The Gift that keeps on Living

Organ transplant recipients are grateful to be alive

By ANN MARIE FRENCH • news@spotlightnews.com

Can you feel your heart beat? Did you notice how green everything seems this summer? If everything seems to be in working order, you're probably not one of the 96,973 people in the United States waiting for an organ transplant of some kind. More than 8,500 people in New York alone wait. A new person is added every 14 minutes. Those numbers are large and may be shocking, but more alarming is the low number of donors. In the first four months of 2007, it was just 4,663, resulting in 9,217 transplants. Do the math and you will quickly realize there simply are not enough organs to go around.

One organ donor can save or enhance the lives of up to 50 people, said Lauren Quinn, the hospital and community services specialist for the Center of Donation and Transplant (CDT) based in Albany. There are a number of common misconceptions associated with organ donation, said Quinn, who suggests people check out the Web site, www.cdmny.org, to dispel the myths and get answers to frequently asked questions. She also mentioned www.unos.org, the Web site of the United Network for Organ Sharing, which, in addition to providing educational information, tracks the number of organ transplants.

of patients waiting for organ transplants as well as the number of donors. One myth is that donation is limited to organs like the heart, kidneys, and liver. You can also donate the lungs, pancreas, and intestines. The Center of Donation and Transplant also works with donor families who choose to donate tissues. Tissue is a broad category that includes the obvious like skin and eyes, but it is expanded to include bone, heart, valves, and tendons. Quinn said the value of tissue donation should not be discounted. It may not have saved a life, but the life quality of that

Son's death spurs change

Michael Carey starts foundation to advocate for children

By JIM CUOZZO
cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

There's a New Testament passage that Michael and Lisa Carey of Glenmont have often referred to in the almost six months since their 13-year-old son Jonathan died Feb. 15.

And we know that to them that love God all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to his purpose. (Romans 8:28)

Carey's story has received national attention. An autistic boy who could not speak. A son whose parents began to believe he was being mistreated at a downstate autism facility, and whose life came to a short and tragic end when two employees of O.D. Heck's Developmental Center were charged with fatally restraining Carey while driving on personal errands.

But since Jonathan's death, the Careys moved forward, pressing state officials for access to records involving their son, receiving the attention of powerful legislators like state Senate Majority Leader Joseph Bruno, R-Brunswick, and getting Jonathan's Law passed as a state law allowing parents access to their children's records at residential facilities.

July 25, 2007, marked a historical occasion in the world of Bethlehem youth sports with the Bethlehem Babe Ruth 13-year-old All Star Team's victory in the state championship tournament in Beacon, Dutchess County.

"This is the first time in anyone's memory a Bethlehem team made it this far," said Tim

The team's 6-to-4 win over Saugerties propelled it to the Mid-Atlantic Regional Babe Ruth Baseball Tournament the weekend of Aug. 3 to 5 in Medford, N.J.

"They have superseded my expectations," said coach Rico Frese.

The team scored four runs in the top of the sixth inning after trailing 3-to-2 in the state championship game against Saugerties. Second baseman Justin Blalock tagged a Saugerties runner for

McDonald's donates $200,000 to charity

The McDonald's Operators of the Capital Region Co-op recently announced that in the first six months of this year, the 72 restaurants in the Co-op donated more than $200,000 to non-profit organizations in local communities served by McDonald's. McDonald's customers have always been generous donors to the special events hosted in the Capital District restaurants, as well as to the Ronald McDonald House in the region, donating $94,000 to the "Hearts" program for the benefit of the House. Although not a requirement of owning a McDonald's restaurant, the owners and staff of the 72 restaurants in the Capital Region Co-op, stretching from Malden to Warrensburg, from Albany to Cobleskill, to Western Massachusetts and Southern Vermont have been key supporters of the Ronald McDonald House of Albany since its foundation.

The McDonald's owners contribute both time and money to the House, which cares for the family of seriously ill children in local hospitals and which supports other local non-profit organizations through its Ronald McDonald House Charities.

Police Blotter

Police charge two area men with DWI

A Selkirk man was charged with three felonies, all related to driving while intoxicated, after the vehicle he was driving nearly struck a Bethlehem police car.

Michael D. Baumes, 49, of 1110 River Road, Selkirk, was charged with DWI, driving with more than .08 percent blood alcohol content and aggravated unlicensed operation, all felonies, along with aggravated DWI and two other violations.

Baumes was leaving a driveway and entering River Road on Sunday, July 29, when he allegedly drove into the path of a Bethlehem patrol vehicle. The reporting officer stated the car had to swerve to avoid a collision. The patrol car then followed Baumes' vehicle observing Baumes crossing lanes on numerous occasions, according to reports. When he came to a stop, Baumes reportedly told police, "Take me to jail." Officers took Baumes into custody and charged him. The case was closed by the arrest.

• Douglas Leyden, 35, of 9 Camden Circle, Delmar, was charged with DWI by police.

Bethlehem police observed Leyden driving entirely in the northbound lane and then turning sharply into the southbound lane on Elsmere Avenue. The reporting officer said Leyden's vehicle also crossed the double yellow center line. The vehicle was stopped, and police report Leyden had a strong odor of alcohol on him while exiting the car, and his speech was slurred.

Leyden was issued tickets for DWI, driving with more than .08 percent blood alcohol content and failure to keep right. He will appear in Bethlehem Town Court on Tuesday, Aug. 21.

Teen's battle with lymphoma inspires fundraiser

Run for Life event offers chance to register with marrow foundation

By JIM CUOZZO
cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

It's been less than two years since Clarksville teenager Anthony Hill lost his battle with lymphoma. Hill's family and circle of close friends had worked tirelessly to find a bone marrow transplant match for Anthony by holding marrow drives and other fundraising events in Bethlehem.

The first Run for Life Poker Run was held in Anthony's honor last year, and a second is scheduled for Saturday, Sept. 8. The event features vehicles of all types winding along a route that starts and ends at the Eastern New York Laborer's Training Center on Wemple Road in Glenmont.

More than 100 people attended last year's Run for Life, and organizers said they expect a larger turnout this year as the drive will wind through the scenic Catskill Mountains and back.

"You can go at your own pace," said Jesse Turner, who, along with Ella Ruff, is an event organizer.

Motorcycles and classic cars are among the vehicles that take part. Activities at the Wemple Road site include music from the band Playing with Fire, along with food and refreshments and a chance to win a 2006 Harley V-Rod motorcycle.

People can also register to enter into the National Marrow Donor Program.

Ruff became close with Anthony Hill and his family when they would stop into Ella's Mr. Subb Sandwich shop, now CynderElla's Subs, at Delmar's Four Corners.

"He would always order a ham and turkey with cheese," said Ruff, who learned what Anthony and the family were going through with his disease.

"Ella stepped right for ward I can't tell you how many times," said Dorothy Rhone, Anthony's grandmother.

Ruff, along with family and friends, organized what is now known as the largest single bone marrow drive in the state in February of 2005.

"Over 500 people registered," said Ruff, recalling how cold it was that day and how people patiently waited in line, sometimes for hours, to be a part of the National Marrow Donor Program.

"You know what was unbelievable is that I would look out and I didn't know any of these people," said Jackie Hill, Anthony's mom.

Giants, who spend August in training camp at the University at Albany, also became familiar with Anthony and the family.

"(Quarterback) Eli Manning signed an autographed shirt and would telephone Anthony regularly to see how he was doing," said Ruff.

A bone marrow match was ultimately found for Anthony, and when the Hill family was contacted by the registry, their hopes were high, only to find the donor withdrew from the registry a day or so later.

"We were upset, but Anthony didn't feel that way," Hill said.

Ruff said the Run for Life event is a chance to register with the National Marrow Foundation and added that people should not sign up unless they are serious about it.

"We don't want anyone to be tested unless they want to," said Ruff recalling the disappointment everyone felt when Anthony's match dropped out of the program. There are currently two people in the Albany area in need of bone marrow transplants. Proceeds from the event will go to the people who are waiting for a match.

Turner said the students at the Berne-Knox-Westerlo school that Anthony attended called him Superman. They made wristbands in Anthony's honor with his name inscribed on one side and the words "live fearless" on the other side.

"He always had a big smile on his face," said Turner.

"He never saw the negative and could always find something good in anything," Rhone added.

For more information on Run for Life or the National Bone Marrow Foundation call 439-9904 or 225-6980. Donation for the event is $30, with $10 for each additional rider.

Kenholm Pool keeps residents cool

Tucked among the trees is a swimmer's treat

By JIM CUOZZO
cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

Nestled in a quaint Delmar neighborhood hidden by a tall row of trees off Dumbarton Drive is the Kenholm Pool, a cozy neighborhood pool that aims to please.

"I grew up coming to this pool," said lifeguard Maddie White, who also lives right down the street from the oasis. "You know all the kids here; it's a lot of fun."

The Kenholm Pool Association formed in 1964 as new homes in the Kenhold Gardens neighborhood were being built, and the pool has kept parents and children cool on many hot summer days.

There is a kiddie pool and an adult pool that is 23 yards long and 9 feet deep. The staff includes four full-time lifeguards who work Monday through Friday, from noon to 8 p.m., and on weekends, 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. A preschool camp is among the summer activities for kids.

"It's never too crowded," said Tasha Anderson, who brings her daughter, Emma, to the pool. "You can always keep an eye on your kids."

Most members come from the neighborhood, however, season members come from all parts of Bethlehem and even the city of Albany.

"We love it," said Marsha Goldstein, a regular swimmer of the Kenholm pool along with Sandra Goldstein. "It's charming. I love the country setting, and the people are so nice."

Family memberships cost $275 and a single membership is $150 for the summer.

Lifeguards White and Monica Gerbini take turns cleaning the pool every day. The main pool is newly tiled, and picnic tables and grills are available.

The pool is open from Memorial Day through Labor Day.

"I give a lot of credit to our board members who raise funds," said Anderson. "It takes a lot of work."

Hold them close, even when they're far away

"From Robin's Nest" will return next week.

By KATHERINE MCCARTHY

I want to tell you about my friend Nancy. She had a way of smiling that made it impossible not to smile back. She would look closely at you, crinkle up her eyes and just grin. She seemed to always be bouncing on the balls of her feet, ready to take on the next project or meet the next person in front of her.

She was a great mother, and that's what I admired most about her. When our sons were in fifth grade, she let hers bike alone to our house, and the five whole blocks never seemed larger to me than when I let my own son bike back to his friend's house. "What was that about?" I asked her.

"They're going to middle school next year," was her answer. "I thought they should start to exercise a little independence."

That was six years ago, and both of our sons have become incredibly independent since. Nancy's not around to see that, though, because she died that summer in a tragic bike accident. Time has softened the blow of losing her, but I still harass kids when I see them biking without their helmets.

"But I'm old enough, I don't need to wear one," one 15-year-old I know said when I asked him where his helmet was.

"But what if anything happened?" I asked him. For a minute, he looked guilty. I'd say that I felt bad and perhaps like I'd overstepped my bounds, but it was worth a shot. I've got teenage sons; I know that sometimes the things adults say mean nothing, or even draw scorn. But you never know what might break through the teenage sound barrier.

It's a delicate balance, talking to teens without alienating them. We parents have so much to share with them, but there's so much they need to learn on their own. So we pick and choose, and when it comes to safety, I choose to risk alienation.

Biking home from work recently, I saw one of my sons' friends walking and smoking. He tried to hide the cigarette behind him as I stopped to chat with him. Can I get him to quit? Nope. Do I want to ban him from my home? Nope, he's a great kid. Can I talk? You betcha. "They'll kill you, you know," I told him.

"Yeah, I know," he said.

"And don't ever smoke at my house."

"OK."

Then we talked about something else, he politely, until he could make his escape. But I figure half his smoke went up in flames while I held him captive.

This whole independent kids thing comes too fast. One minute, I felt like I would be playing Thomas the Tank Engine trains forever; the next, my kids were calling from their cell phones to see if they can stay at their friends' houses just a little bit longer.

Really, life is just about letting go. Hopefully as our kids grow, they'll stay in touch and keep us in their lives. Lots of people come and go, sometimes too quickly, and sometimes mysteriously.

I've been distressed recently to watch some women leave the area after incidents that involve domestic violence. Statistically, I know this still happens, but it hits a little too close to home when people pull up stakes in the middle of the night for their own personal safety, leaving no trace so that they don't further endanger themselves. It's hard to not be able to help a friend, and worrying about them increases the normal amount of missing them.

Some people come and go for reasons less tragic. How many people do you know that you are down to just exchanging Christmas cards with? Can you say for sure what your best friend from high school is doing today, or where the funny girl who lived across the hall from you during your sophomore year of college is today?

I wish I were better about staying in touch with people. My sister-in-law is great at it. A company she once worked for subjected all its employees to personality tests, and it was no surprise that she emerged as a "people gatherer." She has only made friends in her life, and all of them stay in touch with her and she with them.

I may not stay in touch, but I treasure all my friends, past and present. Sometimes I feel like I hold on too tightly to friendships; as friends have gone on to other places and opportunities, I've often wanted to shout, "No! Stay here forever!" Sometimes, I feel too attached to the past and find it alienates some people.

"This really isn't my life anymore," a friend once said when we had a reunion in a place we'd all lived for a couple of years. I felt I'd imposed on followed by cooking dinner, doing the requisite laundry and the minimal amount of housework, plus some family time, drains me by about 9 p.m.

That's where e-mail is a blessing; if I can't call friends, I can send them a note.

Maybe someday there will be time to spend with friends again. I dream of a rich and full retirement (although, with college on the horizon for our kids, we may never get to retire), going to book club meetings, visiting old friends and having them visit us, and being able to savor the time we all have together.

I keep Nancy with me as I move through my days. She had been planning to open a bakery; a coffee shop went into its place, and when I drive by, I think of the day I will be able to sit with friends and ask for a refill because we're having such a great time, we hate to leave.

Delmar man makes vision a reality

Photographer's image of monument selected for exhibit

By JIM CUOZZO
cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

Delmar photographer Joseph Schuyler was staying in Virginia with a friend when he had a vision one night in a dream of a great wall that faced the sky with an endless list of names inscribed on it. The next day, Schuyler visited the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C., and there was his dream right in front of his eyes.

"We went just about sunrise, and I found it overwhelming," said Schuyler, who proceeded to take a picture of the monument with a super-wide lens from an architectural camera.

"The night before I had this dream, and that was the picture," said Schuyler.

The picture Schuyler took has received national attention as a part of The Center for Fine Art Photography's sixth photographic exhibit of 2007.

The center, based in Fort Collins, Colo., selected 50 black-and-white images from photographers throughout the United States, Canada and Great Britain for display during the show, which runs through Saturday, Aug. 18.

"This work was one of the more interestingly crafted images," said Larry Padgett, of the Center for Fine Art.

Schuyler has worked in photography for more than 30 years, and his clients include the Capital Repertory Theatre, Lake George Opera and the Albany Institute of Art.

Along with the prestige of being viewed in a major art gallery out west, Schuyler's image of the Vietnam Memorial may also make it into a magazine.

"Ten images from the show could go into publication in the feature section for Camera Arts Magazine, produced in Albuquerque, N.M.," said Padgett.

After working as an English teacher in the late '60s in Gloucester, Mass., Schuyler decided to become a freelance photographer after receiving tenure. Through the years, Schuyler's work has made it into several different exhibitions. He has also received two Kodak Gold Light Awards, and his work has been viewed in area galleries and regional galleries, including an exhibit in Cambridge, Mass.

When he is not busy taking photos, Schuyler is the director of the Exposed Art Gallery's School of Photography.

"My job is to really develop courage and to work with the photographer and find photographers who are really good at what they do," said Schuyler.

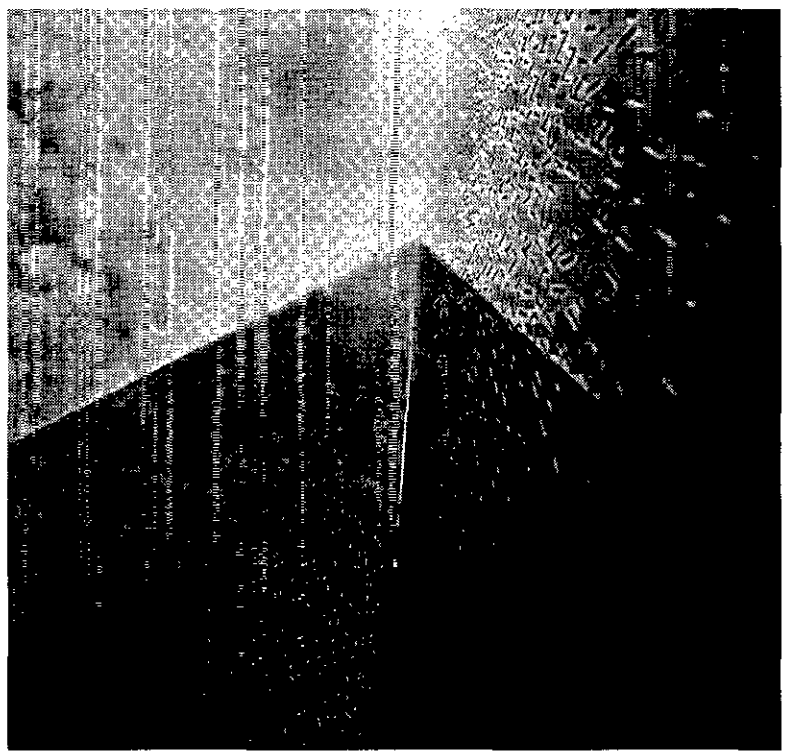

His next project is bringing area students to Turo, Mass., for a three-day photography workshop in September.

"It will be a pretty intensive workshop," said Schuyler.

You have to have a vision and you need to learn technique to realize your vision as a photographer, according to Schuyler.

"The camera will do the rest quite well," he said.

His photography can also be viewed on the Web at www.schuylerphotography.com.

On track

Oh, how we love Saratoga in the summer.

Next week, we'll provide more details about the track, but for now, if you haven't been there, head on up. Saratoga Springs itself looks like America the way it used to be, with shops on Main Street, people on the sidewalks and at the outdoor tables of the restaurants.

And in August, we can rub shoulders with the rich and some of the famous who have come to be part of the sport of kings. Locals pick up a few extra bucks renting out their houses for the season, restaurants up their take from people who find Upstate prices practically free, hotels fill up and there's a fun atmosphere that makes the end of summer a pleasure.

The track itself is a melting pot of humanity, as immigrant laborers and wealthy horse owners bookend the people who sit under the trees to watch the races on TVs and regulars head for their boxes. Families head for breakfast at the track, and for the rest of the year, we'll see the "spinners" sporting the T-shirts, caps and umbrellas they worked the turnstiles to acquire.

And let's not forget the horses themselves, the fine creatures who make our hearts race as we look to see if the one we put money on wins, places or shows.

And if the track and downtown Saratoga aren't enough, you can stroll the gardens at Yaddo, listen to the Philadelphia Orchestra or catch a pop concert at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, or breathe a little country air in surrounding Saratoga County.

Once a year, we're in the national spotlight. Take advantage of it; head north for an afternoon and maybe an evening of fun at the track.

Now, extreme Assemblyman

Congratulations to George Amedore, the Republican who last week won the special election in the 105th state Assembly district. He beat Ed Kosiur, a Democratic member of the Schenectady County Legislature, for the seat that Democrat Paul Tonko left to become chairman of the New York state Energy and Research Development Authority.

Amedore is most famous for his recent ABC-TV appearance as the main builder of the Colonie home in "Extreme Makeover" this past winter.

We wish you well in your new endeavor, Mr. Amedore, which will require more patience than tearing down and building a new house. Please keep your constituents foremost in your thoughts as you go to work in the state Legislature.

Someone once called me nostalgic.

Huh! Imagine that. Me, nostalgic, longing bittersweetly for things since passed.

At first I was annoyed, not understanding why anyone would say such a thing.

Over the years, however, I have learned that that long-ago acquaintance was right about me.

Take, for instance, my deep fondness for the Saratoga Race Course.

Saratoga, for me, is not just a place where horses race for money a few weeks out of the year. Nor is it a place to pass time in the picnic area or paddock while sipping a Saratoga Sunrise. It is not a poolside deck to sit in the sun, and it is not the runway for a women's hot show. Most of all, it is not a place where "spinners," as they are called, wheel in and out of the Union Avenue or Nelson Avenue gates to pick up their 20 free hats, shirts, beer mugs, coolers, tote bags, blankets or bobbleheads that are given away on some race days.

Saratoga is one of the most special places in my life.

It started when I was a teenager on hot lazy summer days at 308 East Main in Amsterdam in the early 1970s. I still dream about that homestead where I grew up. It was a four-story apartment house, with my aunt and uncle upstairs, my uncle's father in the apartment next to him and our neighbors Ann and Ginny downstairs.

I was a loner as a kid (and still am to this day). Around noon, when I was bored with baseball, TV or reading (not necessarily in that order), I would sit on the concrete wall in front of our house that separated the lawn from the sidewalk and watch the world pass by. My daily routine was to say hello to Tom Deluca the mailman, wave at old man Bill across the street as he opened the old iron gate to retrieve his mail and watch the people come and go across the street at State Farm Insurance.

In late July and August my Uncle Jim would rush home from a hard morning paving roads or working at the hotel he owned and shower, shave and dress up. Then he'd get in his Cadillac convertible and speed up Route 67 to Saratoga to make the first race post time. He always looked so handsome with a golden tan, white shoes and freshly pressed pants and shirts.

One day he noticed a very sad nephew and godchild wasting his summer doing nothing. It was then he asked, "Hey Jimmy, do you want to come to the races with me?"

A smile as wide as the Atlantic Ocean immediately covered my face. I ran up the steps to hurriedly tell my mom where I was going, and off to Saratoga we went.

Post time was 1:30 p.m. back then and there were only nine races, with one daily double and a trifecta in the last race. There were no other exotic options like quinellas or pick sixes. Everything was win, place or show.

When we arrived at the track, the first thing my uncle did was whisk me through the gates and give me two bucks so we both had a race program and pencil to pick our winners. We proceeded to hit the reserved seat window in the lower grandstand. After my uncle handed a $10 bill to the ticket taker, we would get the grandstand reserved seat of our choice. Back then the grandstand was located where the clubhouse now is and the reserved seats were excellent. Rows M through V, now grandstand reserved seats, were where the free seats would be.

Once we were in our seats we would take out the handicapper's bible, The Daily Racing Form, as we scoped out the first double. I would follow my uncle to the betting window and watch him bet. Depending on what kind of a week he had at work, he would place a $10, $20 or even a $50 daily double wager. He would often let me hold his tickets for good luck.

Before post time we would head to the upstairs cafeteria, now home of the Carousel Restaurant, a fancy name for a place that serves salads and burgers. The old cafeteria, complete with a turnstile, trays and your choice of hot food, was run by Harry M. Stevens' concessions. There was nothing like it. We would eat half a barbecue chicken with potato salad, a buttered roll and corn on the cob with a combo vanilla/chocolate pudding dessert to top

it off ... all for $5.25

Around 1:29 p.m. we would hear track announcer Fred Capposella say, "It is now post time," in his famous dramatic voice. Downing our last morsels of food, we would dash through the turnstiles and race across the grandstand to our seats to watch the first race.

As the summers went by, my uncle and I continued to head to Saratoga. My father joined in over the years and of course my aunt as well. I saw a little known horse named Onion defeat the great Triple Crown winner Secretariat one Whitney Day afternoon. I watched great jockeys like Jorge Velasquez, Braulio Baeza, Angel Cordero Jr. and Manny Ycaza ride home winner after winner. I saw celebrities like Jack Klugman, Donald Trump, Jimmy "The Greek" Snyder, The Boss, George Steinbrenner and many other famous names walking around the track, enjoying the atmosphere.

I remember the feeling of anticipation when the track reopened and feeling like I was losing a close friend each Labor Day as the sun would set and the workers, trainers, horses and jockeys quietly made their exit down Union Avenue.

During a late fall or early winter afternoon, when the leaves turn and the trees become bare, I always take a drive to Saratoga and park my car on Nelson Avenue. I walk around the outside of the race course, remembering the good times I had with family and friends and the unique characters each summer who make Saratoga so special. I think about the Jim Dandy bar inside the clubhouse and the music and atmosphere outside Siro's each evening during those six weeks.

But all I see is an empty grandstand with the ghosts of 1,000 race calls and many special champions who have come and gone. The great Man O' War and Sea Biscuit (who wasn't so good at Saratoga) both raced here, along with Affirmed and Alydar and little-known horses like Gusto O' Shay, who won the Hopeful Stakes in 1973. Gusto O' Shay's owner, Mrs. Gerard Hopkins, was a sweet old lady who sat next to me in the grandstand that afternoon telling me all day long that her horse was going to win the Hopeful.

That is Saratoga. It's a Mecca each year, where I try to revive the past with my dad and uncle, reliving my youth and recalling their lost years. Nowadays we sit under the shade of a tree outside the grandstand and close our eyes for a bit when the sun shines so warm and bright. We listen to Tom Durkin, the latest track announcer, say "It is now post time," and we all get up from our chairs.

While their eyes are on the race, mine wander to them, to the crowd and finally to the race, capturing more special moments together at the "graveyard of champions."

Please help prevent suicide

Editor, The Spotlight:

Again this year, I will be participating in the Out of Darkness Walk to raise money and awareness for suicide prevention. This year the walk is scheduled for Sunday, Sept. 16, in Saratoga Springs. Last year I was successful in raising more than $3,000, thanks to your generous donations.

A person dies by suicide every 16 minutes in the United States. This claims more than 32,000 lives each year. It is estimated that an attempt is made every 45 seconds with close to 1 million people attempting suicide annually.

Suicide is the third leading cause of death among 15- to 24-year-olds and the second major cause of death among college

In this country, approximately 20 million people suffer from serious depression. We know that there is a direct link between depression and suicide, as more than 90 percent of those who die by suicide have suffered from depression or other mental illness.

As you likely know, suicide is a major national health problem that takes an enormous toll on family, friends, co-workers and the entire community.

I support the efforts of the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention (AFSP) as it is the only non-profit organization exclusively devoted to funding the research, education and treatment programs needed to prevent suicide. My personal involvement with AFSP has been very healing for me, as it provides opportunities for me to work in the area of prevention and support for the survivors of the loss of a loved one to suicide.

Please consider supporting my walk this year. If you are interested in donating, you can send a check to me directly, made out to AFSP, or online at www.outofthedarkness.org, "Lisa's Team."

From the bottom of my heart, I thank you, again.

Editor, The Spotlight:

The article in The Spotlight about Ollie Palmer had one big error. Ollie is and always has been a member of the Elsmere Fire Company, A, Inc., not Department.

I should know, as my late father and husband were both Elsmere Fire Company firemen.

My mother was a charter member of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Elsmere Fire Company of which I have been a member for 58 years and have been granted life membership.

I am proud of all the Elsmere Fire Company firemen and auxiliary and feel they should be recognized by their proper name as members of the Elsmere Fire Company A, Inc.,

Organization features seniors helping seniors

Umbrella offers older homeowners a sense of security

By DON CAZER
news@spotlightnews.com

People routinely use umbrellas to protect them from the elements. There is another umbrella in the Capital District that can help protect the elderly and disabled from losing two things they cherish: their independence and their homes.

This organization, Umbrella of the Capital District, has helped thousands of seniors in Albany, Schenectady, Rensselaer and Saratoga counties stay in their homes since its founding in 1995.

One of the most common reasons elderly and disabled homeowners move out of their homes is that the house becomes too much to handle physically and financially.

Umbrella volunteers perform those chores that member homeowners can no longer do for themselves, which include lawn and garden work, house cleaning, transporting to appointments, grocery shopping, carpentry and painting.

If a pipe bursts, a window breaks or the furnace won't start, Umbrella staff are available to help correct the problem.

"Emergency assistance is just a phone call away — 24 hours a day, seven days a week," said Elaine Santore, a director of Umbrella.

Handymen are sent to the member's home with 90 minutes of being called. "Without the handy people, this program doesn't function," Santore said.

One of those handymen is Bill Gosier, 67, who has been a volunteer since 1999. He recently helped Leonard Tucker with a high ceiling light bulb and a clogged drain.

Tucker said the handymen from Umbrella have allowed him and his wife to continue to live independently.

"I have recommended Umbrella to others and they love it," said Tucker.

Ron Roedel, a longtime Umbrella handyman, has been helping Barbara Piper for years. Piper said she is pleased with the service provided by the organization.

"I adore Umbrella. I'm a senior citizen, and I couldn't possibly take care of my house without their help," she said.

Umbrella strongly supports the "aging at home" philosophy, said director Ron Byrne.

"One of the most innovative aspects of Umbrella is our workforce," said Byrne. "For the most part, we use senior citizens. Our handymen have the skills to get the job done. In fact, some have more than 30 years experience in various trades. Equally important, because most of our handy persons only work to supplement their income, they are able to work for less, and we pass this savings on to our members."

Byrne said the organization is always in need of volunteers to help with the maintenance needs of its members.

"We fit the job around their (the volunteers') live — as they are mostly retired and we have to respect that. Some volunteers work two hours a week; others work 20 hours," said Byrne.

Byrne said Umbrella staffers visit the senior centers in the Capital District to make sure they are aware of the opportunity to be an Umbrella handyperson. Anyone, old or young, who is handy around the house or has professional experience in home repair, is sought. They receive $10 an hour for the work they do. Most importantly, they get the satisfaction of helping someone in the community remain in his or her own home.

"Umbrella is a real community; people looking out for each other," said Byrne. "More people could do this, if they have a desire to help people live independently. Some people think Umbrella just fixes things but, in essence, we give people the peace of mind to keep going."

Added Santore, "An Umbrella handyman visit makes sure their people are safe."

A membership in Umbrella costs between $125 and $275 per year depending on the size of the home and the annual income of the homeowner. Handyman services are provided for $10 per hour by younger retirees. Time and material charges are paid directly to the handyman by the homeowner. Licensed plumbers and electricians are dispatched at a cost of $50 per hour.

Umbrella uses funds for subsidized memberships that are raised through the gifts and grants of corporations, individuals in the community and foundations. In addition, Umbrella has fundraising events.

"The Art of the Umbrella" set for Friday, Sept. 21 at Proctor's new GE Theatre in Schenectady will feature a large collection of decorated umbrellas and other works by artists from throughout the Capital District.

At the end of the evening, all items will be auctioned off, with the proceeds donated to support Umbrella.

The event will include hors d'oeuvres and dessert. Tickets are $40 per person, $30 for seniors, and can be purchased by calling Umbrella at 346-5249. You can also stop by the office at 509A Union Street in Schenectady.

For information on Umbrella or to join the program, visit www.theumbrella.org, or write or call Umbrella of the Capital District at 346-5249; 1374 Parkwood Blvd., Schenectady, 12308.

New School's Out director will stay focused on kids

Childcare program celebrates 25th anniversary

By JILL U. ADAMS
news@spotlightnews.com

One minute, Jayne Maloney is playing foosball with a child at School's Out summer program. The next, she heads back to her office for the organization's annual audit.

As the new executive director of School's Out, Inc., a school-age before-and-after school childcare program in the town of Bethlehem, Maloney sees these tasks as equally vital. In addition to budgets, childcare regulations and staffing, she said, "It's important to stay in touch with the kids, to be a face that's known."

School's Out began as a grassroots, parent-driven program to provide quality care to school kids that fit with working parents' schedules. It was built on a philosophy of enrichment rather than babysitting, designed to be a safe and nurturing alternative for children whose parents both worked outside the home.

"I used the term 'warm and fuzzy,'" said Marty DeLaney, one of the founders of School's Out in 1983 and longtime president of the Bethlehem Chamber of Commerce. "Kids would tell their mothers to go shopping - they'd say, 'I want to stay here.' I think that's true today."

As School's Out enters its 25th year, it serves more than 500 children with a professional staff of more than 50. However, it's still community-based, housed in the town's schools and churches, and it's still listening to parents, some of whom serve on the board of directors.

Maloney will face challenges both new and old as she takes on directing the organization. Bethlehem Central School District's decision to implement full-day kindergarten will affect enrollment in one of School's Out keystone programs, its kindergarten enrichment program. Staff turnover is a constant challenge, as so many program staffers are college students, whose schedules change every semester.

Maloney's response to these challenges shows her optimism. College-aged employees are at a changeable time of life, so turnover at that level will always occur, she said, but, "We have great retention of our site managers."

Full-day kindergarten is still two years away.

"We have some time to look at whether we should offer different kinds of programs, perhaps pre-K programs," Maloney said.

Physical space is another persistent challenge, but Maloney is looking forward to using the new Eagle Elementary School as another home school site for School's Out's before and after school programs.

"Our school sites are always full," she said.

Her glass-half-full outlook has earned the admiration of many town leaders.

"She's warm, friendly, outgoing, but not overpowering," said DeLaney. "Children and parents are drawn to her - she's good with both. It's an unusual skill."

"She's come up through the program and she brings her own professionalism and expertise," said former town supervisor Teri Egan. Egan served on School's Out's board for more than 10 years. Both her children went through the program.

Maloney has been with School's Out for seven years, as the director of professional development. Before that, she directed a private daycare center in Delmar and ran an after-school program in Ravena.

School's Out has maintained a close, collaborative working relationship with the school district and Maloney will continue that goodwill. "She has to," said DeLaney. "We're in the school buildings."

"Bethlehem is fortunate to have a high-quality, nonprofit, parent-led daycare in town," said school Superintendent Les Loomis. "We feel are students are School's Out children and vice versa."

Egan sees School's Out as fulfilling a need in the community. "It provides such a valuable service to working parents."

Maloney knows the bottom line is the kids.

"What's best for children," she said. "That's our guiding light."

School's Out is a before-and-after school program for elementary school children. For information, call 478-9325.

Mellick will demonstrate the use of sound qualities to support imagery and describe a potential career path as a Foley Artist, which is a film sound effects person. During the second hour, storyteller Marni Gillard will join the program, performing a story while Brian adds sound. After some rehearsal, class participants will present their own production to a library audience of families with younger children.

Space is limited; registration for the workshop is required. The student presentation at 1 p.m. is open to the public.

This project is made possible in part through Community Arts Grants, a program funded through the state and local partnership program of the New York State Council on the Arts and The Arts Center of the Capital Region.

• Still time for a summer read

The lazy days of summer are waning, but they are not over yet. You still have time to squeeze in a couple of paperback reads before the back-to-September busy-ness. The library staff has picked out some personal favorites and put together a collection for your reading enjoyment in a wide variety of genres. There are new paperback releases, classics, fiction, non-fiction and old favorites. Look for them back near the magazines. Truthfully, they will be just as good to read in the autumn as they are now.

• Puppets celebrate reading program conclusion

The Tom Knight Puppets will be here on Wednesday, Aug. 29, for the grand finale of the 2007 Summer Reading Program.

When the GTOs concert finished at the Voorheesville Library in July, the group enthusiastically complied with a song request from a group of very young fans. The girls seemed to be having a great time listening to oldies from the '60s, and they knew all the words.

An institution leaves institute after 30 plus years

AIHA staff praises retiree

By ARCANGELA C. MELE
melea@spotlightnews.com

At the Albany Institute of History and Art, there are few employees who have left such a longstanding and notable mark as Daniel Van Hoesen, the institute's main art handler and maintenance man for 36 years, who retired on Wednesday, July 25.

Christine Miles, director of the institute, has worked with Van Hoesen since she started there 21 years ago. She said he is a truly remarkable person and she considers him to be the heart and soul of the AIHA.

"As a person he exemplifies a lot of what we do as an institution," she said. "He's sensitive and pragmatic."

Van Hoesen, who will be 66 on Aug. 23, is an art lover who enjoys sculpting and wood crafting and was hired at the museum in 1971 for his carpentry and drawing skills. He first put those skills to work to design crates the artwork was packed in for shipping. He also created "exhibition furniture," usually made of wood, that art is displayed on.

In 1998, the AIHA closed for renovations until 2001, but staff kept working. Van Hoesen remembers the time well because there was no air conditioning and he became a "jack of all trades," doing several maintenance duties like painting, snow blowing, sweeping, installing lights, and maintaining the museum's computerized water, heating, and air conditioning systems.

Van Hoesen still does many of these tasks today, but his most specialized task is the one he started with, the design and installation of exhibition furniture. He does that along with exhibition graphic designer Tom Nelson.

According to Miles, Van Hoesen was trained to handle artwork many years ago, but also possesses unique skills that have made him highly successful at his job for so many years.

"He has a sixth sense about how to move about, and care for things. He is extremely sensitive, and amazingly creative," she said.

Van Hoesen, who has been married for 33 years and has two daughters, attended Bethlehem High School, and joined the Army during the Vietnam War. He attended electronics school and served in Germany for two years, where he learned how to draw objects to scale and make charts.

Now a resident of Clarksville, before working for the museum, Van Hoesen's first job was doing construction for the Town of New Scotland.

However, Van Hoesen, who as a child treasured the works of Michelangelo and Leonardo DaVinci, wondered how he could incorporate his passion for art and carpentry skills he learned from his father, William E. Van Hoesen, into a practical job. As it turned out, the position at the AIHA was the perfect fit.

Van Hoesen said that while his love of artwork attracted him to the job, it's been the people he has worked with that had kept him there for so many years.

"The staff is tremendous," he said. "The people are the nicest people. Everyone that comes and goes is just super."

Upon retiring, Van Hoesen says he plans to spend more time on hobbies, like playing guitar, which he did in a local band many years ago called the "Helderberg Hillbillies" and doing artwork.

In the early 1970s, Van Hoesen won an award for "Best at the Fair" at the Altamont Fair for a door he carved out of birch wood.

As the for the AIHA, which held a goodbye breakfast for Van Hoesen last Wednesday, they have not found a replacement for him just yet, but agree it will be difficult to find one.

"Danny gets along with everybody. He's very conscientious, he's right there and you can always count on him," aid Rob Nilson, who was Van Hoesen's supervisor. "I hate to lose him."

Local farmers and their wares make weekly event special

By JIM CUOZZO

From homemade salad dressing to sunflowers or a dash of fresh basil and rosemary, the Tuesday farmers market in Delmar can be a refreshing place to visit on a warm summer day.

"I've been going to these markets for 24 years," said Melody Mesick of GEM farms in Schodack.

Sweet corn, squash, zucchini and onions are just a few of the items Mesick and her daughter Jessica pack in their truck before heading to Delmar each week.

"All these people that go to these markets know my kids," said Mesick. "One of my daughters just got married and so many people want to see the pictures."

The Mesicks are eighth-generation farmers whose one-time dairy farm is now home to bison and a vegetable farm. They frequent several area markets to sell their goods, and their weekly route takes them to the Delmar farmers market on Tuesdays, the Empire State Plaza on Wednesdays and the farmers market at the railroad station in Great Barrington, Mass., on Saturdays.

"It's hard work," Mesick said.

Doug Van Auken of Meadowlark Farms in Kinderhook sells cut gladioli, sunflowers and other fresh flowers each week.

"We grow them right on our farm," said Van Auken.

"Zinnias are popular, and so are Lisianthus," said Van Auken, who also brings his flowers to the Kinderhook Farmers Market on Saturdays.

Charles Curran of Curran Farms and Nursery in Latham was a social worker for 20 years before becoming a farmer in 1984.

"For the most part I enjoy it," said Curran who trucks in ornamentals, perennials and many fresh herbs, including rosemary and lavender.

"Later on in the summer, most of this will disappear, and it will become vegetables," said Curran.

Blue moon dressing, Honey-moon dressing and caliente dressing are brought in each week by Chaz Martel of Blue Moon Dressing and Marinade of Saratoga Springs.

"It's very popular, and the popularity is growing each year," said Martel, who had his first encounter with the salad dressing about six years ago when he lived in Selkirk.

"My dance partner introduced me to my current wife, Lisa, who makes the recipe," said Martel. "She courted me with the recipe."

The Blue Moon Honey Moon dressing is made with honey produced by one of five beehive locations Martel looks after in Selkirk, Halfmoon, Greenfield, Niskayuna and Schuylerville. "This year, about 100 pounds will be produced from the hives," said Martel.

Carey

Now the Careys are looking for assistance from the community. Michael Carey is dissolving his Solo Auto Sales business on Delaware Avenue in Delmar and establishing The Jonathan Carey Foundation on the site.

"We know Jonathan is in heaven and what we believe is that a lot of good can come from this," said Michael Carey, who believes many parents endure the same frustrations the Careys felt when trying to find out what was happening to their son at the Anderson School in Staatsburg in 2003.

It was at that school the Careys believe their son was being neglected and abused in what school officials termed was an "intense programming" of behavior modification for the child. Because of the Careys' fight, the state Commission on Quality Care (CQC), and the Office of Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities (OMRDD) began their own investigation, but all records were sealed. Jonathan's Law now allows access to investigative records and reports regarding disabled children's safety at all state-run or private facilities.

"Mike Carey has shown tremendous drive and courage by turning the tragic death of his son Jonathan into positive changes in state law. I also commend Mike for his decision to become a public advocate and to increase public awareness and education about the challenges faced by the mentally disabled and their families," said Bruno.

Instead of the job being over, it is just beginning for Michael and Lisa. They will now run the day-to-day operations of The Jonathan Carey Foundation and with a budget of zero dollars, their first money will come from a 5K run and walkathon fundraiser scheduled for Saturday, Sept. 29, at the Elm Avenue Park in Delmar.

"I just feel strongly God is calling us into this, so I believe he will take care of us," Carey said.

The foundation will accept charitable contributions and the mission is far-reaching. Not only will the Careys try to advocate for disabled children, but they will also try to assist orphans and children who are abandoned or abused.

"Our goal is to help as many vulnerable children as possible and to raise awareness of the scope of problems in residential, private and state-run facilities," said Carey.

An informational meeting will be held Thursday, Aug. 23, at 7 p.m. at the Bethlehem Community Church on Elm Avenue to answer questions the community may have about The Foundation.

Meanwhile, a lawsuit by the Careys against the Anderson School is still in the early litigation stages. An amendment to Jonathan's Law in July allowed the Careys to retroactively receive information from the 2004 state investigation regarding their son's treatment at the school.

"We got our records, and they are very revealing of what happened at the Anderson School and what the state is doing to cover up child abuse," said Carey.

The Jonathan Carey story is the subject of a People Magazine feature in August highlighting not only Jonathan but also the story of another 12-year-old child in Miami, Fla., who died from being restrained by employees of a health-care facility.

"In that case, there were no arrests, and they told the mother she has to wait one year for autopsy results," said Carey.

Carey believes the system is corrupt and records of investigations were sealed because of the fear of lawsuits from parents.

"They try to make a very dangerous system look safer than it is," said Carey, referring to the state agencies that oversee the quality of care for the developmentally disabled.

State Assemblyman Tim Gordon, I-Slingerlands, said the Careys have brought more attention to the issue of autism and cases that are similar to their own.

"Their story has impacted legislators in a way where a network has developed that has crossed party lines," said Gordon. "There is a great need for what the Careys are offering with their foundation."

Nadeem Mall, one of the two men involved in Jonathan Carey's death, pleaded guilty on Monday, July 30, to criminally negligent homicide and will serve the next six months in jail in a plea bargain agreement. Mall is expected to testify against co-defendant Edwin Tirado, who is charged with fatally restraining Carey on the two workers' 90-minute ride shopping while in an O.D. Heck vehicle. Both Michael and Lisa Carey were inside the courtroom when Mall pleaded guilty.

"We were hoping and praying Nadeem Mall would accept the plea bargain offered to him, but we were surprised," said Carey. "We feel very strongly he did the right thing owning up to his part."

Mall has been fired by O.D. Heck while Tirado, who awaits trial, is on unpaid leave. Carey said there are many difficult moments knowing their son Jonathan is gone, but the Careys' 9-year-old Joshua helps the family cope.

"Sometimes we get overcome with grief, and he encourages us," said Carey. "He has incredible faith."

Contributions to The Jonathan Carey Foundation can be sent to 90 Delaware Ave., Delmar 12054. Information is available at www.jonathanslaw.org.

"I got run over charging the ball and they called runner interference," said Blalock, whose favorite player is New York Yankee shortstop Derek Jeter.

The team's 15-man roster received a rousing sendoff Friday, Aug. 3, outside town hall with a police escort all the way to the state Thruway for the 12-car caravan going to the Mid-Atlantic Regional.

"It's fun," said Nick Hodom, outfielder and catcher, on Friday as he relaxed in the back seat of one of the cars listening to music before the team hit Medford for the first game later in the day.

The Eastern New York Babe Ruth League comprises teams as far north as Plattsburgh and as far south as Fishkill. The last time a local Babe Ruth Team won the World Series was in the 1970s when the Rotterdam team was crowned champions. The Bethlehem Babe Ruth team will play in a 10-team tournament against teams from Delaware, north and south New Jersey and metropolitan New York.

"We're confident how well we can do down there," said Frese. The winner of this weekend's tournament will play in the Babe Ruth World Series in Virginia later this month.

"This is a bunch of kids that came together and worked hard as a team and put their talents together," said town Supervisor Jack Cunningham, donning a Bethlehem Babe Ruth baseball cap and wishing each player good luck as he walked from car to car in the caravan.

Rick Hartunian is manager along with coaches Peter Baynes and Frese. This year's Bethlehem Babe Ruth team has two titles and an 8-win 2-loss record before heading into the tournament.

person has drastically been improved," said Paul Silva.

More than 10 years ago, Silva found himself on the transplant list for a new liver. His own liver had been severely damaged by Hepatitis C, a blood virus. In the 14 months that he moved up the list, his health bottomed out.

"It was after I had gone into a coma," Silva said of the time he finally got a new liver. "If I didn't get a transplant really soon, I was going to die."

His transplant was successful and although he is required to take small daily doses of immunosuppressants, he knows that is a small price to pay for the "blessing" he was given of a second chance at life.

"Some of the things I have seen since my transplant are high school graduations, college graduation and the birth of grandchildren. Without my transplant, that would not have been possible," he said. "It doesn't just affect me, it affects my family."

Kathleen Arduini of Delmar knows firsthand the benefits of being a family member of a recipient. Her father was a two-time organ recipient. "I had a father my whole life growing up because of organ donation," she said.

Her father was able to see her through many of life's milestones, including school graduations and her wedding day.

"My husband, Anthony, and my father were very close," said Arduini, adding that her father died within years of the wedding. It was that relationship that came to the forefront when Arduini was faced with her choice about donating Anthony's organs last May.

"My husband had a brain bleed. He was healthy one moment and all but gone the next," she said. Bethlehem Police Officer Anthony Arduini was 53 when he collapsed in his driveway after his regular evening walk.

"That's the problem with organ donation," said Arduini. "It always happens to people who have a tragedy. You are already in shock and overwhelmed. You are being asked to make a gift and donation when it is nearly impossible."

Arduini suggested that people and their families take the time to talk about organ donation before the need arises. She said it is important for families to know how their loved one feels about it.

"If you say no, it is too late," she said, noting that time is of the essence. "There is some therapy and comfort after your own pain eases."

She said that although she and Anthony had never had the conversation, she felt it was something he would have wanted her to proceed with. Arduini said Anthony adored her own father and would want to give that same gift to other families if he could.

"He was the absolute best," she said of Anthony. "He spent his whole life helping people."

Anthony Arduini had been a police officer for three decades when he died.

"I couldn't save my husband's life, but somebody is alive today because of our decision to donate," Arduini said.

Arduini has spent nearly a year corresponding with a transplant recipient who received one of Anthony's kidneys. Arduini and Silva both say the process of donation is very confidential with letters and notes being passed through the CDT and screened by their staff.

Quinn and Silva reiterate Arduini's insistence that the discussion of organ and tissue donation be held with family members long before you ever expect to have to act on it.

"If you think you are a donor but haven't discussed it with your family, you're not," said Silva. Family members have the ability to limit which organs and tissues are harvested. In New York, and many other states, regardless of whether a person has filled out donor cards, medical personnel typically seek family permission to harvest organs

"That's the problem with organ donation ... you are being asked to make a gift and donation when it is nearly impossible."

and tissue. Families often find it easier to agree to the donation knowing that their loved one has researched it and agreed to be a donor prior to their death. Quinn said families typically do not go against their loved one's desire to donate.

"It's the last thing they can do for their loved ones," she said. While the state is working on changing the legislation, Quinn said it is still important for people to sign up as donors. The CDT offers an easy online sign-up that will add the donor to a national database. Silva said emergency rooms are mandated to check the database at the time of a patient's death. In addition to CDT's online sign up, residents can use their driver's license as a means to indicate their intentions to be a donor.

For people like Silva and Arduini, the value of organ donation cannot be adequately expressed. Ten years later, Silva is still a regular speaker and volunteer for the CDT.

"Some gifts are so valuable you can never stop paying back for them," Silva said.

Starting at the top: There are alternatives to hair loss

By JENNIFER FARNSWORTH
news@spotlightnews.com

When 52-year-old Eugene Rocco was diagnosed with alopecia, it didn't seem too devastating. He was bound to be bald in a family of men with receding hairlines. He took the diagnosis with a little bit of curiosity and a big shrug. Most cases of alopecia affect children under the age of 20, though, and to them it's a much bigger deal. For young children who lose their hair to alopecia, cancer or another condition, baldness doesn't have to be permanent, it's just a matter of knowing what the options are.

You may know of someone who has donated his or her hair to make a human hair wig. The largest organization today that collects hair is "Locks Of Love" based in Florida. Founded in 1997 by Florida native Madonna Coffman, who had developed alopecia, the group collects human hair and creates wigs. One major misconception is that Locks of Love deals with cancer patients. They primarily work with alopecia patients because of the permanent condition. In most cases, children undergoing chemotherapy will grow their hair back and only need wigs, or hair prosthetics, temporarily.

Locks Of Love is a nonprofit organization that provides the hairpieces to financially disadvantaged children. The wigs are custom-made, including the fitting. The wigs are so well designed that children can wear them during athletic events, allowing them to maintain the same lifestyle they had before losing their hair.

According to the National Alopecia Aerate Foundation, more than 4 million Americans suffer from the disease, making groups like Locks Of Love invaluable.

This past winter, two teachers from Bradt Elementary School teamed up to raise awareness about the organization. First grade teacher Rita Cicchinelli and special education teacher Joanne Fuson organized a "hair drive" at the elementary school, and more than 60 volunteers cut off at least the qualifying minimum amount of 10 inches. Fuson said it takes at least six donations to make just one wig. The Rotterdam teachers brought in enough hair to create 10 wigs for "Locks Of Love." The donations came from children and adults from the community. Fuson said it was a very emotional day for all those involved.

LEFT, Amelia Sobieski, 5, holds her ponytail after it was cut off for Locks of Love. The organization makes wigs for children with hair-losing diseases. Over 50 people donated hair to Locks of Love at Bradt Elementary School last winter. RIGHT, Jasmine Lancey, 6, Cheyanne Lancey, 6, and Angelica Lancey, 10, show off their new 'dos after donating their hair.

Jessica Harding/Spotlight

"People knew just what it meant to have their hair cut off, they knew it was going to help build the self esteem of children who may be suffering emotionally. We had a gentleman come in on his lunch hour. He had grown his hair specifically for the project. Many of us were in tears," said Fuson.

Fuson said she and Cicchinelli both needed a haircut, got to talking and then the idea stemmed from there.

"We had one amazing parent who was donating for the third time. We had mothers and daughters making it a family affair," said Fuson.

Most of the wigs are donated to young girls, although boys may receive them as well. To apply for a wig, you can speak with your health-care provider or visit www.locksoflove.org.

Receiving a wig for temporary hair loss, as in the case of hair loss due to chemotherapy, is somewhat of a different process. There is a lot of accessibility through cancer care programs, such as To Life, based in Delmar. Services offered like those through To Life offer synthetic wigs to patients who have temporary hair loss. Ann Krischner, director of support services at To Life, said although To Life's mission is primarily focused on breast cancer education and support, all women are welcome to shop for wigs and other head coverings, for any reason.

To Life's boutique, Abracadabra, has two locations; one at To Life's headquarters at the Four Corners in Delmar and one at the Mollie Wilmot Radiation Oncology Center in Saratoga Springs. Krischner said that how women feel about their physical appearance affects their recovery process. Many support facilities offer comprehensive wig packages that include wig styling, head shaving and wig care education.

"It's important to know where to start," Krischner said. "When diagnosed with cancer, a lot of women are overwhelmed with all of the possibilities and concerns. It's comforting to find a place that can guide you and educate you."

Another source of assistance when opting for a synthetic wig is hair salons. Jean Paul Hair Salon in Albany offers customized wigs that are a blend of synthetic and human hair. Private consultations are available with Donna Samarotta, wig specialist and hair loss and thinning consultant. She said salon workers understand the emotional stress of losing your hair.

"We are hear to help and listen to the needs of women who want a product that will help them feel a little bit better," said Samarotta.

Another major concern is, of course, the price of wigs. Many health insurance plans will cover a certain amount for hair loss due to a medical condition. Insurance companies recognize alopecia as a medical condition, something they once did not do. Some wigs can cost up to $5,000 so it's important to first see how much your plan allows.

Whether or not you are looking to donate or receive a wig there are a lot of resources in the Capital District.

Kathy Camardo of Altamont said when her daughter, 13-year-old Kelly donated her 12 inches of strawberry blond hair it was a positive learning experience.

"We found a salon who participated and knew the guidelines for Locks Of Love. It was an easy way to give to others," said Camardo.

Edward Jones gets SmartMoney honor

The financial services firm Edward Jones again was named the No. 1 full-service brokerage firm in the August edition of SmartMoney magazine, according to Frank Marchesini, a financial adviser in Albany.

Edward Jones, which ranked No. 1 in 2005 as well, received five-star ratings in client statements and customer satisfaction.

In addition to its own research, SmartMoney used a customer-satisfaction survey from J.D. Power and Associates, a trust survey from Forrester Research, a review of customer statements from Dalbar and stock-picking performance reviews from several equity research companies to determine the rankings.

Edward Jones provides financial

Firehouse fix-up running weeks behind schedule

Renovation tackles mechanical, electrical and plumbing issues

By ARCANGELA C. MELE
melea@spotlightnews.com

Although renovations for the Voorheesville Fire House are nearly complete, the project is weeks behind schedule and will not be finished by its original deadline of Wednesday, Aug. 1.

Why the delay?

Within the past few years, the nearly 50-year-old building has experienced major mechanical, electrical and plumbing problems. The main boiler system had been malfunctioning for about five years, and a new heating system is in the process of being put in, as well as air conditioning, which the building never had. The building also never had a sprinkler system, which was recently put in as well as an upgrade in the fire-alarm system.

The Voorheesville board of trustees and fire fighter also came to a consensus that the department had outgrown the building, and extra space for storage, offices, meeting and voting rooms was needed. According to Fire Chief Frank Papa, the auxiliary office,

"Were not looking for a castle or anything too fancy, just something functional."

fire room and radio room were squeezed into two very small spaces.

While the original amount approved by the board last year to renovate the firehouse came close to $2 million, according to Jack Stevens, a board of trustees member and former mayor of Voorheesville, the amount was cut to less than $1 million by voters for tax reasons.

"In a perfect world it would have been great, but it would significantly raise our taxes," Stevens said of the original renovation proposals.

Therefore, with less money to work with, the board narrowed its focus to fixing the major problems: the interior and exterior bays where equipment is stored, insulation of overhead doors and the exterior entrance doors, and the installation of a complete heating system, as well as some painting and plumbing.

Papa said the majority of the project is complete, and that they were just waiting to tie up a few loose ends.

"Were not looking for a castle or anything too fancy, just something functional," he said.

However, Stevens expressed some concern about the progress of the project. He said the contractor is continually running behind schedule, and completion dates are not being met.

"If you don't complete the work on schedule, you can be held liable," he said.

Stevens said he would bring up the issue to the board for further discussion.

Classical music's back at SPAC

Renown orchestra and soloists to perform

By NICHOLAS GRAZIADE
news@spotlightnews.com

For 42 years, the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra has come to enrich the artistic community of Saratoga Springs and Upstate New York with its music.

On Wednesday, Aug. 1, the orchestra began its three-week residency at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center with public performances by some of the orchestra's top musicians.

"We feel the direct connection between audience and artist is important," said Marcia White, SPAC's president and executive director.

SPAC's season with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra will feature an eclectic program that will allow many different tastes to enjoy a variety of music by the world-renowned orchestra.

On Tuesday, Aug. 2, the orchestra performed "Broadway Rocks," which showcases the works of many of Broadway's hit shows under the direction of celebrated conductor Erich Kunzel.

On Friday, Aug. 10, the performance will include Spanishinspired music by composers such as Rimsky-Korsakov and Chabrier, and will feature master bandoneon player Daniel Binelli.

Saturday, Aug. 11, is the first-ever family matinee, which features performances such as "Carnival of the Animals" by Saint-Saen, and selections from Disney's "Fantasia," as well as theatrical accompaniment by the Enchantment Theatre Company.

For the Thursday, Aug. 16, performance of Tchaikovsky's music, White said, there will be live cannons.

Soloists such as Yo-Yo Ma, Itzhak Perlman and Joshua Bell will be performing throughout the season.

The 17th season of the Saratoga Chamber Music Festival also takes place at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center's Spa Little Theatre through Sunday, Aug. 19. Performances by the Claremont Trio, the Tokyo String Quartet, will mark this festival.

With the 2007 season at the Saratoga Race Track in full force, SPAC enjoys a healthy relationship with the horseracing crowd.

"We have a direct link to people that are close to the racetrack," said White. "[We] grow our audience from the track."

Indeed, many of the founders of SPAC were horse owners and breeders. Famous sponsors, such as Marylou Whitney, continue to help support SPAC's artistic contributions.

"People at the track should be aware of the arts in Saratoga," White said. "We try to do joint promotions [with the track]. Bring your losing ticket to SPAC and you get $5 off admission."

Additionally, she said, "We very much want to promote family attendance with the orchestra as we did the ballet."

The New York City Ballet's season at SPAC ended July 21.

Aside from classical music, SPAC is also known for its pop performances. These concerts, which are sponsored by Live Nation, draw a large audience from all around. Although not officially part of SPAC's season (all the logistics and security are dealt with by Live Nation), these concerts nevertheless add to SPAC's unique character.

"I usually just go on the lawn," said Brittany Hedderman of Slingerlands, 19, who recently went to SPAC to see Kenny Chesney. "It is more of a social atmosphere."

What makes this aspect of SPAC special to Hedderman and her peers?

"It gives you the option to see bands that you would not be able to afford to see otherwise," she said. "It's good for high school and college students."

Shelter reopens

Two-day closure was the result of influenza scare

By GRAHAM S. PARKER
parkerg@spotlightnews.com

The Mohawk & Hudson River Humane Society reopened its doors to animal drop-offs and adoptions the morning of Thursday, July 26.

The shelter had stopped taking in and adopting animals for 48 hours when staff suspected canine influenza had stricken a dozen dogs under their care. Blood test results came back negative for the disease from Cornell's Veterinary School.

Canine Influenza is a contagious respiratory disease that can mirror signs of kennel cough, including sneezing, coughing, and fever. It requires veterinary medical attention. Nearly 100 percent of dogs that come in contact with the virus become infected, regardless of age or vaccination history. Of those infected, 20 percent show no signs of disease, according to University of Illinois College of Veterinary Medicine.

The scare was nothing more than kennel cough, a commonplace occurrence in kennels, said Brad Shear, shelter executive director.

"You don't always see cases as severe as we've seen. Luckily, the dogs all pulled through," he said.

The shelter's cat population, which dwarfs the dog population, was not affected by the illness.

Of the 45 dogs currently under the care of the facility, a quarter of them fell ill, said Shear. Of those 45, 14 were available for adoption Thursday, just in time for the peak days of the adoption week, the weekend.

The 48-hour closure was the right precaution to ensure dogs at the shelter and in the community were safe from a possible spread of the disease, Shear said, adding that he would do the same again if there was a threat of a similar disease.

At the time of the closure, the shelter was only accepting animals brought in by municipal animal control officers. Drop-offs of strays or unwanted animals were not permitted.

In two days, the shelter will typically see 10 new dogs come in, fewer than half of which are from animal control.

The closure was only a speed bump in an otherwise successful dog adoption and turnover rate at the shelter, said Tina Murray, shelter director of operations.

"It definitely slowed adoption rates down. We've been doing 20 to 25 dog adoptions a week. It's been very difficult, I mean that in a good way, to keep dogs on the floor," she said.

The shelter had to hold off on taking in five stray dogs from a Brooklyn shelter on Tuesday, July 24, due to closure. Those dogs, and others slated to arrive from other area shelters, were expected to be arriving soon.

Upon opening Thursday, Murray said the shelter would easily be able to get back into the swing of things.

"Thank goodness it (the

"Thank goodness (the outbreak) wasn't what we thought it was."

outbreak) wasn't what we thought it was," she said.

Since Murray started in November, she has not seen the dog kennels full yet.

All dogs available for adoption have been cleared by shelter veterinarians, including Henry the Chihuahua, a dog found recently by the Albany County Sheriff's Department stranded on a pylon in the middle of the Hudson River. The dog apparently braved the strong currents of the river and survived on the pylon for two weeks, said Shear.

To adopt an animal, or Henry, call the shelter at 434-8128 or visit the shelter at 3 Oakland Ave. in Menands.

IN BRIEF

Tips can help beat the heat

With the recent high temperatures, National Grid reminds customers that it is possible to keep cool without turning up the heat on your energy budget. The utility offers the following tips customers can use right away to beat the heat while conserving electricity:

- Draw blinds, shades, or drapes to block the sunlight during the hottest part of the day, especially on south- and west-facing windows.

- Cool things down by reducing the amount of heat generated in your home. Turn off lights when they are not needed, and avoid cooking, bathing or washing clothes during the hottest hours of the day.

- In the morning, open windows to capture the cool morning air.

- Electric fans use very little electricity — costing approximately $9 to $11 per month for continuous use — and can provide relief from the heat. In the morning and evening, window fans are especially useful in moving cooler air from outdoors into a home.

- Use the fan setting on your room air conditioner at night when the air outside is cooler, or open a window and leave the air conditioner off. Keep windows closed whenever the air conditioner is on.

- Check your air conditioner's filter, and replace or clean it if clogged.

For information on energy efficiency, customers can visit National Grid's Web site at www.nationalgridus.com/Energyefficiency.

Entertainment in the Spotlight

By ARCANGELA C. MELE
Melea@spotlightnews.com

The historic Altamont Fair will take place Tuesday, Aug. through Sunday, Aug. 19 this year, and the folks responsible for making it all come together worked extra hard to bring in a packed schedule of exciting entertainment for people of all interests and ages.

"Our focus has shifted a bit to improving the program and events that are happening at the fair, and the expense for these events has risen considerably," said Marie McMillen, the fair manager.

Last year, McMillen and the Altamont Fair Board of Directors, which is comprised of about 15 members, decided they wanted to bring some new musical acts to the grand stage. To secure the funding needed, the board put together a tight budget and held a few additional events at the fairgrounds throughout the year.

With the funding in place, the board was able to collaborate with Disney Radio to bring in the Jonas Brothers, an up-and-coming pop/rock band; The Outlaws; and Alex Torres and his Latin Orchestra. The Jonas Brothers, who are touring the country to promote their new album that will be released on Tuesday, Aug. 7, are scheduled to perform at the fair on Friday, Aug. 17 at 7 p.m.

The Outlaws, a southern rock group from Florida who are also touring and promoting a new album, have past hits such as "Sundown," "Green Grass" and "High Times." They are scheduled to perform Wednesday, Aug. 15, at 7 p.m.

Alex Torres and his Latin Orchestra, a huge local favorite known for their Afro-Caribbean rhythms and Latin jazz, are recipients of numerous awards and will perform Saturday, Aug. 18, at 7 p.m.

Other musical acts include The Refrigerators, Night Train, Good for the Soul, and Hair of the Dog, who will perform on various nights at 8:30 p.m.

Of course music isn't the only entertainment at the fair, and the program is packed with all of the traditional events that people have enjoyed for years.

The Animal Barns are perennial favorites, where animals are judged on breed, confirmation and production. The contestants also are judged on the quality and appeal of their animal products, which can be anything from wool accessories to baked goods.

The shows take place daily, and the champions get to compete at the state fair in Syracuse. This year, the entries for the contest are up a lot more compared to prior years.

family circus that dates back to the 1800s and features acrobatic feats, equestrian showmanship, canine capers, clowning and plenty of audience participation.

Then there is Doc Swan's strolling act. Doc is a magician who walks around the fair and surprises visitors with his tricks and gadgets. There's also Jason's Magic Tricks' giant frog jumping competition; and the famous Demolition Derbies.

The fair is also still taking entries for the scarecrow competition this year for the Catholic Charity Aids Council. Winners will receive a cash prize and a chance to showcase their scarecrows at the Apple Festival in September and the Albany Country Club's Annual Harvest Gala. Contestants will be judged on their scarecrows' originality, durability, and creative use of material.

If there is any reason to go to the Altamont Fair this year for many, it will be the chance to treasure local traditions and history.

One of these people is William Schultz, a retired Guilford State Police Officer who is one of about 200 volunteers the fair typically utilizes a year for maintenance work and administration.

Schultz said he enjoys browsing the museums at the fair that showcase artwork and artifacts that represent Albany, Schenectady and Greene counties.

Schultz is also a big fan of The Grange, where people can buy homemade goods from local farmers and connoisseurs instead of carnival food.

Of the overall experience of the fair, he said: "It's entertainment, but it's different from the mall or sitting in front of a TV or computer game. It's a chance to experience something you don't experience every day."

To get the full schedule of events for the Altamont Fair as well as admission prices, discounts, and coupons, visit the Web site at www.altamontfair.com.

That means more animals, more goods and fiercer competition.

Other returning acts include the Zoppe Circus, an Italian benefit other organizations," said VanDerzee. "Last year, we donated $1,000 to Mechanicville High School (to help fund their team when the district cut sports from its budget). We also use the money for trophies at Sectional and regional games and other things."

At the same time, the tournament allows coaches to gather what information they can about each others' teams.

"Football is starting next week (with practices), so discussions are already going on about who's going to be tough, the camps their players went to and how their teams are looking," said Sapienza.

Naturally, the coaches don't give too much information away. "You talk it over, but you never know until you see who comes out Monday (for the first day of practice)," said VanDerzee.

"I think at this point, most of the people here are experienced coaches. They work together at the camps," said Sapienza. "So, they're pretty forthright about what they've got."

Not that the coaches spend a lot of time talking football. They kidded each other about the shots they made and bantered about how their four-man teams were doing. Among the teams the other golfers kept their eyes on was defending champion Cambridge captained by former varsity coach Ken Baker and a quartet of high school football officials that were trying to win the tournament for the third time in eight years.

"None of the coaches were particularly happy when the officials won three years ago," said football official team member Ron Wotherspoon, a former Scotia resident now living in Lake George.

Baker's Cambridge team has dominated when the officials haven't won. VanDerzee estimates that Baker's group has won four or five of the eight previous tournaments.

"He and the Cambridge guys are pretty good golfers," said VanDerzee.

VanDerzee and his R-C-S teammates hoped to end Baker's reign, but things didn't go well for them over the first nine holes. By the turn, VanDerzee's team had shot a 2-under par 34, which put them in the hunt but not in the lead, even though they were on their home turf.

"We haven't taken advantage of the course knowledge," said VanDerzee.

The tournament isn't about winning or losing, though. It's about having fun and hanging out with friends old and new.

"It's a fun time to come out and relax before the season starts," said VanDerzee.

Strahan

He might consider returning for one more shot at a Super Bowl ring, but what are the odds that the Giants are good enough to get that far? Not nearly as good as the likes of Chicago or New Orleans, I can assure you. There are far too many question marks with Big Blue even if Strahan returns.

Other than those two reasons, I can't think of a good argument for Strahan to return. Whether he suits up or sits down, the Giants are still a better-than-average NFC team, which gets them into the playoffs but not necessarily a trip to Arizona for Super Bowl XLII.

And if Strahan retires, it opens the door for the Giants to acquire Simeon Rice without creating an odd-man-out situation on the defensive line. Rice takes over Strahan's position, and the defense is set for at least two seasons, which is likely one more season than what would be the case if Strahan returns. That would give the Giants — a franchise that traditionally favors stability over radical change — what they seek right now, a veteran presence on the defensive line that won't be distracted by outside thoughts.

In order for the Giants to make that move, though, I think Strahan has to retire first. Otherwise, there would be too much shifting of personnel in a short period of time, and whoever gets bumped from the defensive line to accommodate Strahan and Rice would have only a short period of time to learn a new position or get adjusted to sitting on the bench. You can't have that kind of turmoil going on just before the regular season begins.

So Strahan, if you want to do the right thing, please retire. You've done more than enough in your career. You deserve to leave the game with your health intact and with a great legacy that will live on long after you hang up your cleats.

Section II football coaches are a fraternity. Even when they leave the house, they reunite with the current members to have fun.

That was the theme at Monday's Capital District Football Coaches Golf Tournament at Ravena's Sycamore Country Club. Dozens of current and former Section II coaches gathered for a day of golf to raise money for membership in the National Football Foundation and College Hall of Fame.

"The thing I like most is getting out and seeing people," said Voorheesville coach Joe Sapienza. "It's always nice to see people you used to coach against and catch up with them."

"It's a great time for friends," added former Fonda-Fultonville coach Alex Mancini. "There's never a bad day on a golf course."

Burnt Hills-Ballston Lake's Bill Martin is better known as a boys basketball coach, but his career as the school's freshman football coach makes him a part of the fraternity.

"I know quite a few (football coaches), actually," said Martin, who was participating for the second year in a row. "It's a good time. It's always fun to get together in the middle of the summer."

The annual tournament is organized by Ravena-Coeymans-Selkirk coach and Section II coordinator Gary VanDerzee.

For team's sake, Strahan should retire

Michael Strahan says he's at a crossroads in his life, and he needs time to decide whether he wants to play or retire.

For the New York Giants' sake, I hope Strahan decides to retire and does it soon. It's really the best for both him and the team.

In a statement addressed to his fans, Strahan said that he started to have doubts about playing a 15th season and needed to take some time to ponder his future. "Anyone who plays in the NFL with doubts or second guessing is not only putting themselves at risk, but their teammates also," he wrote. "I will never do that."

Strahan has a point. The National Football League gridiron is not a place for the faint of heart. It's a violent world where, at any given time, a player can suffer anything from a concussion or a broken bone to a torn ligament or spinal cord injury. One false move, and you could be injured for life.

Yet, these athletes have to put aside any health concerns and take the field with the intent of doing their job well. That's something Strahan has been able to do for the last 14 years, and it's made him one of the best defensive linemen in league history.

But Strahan knows that the moment he starts thinking about what could happen to him on the field, that's when he becomes vulnerable to injury. That's why retirement has now become an option for him.

Luckily for Strahan, he doesn't have anything left to prove. He already has racked up enough impressive statistics to get him into the Pro Football Hall of Fame without delay. He holds the single season record for sacks with 22.5 in 2001. He's ninth on the all-time sacks list and is within three sacks of the team record set by Lawrence Taylor. He has sacked 60 different quarterbacks and has at least one sack against 28 of the 31 other NFL teams. The only thing he doesn't have is a Super Bowl ring, but neither does recent hall of fame inductee Thurman Thomas. It's unnecessary.

So, why shouldn't Strahan retire? Would it be to prove he is still a dominant player after missing half of the 2006 season with a foot injury? Perhaps, but it would only be an egotistical move at this point.
