best way to avoid a potentially fatal allergic reaction. Know what you are eating and drinking. Read food labels carefully and wear a medical alert bracelet. Also write an action plan to describe how to care for your child when he or she has an allergic reaction to peanuts and provide a copy of this plan to the school.

"Knowledge is power," said Pastrana.

Aidan was diagnosed with a peanut allergy after a blood test when he was 3. Reading food labels and always being aware of her son's food intake are now common reminders for Ryan that life is not the same for Aidan.

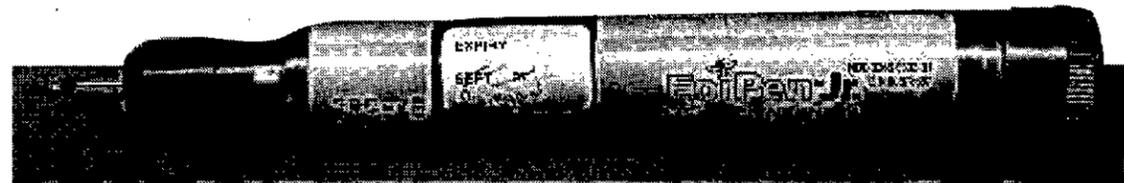

"It requires constant vigilance," said Ryan, who believes Aidan's food allergy will always

The Schenectady Light Opera Company is performing "Hello Dolly" for the conclusion of its 80th season.

Director Suzanne Rayome, a Scotia resident, said the audience should expect to see a very bright and colorful show, with lots of dancing, elaborate sets and costumes and a talented cast.

"From the start, we had a great turnout for auditions, which is an indication that we really have incredible talent in the Capital Region," Rayome said.

Because "Hello Dolly" is intended for a large stage and SLOC's stage is relatively small, the entire theater is used to create more space.

"We've got people coming from everywhere," Rayome said. "You have people sweating right next to you, which is an interesting experience."

The 1890s setting requires elaborate costumes with incredible details, which the company's costume designer, Connie Rauhauser, made by hand.

The set design is also quite detailed. Set designers Peter and Madeline Codella created a front extension to the stage with stairs to the floor, which gives the actors more room.

The Schenectady Light Opera Company has been around for 80 years, something that is unusual for community theater groups. The company's longevity and organization is what attracted Rayome to its stage.

Rayome has been involved with community theater for 35 years, but this is her first SLOC production. Rayome and her husband have done a lot of work with the Glove Theater in Gloversville.

"We are really tickled to be here, so close to home," she said.

Jean Foster, who plays Dolly, returned to SLOC after nearly 20 years away from the stage because of Rayome.

"This is what we really enjoy doing, but the biggest draw for me was the director," Foster said.

Foster, from Burnt Hills, said her biggest challenge in playing Dolly is that the character is larger than life.

"Sometimes it's hard to play that role. I'm still working to do that. I am still cautious, and Dolly isn't," Foster said.

The vocal range is also different. Foster is used to singing soprano and Dolly has a deep alto voice.

Ken Zarnoch from Scotia plays the male lead, Horace Vandegelder. Zarnoch has been with the theater company for 20 years. In that time he has worn many hats, including acting, doing technical work and set design and being on the board of directors.

He said he likes playing Vandegelder because he is a crusty, grumpy, hard as nails, half-a-millionaire snob.

"It's fun to play a role like that," he said.

"You do so well with it," Rayome joked.

Nearly everyone involved in the production is a volunteer. Foster said it is nice to come to rehearsals from her full-time job, and have everything organized and ready to go.

Cast members have been rehearsing about 12 hours a week since February, but Rayome has been planning for this production for a year.

"Everyone here does this for fun. It is their hobby and you want that experience to be rewarding" Rayome said.

For Foster, her experience has been a positive one, which includes her husband and her 12-year-old son Colin, who's in the ensemble.

Colin Foster said it's great to be performing with his family for this show.

"It's in my blood," he said.

All ages are welcome to perform with SLOC, including young children and 70-year-old grandparents. Often families perform together, and many people have met their significant others while performing with the company.

"That's what's so amazing about community theater," Jean Foster said, "People can come in for the first time, and it's so much fun to watch them go through the process from the beginning."

"It's all about having fun. The show is a good representation of American musical theater. It's not controversial, and I guarantee you'll come out of here whistling," Zarnoch said.

SLOC is located at 826 State St. in Schenectady.

"Hello Dolly" runs from May 4 to 13. Performances are Thursday through Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m. Tickets are $20 for adults, $10 for children under 13 and $10 for student rush with identification. make mistakes, you go, 'Oh God, I know exactly how that feels.' You hate that feeling, and you wish that never had to happen because having experienced it so many times myself, it's not fun. But it's fun (watching them). I really enjoy going, and they are enjoying it."

Before anyone gets the idea that there will be Joe Montana clones in the NFL beginning in 2011, the four-time Super Bowl champion said his sons approach the game their way.

"They have their own style, and that's what it's all about. You work on technique, you work on the fundamentals of the position and you'll have your own space," said Montana.

Aware of the possibility that others would assume he pushed his sons into football, Montana said he deliberately waited until they expressed interest in the sport before letting them hit the gridiron. It's a decision that he regrets.

"The problem was they liked it, but it came too late because they were finding that they were behind everyone else ... who started two years before them," Montana said.

The one thing Montana doesn't regret is letting his sons play multiple sports.

"Youth sports has changed for the worse in my case," said Montana. "The sport has changed because coaches think way too much of themselves and what they should demand of the kids. They're taking opportunities away from kids because they want all these kids to play one sport and one sport only year round. They wonder why we lose all these athletes — because they don't get an opportunity to play. They get burned out, which is why switching sports is good for kids."

There is another alarming trend Montana sees in youth football — kids who start putting on weight so they can play on the offensive and defensive lines. He and cardiologist Dr. James Rippe — who are in the middle of a promotional tour about high blood pressure — are concerned about the health risks involved with gaining weight to play on the front lines, especially considering that the average NFL lineman easily weighs more than 300 pounds.

"As a physician, I worry when I start seeing the average NFL lineman of 350 pounds because that message goes out to the younger guys that to play at the highest levels on the line, you've got to be 350 pounds," said Rippe. "What are these guys going to do when they retire? Here's Joe who played at 192 pounds, and he's got high blood pressure. I think we've got a real problem here."

"I think you have to encourage healthy weight gain," said Montana. "For the first time this year, our (high school) boys basketball team tracked what (the players) ate for a month."

Montana added that parental involvement is another key for a young athlete's development, and parents shouldn't be afraid to tell their kids about the reality behind sports.

"Our world is competitive, whether we like to tell our young kids it is or not. They know it's more competitive than parents try to make it out to be early on," said Montana. "I think sports teaches so many things to kids at an early age."

After all, only 255 dreams get to come true every April. It's better that aspiring football players know the odds before they start trying to bulk up.

Pro Football Hall of Fame quarterback Joe Montana, right, is touring with cardiologist Dr. James Rippe to promote high blood pressure awareness. Rob Jonas/Spotlight

Getting a new message across

Montana is raising high blood pressure awareness

By ROB JONAS
jonasr@spotlightnews.com

Joe Montana was used to getting blindsided on the football field. Getting blindsided in a doctor's office was another matter.

Yet, that's what happened several years ago when a routine checkup led to a troubling discovery — the hall of fame quarterback had high blood pressure.

"I was surprised," said Montana. "I didn't think I would ever have it. Even when they told me, I still wasn't concerned because there were no symptoms with it. I didn't feel bad. I really at that point of time didn't know what the consequences were."

Once Montana learned more about the consequences — heart disease, stroke and kidney disease — he dealt with his high blood pressure the way he did with opposing defenses: with cool efficiency. He took his medication, he changed his diet and he exercised more.

Montana didn't stop there, though. He teamed up with cardiologist Dr. James Rippe to create a book and a Web site (www.getbpdwn.com) to help others dealing with high blood pressure, and the two of them tour the United States to raise awareness. That tour landed last Wednesday in Albany.

"One of the messages we want to get out is if a person like Joe Montana, who played professional sports at the highest level, can have high blood pressure, than anybody can, and the only way you'll know about it is if you get your blood pressure checked,"

Seeing the sports world from a new perspective

Two hundred fifty-five dreams came true in last weekend's National Football League draft.

Millions more dreams are yet to be fulfilled, though. Those are the dreams of the Pop Warner and high school-age football players hoping to make it to the NFL.

Former pro football quarterback Joe Montana is a parent of two such dreamers — his sons Nathaniel and Nicholas. Both play football and basketball, the sports Montana excelled in while in high school.

"I think the hardest thing is watching them play because you want them to do well for themselves," said Montana, who was in Albany last Wednesday promoting a book and a Web site dedicated to high blood pressure awareness. "When you see them
