A plan is in place for Schenectady County's homeless

By ROSS MARVIN
marvinr@spotlightnews.com

Rotterdam police got an unusual call on the morning of Thursday, Dec. 13.

"It was something I'd never heard of before," Rotterdam Police Lt. Michael Brown said later.

A driver of a County Waste vehicle had just picked up a dumpster in back of Hannaford Plaza on Altamont Avenue and dumped it into his truck. Along with the expected refuse, he saw a man fall from the dumpster and into his vehicle.

Police said the man was 45 years old, homeless and had been sleeping in the dumpster to stay out of the cold.

The man, whose name was not released by police, was uninjured in the incident. He was quickly rescued, questioned briefly and sent on his way by the fire and police department officials who aided him.

But where did the homeless man go when he was sent on his way, and was he aware of the many services available to Schenectady County's homeless?

According to data released by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development in 2007, there are 754,000 homeless people in America.

Now, consider the daily needs for these 754,000 people. They need food, even when they can't pay for it. They need clothing. They need shelter, even if that means sleeping in a doorway or in a dumpster.

And while Schenectady doesn't face the homelessness issues of cities like New York or Los Angeles, all homeless people share these same basic needs. For homeless people in Schenectady County, each day plays out like a struggle to survive.

"Survival is the No. 1 goal of a chronically homeless adult, especially one with mental illness," said Margaret Anderton, executive director of Bethesda House, a nonprofit organization that provides services to the homeless, the mentally disabled and working poor. Anderton is also a leading member of Schenectady County's Homeless Services Planning Board. The board recently released a 10-year county plan that vows to end homelessness in the area.

Supervisor's appointments don't sit well with one board member

By JIM CUOZZO
news@spotlightnews.com

Several appointments were made at Bethlehem's organizational meeting Wednesday, Jan. 9, with the selection of Daniel Plummer as deputy supervisor receiving the most attention.

Plummer recently left his position on the town board on Dec. 31 after serving for eight years.

Although the deputy position is traditionally held by a board member, Supervisor Jack Cunningham was quick to point out that Plummer's appointment is not a reflection of the skills of any existing town board member, saying the move adds "more depth to the town."

"Dan has been a valuable asset in my job, and he has agreed to do this at no cost to the town," said Cunningham.

Sam Messina, an Independence Party member and a veteran member of the town board delegation, argued that the deputy supervisor position is usually held by an existing board member and asked Cunningham to table the decision of Plummer's appointment to the next meeting. Cunningham then quickly cut off discussion, asking for a vote from the town board for Plummer, who was approved 4-to-1, with Messina dissenting.

"I wanted a dialogue instead of, 'This is the way it is going to be,'" said Messina.

Cunningham said he was unaware that any board member opposed Plummer's appointment until the meeting began. The supervisor also said that two members of the current town board expressed interest in the deputy

Body shop owner dies

Local businessman affectionately known throughout town as 'Tac'

By WILLIAM R. DEVOE
devoew@spotlightnews.com

Erwin Ungerer, known to friends, family and members of the community as "Tac," died Thursday, Jan. 3, at the age of 52 from melanoma.

Ungerer owned and operated T.A.C.S. ("The Auto Collision Specialists Inc.") Autobody service on Route 9W in Glenmont for the past 30 years.

What started as a two-garage body shop in 1978 has flourished into a service center with a 5,000-driver clientele — all due to Ungerer's hard work and congenial manner, said Ungerer's son, Matt Ungerer.

"He truly built that business from the ground up," Matt Ungerer said. "He liked to say that he met people by accident, but what drove him was that he wanted people to feel comfortable in an uncomfortable situation. No one likes to get in an accident, and my father wanted to make sure people got through the ordeal as easily as possible."

Ungerer was widely respected in the community, said Bethlehem Chamber of Commerce President Marty Delaney. Ungerer was a chamber member, as well as a supporter of Boy Scouts of America Troop 75 of Delmar.

"My impression was that he had a fantastic sense of humor," Delaney said. "Tac had a sharp wit, but he used it in a jovial man-

Two Selkirk men jailed on drug charges

Two Selkirk men were arrested by Bethlehem police on a variety of drug charges following a six-month investigation.

Freeman C. Noe, 35, of Cottage Lane, Selkirk, and Earl F. Fitzgerald, 46, of Locust Drive, have been charged with felony criminal sale of a controlled substance.

Noe and Fitzgerald were arraigned in Bethlehem Town

Court and sent to Albany County jail without bail.

Both were scheduled to return to Bethlehem Town Court on Monday, Jan. 14, after The Spotlight went to press, for a preliminary hearing.

The Coeymans Police Department assisted with the arrest. The investigation continues.

In other arrests:

• On Thursday, Jan. 10,

Bethlehem Police arrested Stephanie E. Wilson, 21, of 72 Herkimer Street, Apt. A, Albany, for aggravated unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle, suspended registration and operating an uninsured vehicle.

According to police, Wilson was stopped because of a broken tail lamp. It was discovered that Wilson was issued three orders of registration suspension, which she failed to answer.

The passenger in Wilson's vehicle, Traci Tamar Napier, 22, of 102 Madison Ave., Albany, was arrested for having an active bench warrant.

Both were taken to the Bethlehem police department for processing and released on $100 bail.

• On Friday, Jan. 11, Bethlehem Police arrested Anitra Shamonan Davis, 28, of 97 Lark Street, Apt. 3, Albany, for having an active bench warrant.

Acting on an anonymous tip, Bethlehem Police confirmed with Troy Police that Davis, who works at the Job Corps Center in Glenmont, had an active bench warrant issued for her arrest in Troy.

Davis was taken into custody from her place of employment without incident and transported to the Troy Police department for processing.

• On Sunday, Jan. 13, Bethlehem Police arrested Jesse Warren Ahearn, 29, of 65 Alden Court, Delmar, for criminal contempt, a Class-E felony, as well as unlawful imprisonment in the second, disorderly conduct and resisting arrest.

According to police, Ahearn was in a physical confrontation at the above address with a female that has a valid order of protection against him.

Police forcibly entered the residence, found the female in an upstairs closet and found Ahearn "in the basement, hiding in a portable closet."

When officers attempted to cuff Ahearn, he laid on his hands to resist, police said.

When he was detained, police transported Ahearn to Albany Medical Center for evaluation. No serious injury was found, and Ahearn was arraigned and sent to Albany County Jail in lieu of $2500 bail.

He is scheduled to return to Bethlehem Town Court on Friday, Jan. 18, for a preliminary hearing and has a return court date of Tuesday, Feb. 5.

Clarksville Elementary to create alumni tile wall

In recognition of the recent renovations, the PTA is looking to create an alumni tile wall.

Clarksville Elementary School is getting more than a facelift. After more than 38 years, the Bethlehem elementary school is undergoing its most wide-ranging renovations and additions since it was built in 1948.

To commemorate the changes, the PTA will create a tile wall to decorate the cafeteria and hallways.

The funds raised from the sale of the tiles will be used to outfit the cafeteria with state-of-the-art audio-video equipment.

Tiles will list the name of the alumnus and the year graduated from Clarksville and will be decorated with the Bethlehem eagle design. All alumni are invited to purchase tiles at $15 per tile (or $25 for two).

Doctor on volunteer mission

Slingerlands ophthalmologist treating people in Belize
By JILL U. ADAMS
news@spotlightnews.com

Like many who travel to the tropics for vacation, Paul Beer was struck by the poverty he saw all around him on trips to Belize. As he purchased a vacation property there, he started to think about how he could help.

Beer, a Slingerlands ophthalmologist, decided to start with what he knew: eye health and disease.

"That's what I do," he said. "It's the way I can contribute."

He sought local help to make contact with the San Pedro Lion's Club in Belize. He found a location where he could see patients and started his "Eye Mission" last April.

"One of the first patients I saw was blind from diabetes," said Beer. "She didn't even know she had diabetes."

Beer has recruited friends, family, and other physician to help his cause. This month, Dr. Ralph Sanchez and Dr. Eileen Joyce will accompany Beer to the Central American country to treat such eye problems as diabetic retinopathy, glaucoma, cataracts and tropical eye disease.

During past trips, volunteers have seen nearly 300 patients and performed a dozen cataract surgeries and laser treatments.

Paul Beer, a Slingerlands ophthalmologist, treats a patient in Belize.

The need for such services is common, but the availability of care is not.

Rebecca Donnelly, Beer's longtime office manager, has accompanied him on two previous trips. Beer trained her to screen patients for vision and for specific eye problems, including measuring the lens of the eye prior to cataract surgery.

Donnelly had never been to Central America before. Though poverty was evident near the resorts of San Pedro, it paled in comparison to what she saw when the mission was expanded to the mainland.

In Belize City, people don't have front doors or running water, she said. "It's certainly a different view of the country."

Donnelly visited elementary schools in Belize City to screen children, and found some who were completely blind and others with serious "low vision" issues.

"It's what people call the other side of paradise," said Beer.

Belize has only three working hospitals, and most Americans would not recognize them as such, said Donnelly. Further, residents don't have health insurance, said Beer. In addition to providing clinical care, his mission seeks to educate patients.

"I hope to be a fairly permanent, predictable presence in the country," said Beer.

Beer faces changing conditions, like the loss of the country's sole ophthalmologist. "He would do laser surgery and back-up care when the clinic left," said Beer.

Now there's no doctor for patients to see in between Beer's visits.

"The mission's objectives are ever-shifting," he said. "It depends on the changing situation."

Another difficulty is getting people in the country to make plans, as he tries to prepare a visit.

On the positive side, Beer has enjoyed practicing medicine in its simplest, most essential form, "without regulations, billings and insurance."

Donnelly adds that patients' appreciation is a great reward. "They couldn't thank us enough."

Panel to discuss school budget issues

Committee modeled after group used in redistricting process

The qualities of the redistricting process that served the Bethlehem School District and community – an open, transparent process and a committed citizen's committee – are a model for the upcoming 2008-09 budget process, according to board of education president James Lytle.

The Citizens Budget Group, a panel of parents and community members who work with district officials to learn about and offer input into the budget process, will begin meeting on Tuesday, Jan. 22.

This is earlier than the group began meeting last year, in an effort to ensure its observations and suggestions can be more fully developed when the board of education begins its 2008-09 budget discussions. The board will be discussing the formal charge to the group at its Wednesday, Jan. 16, meeting.

The Citizens Budget Group will be comprised entirely of representatives of each school PTA and other parent support groups, the Bethlehem Senior Center, the Progress Club, the chamber of commerce, the town of Bethlehem and high school student representatives. District staff members will assist the group wherever necessary, but will not be members.

"It is our hope that by working closely with committed citizens from a cross section of the community and the district, we will all bring our best thinking to the process and foster a greater understanding and awareness of the school budget in Bethlehem," Lytle said.

The board retains the sole authority for budget-making decisions in the district, but is committed to ensuring all parents and taxpayers have every opportunity to learn about, and offer input into, the 2008-2009 school budget. Each of the committee's meetings will be open to the public.

As with the redistricting process, information and materials about each meeting will be posted on the district's Web site, www.bcsd.k12.ny.us, so residents can follow the budget process as it takes shape.

These meetings will be held on Tuesdays, Jan. 22, 29, and Feb. 5 and 12, from 7 to 9 p.m. All meetings will be held at the Educational Services Center, 90 Adams Place, Delmar, except for Tuesday, Feb. 5 (Primary Day), when the meeting will be held in the Bethlehem Central High School Cafeteria. A joint work session with the Board of Education is scheduled for the meeting on Wednesday, Feb. 27.

The board will formally begin its budget discussions with the administration's proposed 2008-09 budget on Wednesday, March 5. School districts across the state will hold budget votes on Tuesday, May 20.

Putting a positive spin on roundabouts

By ROBIN SHRAGER SUITOR
news@spotlightnews.com

Life isn't linear, yet so many folks seem ruffled by roadway roundabouts.

Maybe it's because so many "circle" connotations are negative: Talking in circles. Circular logic. Dark circles under one's eyes.

Perhaps on a subconscious level, people feel roundabouts will lead them nowhere. Maybe entering a circle makes drivers feel like they are not making progress.

And yet, with a roundabout you are not stuck going in circles. There are usually at least two places to exit a roundabout and head off in a new direction.

I don't imagine that resisters truly believe that roundabouts are inherently evil. I think that people don't like change. Replacing a traffic-light controlled intersection with a roundabout is a big change. Installing a roundabout where there was no former intersection is an even bigger change.

People resist change even when it's for the better. They will choose the evil they know over the evil they don't know. Drivers loathe being stuck at a traffic light, especially when they can see it turn green several times without being close enough to pass through the intersection. And yet, when a roundabout is announced, some of these same drivers don't want to let go of those red, yellow and green signals.

Some drivers are confused by the roundabouts. Other drivers are annoyed by the roundabouts. Many more drivers are annoyed by the drivers who are confused by the roundabouts.

People don't know how to use the roundabouts, my husband told me after initial passes through the new ones near our home. This didn't surprise me in the least.

I have great sympathy for the confused roundabout drivers. This is because I clearly remember my first experience with a traffic circle. It was the Latham traffic circle. And although traffic circles and roundabouts are not synonymous, they share similar features.

Commentary:

From

The first time I ever drove on a traffic circle was during driver's education class in high school. The car belonged to the school. It was a sedan with a manual transmission. The stick shift was off the steering column. I didn't really know how to drive a stick-shift, nor did I know how to navigate a traffic circle.

There were four students plus the teacher in the car. The driver's education teacher was one of the most patient, laid-back people I've ever met.

I did not want to attempt a gear change on the traffic circle, so I kept my speed at a steady 15 mph and stayed in first gear. It felt like cars were coming at me from all sides, probably because cars WERE coming at me from all sides.

I maintained a phobia of the traffic circle for many years. Once my sister decided we'd meet for dinner at a restaurant that was literally just off the circle. I went around the circle three times before figuring out how to get into the restaurant parking lot.

In comparison to the traffic circle, the new roundabouts in Slingerlands are quite simple. Although, when I'm using the roundabouts I notice at least one driver, usually in front of me, who doesn't understand how the roundabout works.

Drivers entering the roundabout are stopping at the edge when they only need to yield. Drivers inside the roundabouts are yielding to entering traffic instead of taking the right of way.

People driving through Slingerlands are getting lots of roundabout practice. After a while the confusion will give way and the circular movement will flow like a well-choreographed ballet.

For the most part, I don't mind the roundabout-challenged drivers. The ones I've seen are just being cautious. Maybe the roundabouts are forcing people to think more about driving.

Traffic lights may provide signals to drivers, but the drivers don't always obey them. Back in driver's education class we saw a video about two drivers: "beat-the-green Jean" and "beat-the-red Fred." Jean's the type of driver who starts moving into the intersection just before the light turns green. And Fred is the type who speeds up at yellow lights trying to get through before the light turns red. Jean and Fred are the ones who slam into each other at the intersection.

I wonder what became of Fred and Jean. Do they know how to navigate roundabouts? Do they like change?

I confess that a few years ago I was irked by having to travel the new roundabout in Voorheesville. Prior to its construction, I was able to travel merrily in a straight direction without yielding to traffic. But with the roundabout I had to slow down and maybe even yield to other cars, depending on the traffic.

But I wasn't upset about the extra five seconds added to my trip. I just didn't like that the road to my childhood home looked different. I wanted to be able to "go home" to my parents' house and have all the surroundings look familiar.

I remember returning home from college one year and coming upon a traffic light that had not previously existed. My reaction was: What the...? Why didn't anyone tell me about the light?

I bet it had been in all the local papers, but I was out of town. Why didn't my parents tell me? Luckily, I'd had a few years driving experience and knew the proper procedure, but still, it was quite odd. This was the first traffic light in the village. Technically, it was just outside the village limits, but it was pretty close. So my shock wasn't, "Hey, there's a NEW traffic light." It was, "Is that actually a traffic light?"

Now there are even more traffic lights, plus a gazebo, and that new roundabout. I can hardly recognize the place.

So, complaining about new roadway patterns is just a roundabout way of saying "Change is scary."

Change, like roundabouts, can also be confusing, especially when people don't understand the reason for the change.

There are several new roundabouts quite close to each other. Instead of driving in circles, you have multiple options for driving in distorted figure-eight patterns. This disarms some people. My 11-year-old, however, is amused.

"Can we go the long way?" my daughter sometimes asks. The question comes as we are approaching our second roundabout on our way home.

Going "the long way" means we'll pass through a total of four roundabouts. Going the shorter way leads us through just three roundabouts and one traffic light. The longer route is not even a scenic route, and with the price of gas, I'm not interested in driving any extra miles.

Lucky for my daughter, my husband is usually driving and he obliges her. Ah, maybe it doesn't matter. It's possible that waiting at the traffic light on the shorter route uses up as much gas as driving the extra mileage on the longer route.

I hear that the roundabouts are working. I traveled through the area one morning at rush hour and there were no traffic backups. There was hardly any traffic at all. So, either the roundabouts are improving traffic flow or people are so afraid to drive the circles that they aren't coming out of their homes any more.

I'm pretty sure people are getting used to the roundabouts. Maybe drivers have recognized that circles have positive connotations. Circles represent continuity. There's the "circle of life." People have circles of friends. Sign a note with a circle and you've sent a hug.

Life is full of sharp turns. Drive safe and consider roundabouts a chance to take a break from those edgier moments.

Town expands senior outreach

New Scotland position goes full-time; first priority is transportation

By GREG HITCHCOCK
hitchcockg@spotlightnews.com

Susan Kidder's position as senior outreach coordinator with the town of New Scotland is now full time and, according to Kidder, it is much easier to handle.

"I started in January 17, 2005, as a part-time employee for two days, 14 hours a week," said Kidder, whose job is to coordinate programs, transportation and activities for New Scotland's seniors. "Up until March, I worked 21 hours because the town kept me on for longer."

Starting in January, Kidder's job will be full time, 35 hours a week.

Kidder serves a 52-square-mile rural town area with a population of 9,000, with approximately 3,000 seniors. She said her phone never stops ringing with requests.

"They need phone service, can I help? They need legal aid and cannot find information. They need a HEAP (Home Energy Assistance Program) application," she said. "All these things take time. It is not a matter of snapping your fingers and it's done."

Kidder said even though she has plenty to do, going full-time will make things easier for her.

"Because this was a part-time position my brain had to stop at 1:30 p.m. I had to go do another job to make ends meet as a bus driver for two and a half years," Kidder said. "Now I don't have to do that. If someone calls me, I can now follow through until it is resolved."

Added Kidder: "We can only grow from there."

Outgoing Supervisor Ed Clark said it is that growth he is concerned about.

He said the board should have moved more cautiously when they chose to expand the program during budget time, so the program could have a chance to design itself.

"These people are extremely isolated, so my main focus next year is to try to find some money through grants, through donations, through whatever means necessary, for a 14-passenger bus or van."

Susan Kidder

"I felt we were moving too fast," he said.

Clark agreed that there should be an outreach program for seniors, but the board went too far in budgeting more than $22,000 for the service -- $10,000 for a bus and an extra $12,000 for personnel -- for a program that should have been more carefully looked into.

Despite those concerns, there are big plans for expanding services to New Scotland seniors in 2008.

One of Kidder's first priorities is to provide reliable transportation for New Scotland seniors.

She said the town has no means of transportation, currently relying on Community Caregivers, based in Altamont, to get seniors to and from appointments. Community Caregivers only covers homes north of Route 443, the southern end of town being much more isolated.

"These people are extremely isolated, so my main focus next year is to try to find some money through grants, through donations, through whatever means necessary, for a 14-passenger bus or van," Kidder said.

The money raised would supplement the $10,000 already set aside to go toward the $15,000 to $16,000 cost of a new transportation vehicle.

Kidder then plans to recruit a core of volunteers who will drive the van.

She said the town of Bethlehem has been very generous and has offered her help and advice based on their experience with an established fleet and well-oiled machine of volunteers.

"They have figured out what works, and we will take advantage of that," Kidder said.

Downed tree causes power outage

Several Delmar residents lost power shortly before noon on Wednesday, Jan. 9, when a tree fell across lower Winne Road near Hawthorne Avenue and Darroch Road.

No injuries were reported as crews from both National Grid and Delmar Fire Department were called to the scene.

The downed tree also snapped a National Grid power line about 100 feet from the tree causing power outages along Winnie Road, Delaware Avenue and Adams Street.

Power was restored to most of the area by 1 p.m.

Matters of Opinion in the Spotlight

A home of their own

In Spotlight Newspapers' page one story, "No place like home," our reporter Ross Marvin writes about how homelessness is being addressed in Schenectady County. While he has focused on that county, we know that efforts are under way in Albany and Saratoga counties. We hope we say it often enough: The best thing about the communities we cover is the way that people care for one another.

We're pleased to learn that there are state programs to get people into homes and off the streets. Schenectady County has a 10-year plan to end homelessness in the area. Places like Bethesda House, the city mission and the Salvation Army have been plugging away at this problem for years.

Most of us feel financially tapped out and emotionally drained in the aftermath of Christmas. A lot of people do the bulk of their year-end giving around the holidays, and choose January to focus on self-improvement. But it's important to remember that as some of us are seeking to shed a few extra pounds, some of our fellow man is just looking to get through the night.

It's easy to cast aspersions and make assumptions about those who are homeless. Perhaps substance abuse has put them on the street; perhaps mental illness makes them people we fear; perhaps they throw away opportunities that many of us would long to have.

Looking back and blaming won't do much good. It's an old adage, but we really shouldn't judge others until we've walked a mile in their shoes. Better to think about an effective way to move forward.

Seeing people in dire situations should make those of us with warm shelter and clothing count our blessings ... and maybe share them, too.

Could we spare a few dollars from our paycheck to donate to a place that could keep somebody warm and dry, just for a night?

Are there old clothes and boots lurking in an overstuffed closet that could keep somebody warm and dry, maybe for more than a night?

Do we have a few hours to help Habitat for Humanity, a city mission, or an organization we're impressed with?

Ross Marvin's article provides some phone numbers and Web sites; a phone call or a click now might keep somebody warm and dry — just for a night.

School takes learning into future

By DAN LIEBERT
news@spotlightnews.com

The writer is the principal of Tech Valley High School and a Delmar resident.

At Tech Valley High School, we are approaching the end of our first semester, and a second milestone is in the wings: On Feb. 1, applications for our second class of freshmen (2008-2009) are due from interested eighth-graders. Tech Valley High is located at Pitney Bowes MapInfo (formerly the MapInfo Corporation) in the Rensselaer Technology Park, Troy. We are a joint venture of Questar III and Capital Region BOCES, and we have captured the attention of students, parents, teachers and leaders from business, higher education, organized labor and government.

Many of us recognize the promise of this school and know it is a school worth looking into. I have two great beliefs: I believe in the capacity of young people to do great things for themselves and the communities they live in, and I believe in the capacity of public education to respond to the needs of its citizens and its workforce.

The first semester of developing Tech Valley High School has given me even more evidence for these fundamental beliefs. This September, Tech Valley High School enrolled its first class of students: 40 freshmen from 35 school districts in the Capital District. These students represent a diverse student body that is meeting the demands of a challenging academic program, developing 21st century skills, such as collaboration, teamwork, communication, and presentation skills, and preparing for their futures in universities and the workplace.

The school is being developed with significant input from businesses and colleges, from public school districts, and from the two BOCES that are responsible for its creation. These partners have been in universal agreement that public education needs to respond to changing technologies, workplaces and cultural influences.

Tech Valley High School is committed to being an incubator of change, a place where new approaches to secondary education are being developed in order to meet some of the changes we are facing as citizens and workers. Evidence of success this fall includes the development of challenging project-based student work that has incorporated the input of Tech Valley businesses, colleges and community partners.

Our projects have deeply engaged students in higher order thinking that requires them to work and think in interdisciplinary ways — one of the hallmarks of 21st Century learning. Our focus at Tech Valley High is on creating a learning community committed to continuous improvement and innovation. In addition to developing challenging student work, Tech Valley High is utilizing a one-to-one student-to-networked-computer environment where students use computers to document all of their work, maintain communications with their collaborative team members and keep up with their grades and evaluations.

The staff at Tech Valley High, now known for full use of the technology tools they have available, has created a shared approach to developing the crucial skills of written and oral communications. We work together — parents, students, teachers and the community — to focus on meeting the academic, social and personal needs of our students so they can become successful leaders of future generations.

I encourage you to read more about Tech Valley High School on our Web site and consider attending one of our information sessions where details about Tech Valley High will be addressed. TVHS curriculum is based in project-based learning (PBL) that brings together intellectual inquiry, rigorous real-world standards and student engagement in relevant and meaningful work.

Many schools offer project-based learning experiences for their students, but Tech Valley High School is unique because students are thoroughly immersed in it. One aspect is Tech Valley High School's unprecedented partnerships with leaders from area businesses, technology companies, higher education, organized labor and government. They were involved in shaping the school, continue to be participants and collaborators in the educational program and are helping develop the project-based learning experiences, in cooperation with educators.

Why project-based learning? The best starting point for learning is with real, genuine issues of importance to students and communities. Active, concrete experience, driven by the "need to know," is the most powerful form of learning. Adolescents learn best when they encounter intriguing topics and people in real-world situations, and when they are faced with genuine challenges, choices and responsibility for their own learning.

Thus, at the heart of Tech Valley High School's course of study are real, rich and complex problems and issues that involve learning 21st Century skills — all wrapped into project-based learning experiences.

How does project-based learning offer academic challenge? Student retention of their learning increases as they have opportunities to work on complex problems beyond repetition and review. PBL offers students multiple opportunities to apply their learning in new situations where the answer is not obvious — where students are confronted with challenges that have no clear answers, where they must solve unforeseen problems and meet unpredicted obstacles.

PBL requires teachers to cover fewer topics in greater depth with the goal of developing a deep understanding of subject matter that scientists, technology companies and business leaders in Tech Valley say is needed in our high school graduates. Learning at Tech Valley High requires students to master the subject matter necessary for traditional Regents exams but also requires them to develop the skills to meet the rigorous requirements of working in a technology-rich, intellectually complex and personally challenging world.

What are 21st century learning skills? These are the skills students will need to succeed in a global, 21st century environment. Over and over again, business leaders, college faculty and employers are saying that students need a set of skills they are not seeing in their students and employees. Therefore, TVHS is focusing on developing some of these skills in our students, including taking initiative and becoming "lifelong learners," working successfully on a team, taking responsibility for their work and their learning, confronting and solving unforeseen problems, managing and planning for short- and long-term goals, and presenting and defending what they have produced.

Tech Valley High School is committed to developing a first-rate academic program for its students, innovating creative approaches to secondary education and to sharing our learning with the region and beyond. As we develop our program, I look forward to working with our young people at TVHS, sharing our learning with the region, and working to better prepare our students for the future.

Your Opinion in the Spotlight

Writer remembers Iraq-war victims

Editor, The Spotlight:

I am writing regarding the letter in last week's Spotlight from the representative from Bethlehem Neighbors for Peace. I can't help myself, I have to write this.

My family and I live in a town where we have at least two heroes who lost their lives for their country in Iraq, Shawn Martin and Timothy Moshier. These two are heroes and their families should feel such pride that their sons chose to defend their country. There are heroes over in Iraq defending your very right to protest every Monday night at the Four Corners, or to speak out for or against the government.

I find it repulsive and despicable that this organization actually gave financial aid to suspected terrorists' families. How quickly we forget the thousands of lives that were lost in senseless and barbaric acts of terrorism on Sept. 11; not to mention the thousands of rescue/recovery workers who put their own lives in danger by trying to help find closure for the families by digging for almost a year in the pile at Ground Zero. Wouldn't that money have been better spent to support those families and children who are left to suffer the loss of a loved one who is gone forever? Perhaps the silent majority of those who support our military's efforts should stand at the Four Corners on Tuesday nights holding pictures of those innocent people who were killed on 9/11.

As one local Marine once said, "I do what I do so that you can do what you want to do." May God bless our troops and our country.

Winter offers broader view

Editor, The Spotlight:

With winter here, and the leaves off the trees, it's amazing what you can see throughout Bethlehem. The waterfall on the Vroman Kill behind the Lawanick home and the charming Hayfield on Feura Bush Road are just two examples.

Winter is the ideal time to enjoy a heated trolley tour of Bethlehem and to see its historic homes and farms, businesses and boat landings that are especially visible this time of year.

In conjunction with the Albany Trolleys, several tours are planned with myself and Kathy McCarthy, editor in chief of Spotlight Newspapers, giving the tours, offering an overview of Bethlehem history as we point out our town's many historic areas along the way.

Bethlehem enjoys a rich and varied history. While it became a town in 1793, Native Americans utilized its resources for thousands of years. Henry Hudson's arrival in 1609 was soon followed by Brant Peelan, who may be considered Bethlehem's first resident. Peelan occupied a farm on Westlo Island in 1634. More settlers followed and Bethlehem soon became a thriving farming town. The advent of the Albany-Susquehanna Railroad Line in 1863 brought many changes by providing easy access to the city of Albany.

These upcoming historic tours wind through the hamlets of Delmar, Slingerlands, Elmsmere, Glenmont, Cedar Hill and Van Wies Point—covering history from 6000 B.C. to 2008.

Tour dates are Jan. 29, Feb. 8, 19 and 23, March 14 and 18, and April 6. Details are available online at www.albanyaquaducks.com. Reservations can be made through that Web site or by calling 462-3825.

The tours are made possible by the Town of Bethlehem, Bethlehem Historical Association, Bethlehem Chamber of Commerce, Perfect Blend, and Albany Aqua Ducks and Trolleys.

Do plan to join us! What a journey it will be!

Laugh and learn: Comedy course can help in life, work

GRAHAM S. PARKER
parker@spotlightnews.com

Why not round out your adult education curriculum with a crash course in stand-up comedy?

It may be just the edge you need to get in on the home inspection business, bartending, or becoming a part-time notary-signing agent. All are low-cost learning opportunities offered by the Knowledge Network.

The stand-up comedy workshop is the latest course the 26-year-old organization is offering. Local comedian Greg Aidala is teaching it.

"I wanted to do something really different. I thought that since I started seven years ago, over the years of playing club shows, I would get e-mails from people looking to get into stand-up. 'Do you have a recommendations,' they'd say," said Aidala.

After years of providing one-on-one instruction in seven years ago.

Gill agreed to run Aidala's workshop in March and even featured the comic on the Knowledge Network's winter newsletter.

"These kinds of programs are really good. You can't find them on the Internet. It's perfect for us, just a base introductory course, and Greg is really passionate about it," said Gill.

"Whether you are starting a comedy career, living out a fantasy or just want to conquer your fear of speaking in public, Greg Aidala's comedy workshop is sure to be one of the highlights of your life," reads the course description.

But Aidala's intentions run deeper than that. He knows not all people who sign up and come will go on into the world of stand-up. They will Aidala's course isn't out of the ordinary for Knowledge Network, said Gill. The network offers courses such as Get Assertive, Four Week Acting Workshop and Getting Started as an Actor. The courses are certainly for people interested in getting started in those fields or bettering themselves, but they also piggy back other state certification programs as well. For others, it's as simple as learning something new. Something Gill likes to think the network specializes in.

"Learning for the sake of learning in a safe environment where you are not sold stuff," said Gill.

In the first week since publicizing the workshop, eight people have signed up. They can sign up until the day before the class starts on Tuesday, March 14. The class will run March 4, 11, and 18 from 7 to 9 p.m. The course fee is $55 and $45 for Knowledge Network members. Classes will be held at the Knowledge Network building at Central and Holland avenues.

Aidala's workshop will feature the basic mechanics of stand-up, including how to write a joke, learn the art of conversation, and how to land stage time. There will be hands-on training with Aidala and a performance by the students during the last workshop at a local club.

To register for the course or learn more about the Knowledge Network call 452-2675, Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. or e-mail, learn@knowledgegenetwork.org.

Teen book group not just for girls

BookShare, an outgrowth of our former mother-daughter group, is a way for 'tweens and teens of either sex to share the experience of a good book with significant adults in their lives: moms or dads, older siblings, caregivers, grandparents, aunts or uncles. Opening the group to both boys and girls has broadened the range of discussion, allowing viewpoints across both gender and generations.

Tonight, Wednesday, Jan. 16, at 7, the group will talk about Phyllis Reynolds Naylor's "Blizzard's Wake," a tale of physical survival and emotional struggle set against an actual event — the famous North Dakota blizzard of 1941. Adventure and character contribute to its appeal for both boys and girls.

"It's actually easier to pick books for discussion that both boys and girls enjoy," said teen librarian Reagan Silva. "Whatever the gender of the protagonist, boys and girls are looking for a story they can relate to, a character that encounters and solves problems similar to their own."

Teens also appreciate a particular brand of humor found in a lot of teen literature. Take for example "Al Capone Does My Shirts" by Gennifer Choldenko — the selection for the group's first meeting last fall. Alcatraz Island in the 1930s was actually home to the prison's guards and other employees. Moose Flanagan, son of one of the guards, has to deal with his own anxieties and also the high jinks of the warden's daughter. The book is a funny and fascinating look at an unusual situation.

"Teen literature has really taken off in the past eight years," said youth services department head Christine McGinty. "The overall quality of the work is so much better than even five years ago."

Whatever the choice of book, the aim is to provide an enjoyable way into serious discussion about issues teens are thinking about.

"We tend to select contemporary teen literature, to keep it relevant and also to separate our choices from books in the standard school curriculum. We want to encourage reading as recreation-reading for the fun of it," McGinty said. "One of a teen group's favorite discussion points is, 'What happens next?'" Silva said.

Speculation about what's in store for the character after the book's end is more than an exercise of the imagination; it also develops understanding of a particular character in the context of a particular setting. BookShare is truly that — a sharing.

"It's a great way for family members to connect with new ways of looking at things," McGinty said.

Coming up

On Wednesday, Feb. 20, at 7 p.m., the group will talk about "Bud, Not Buddy" by Christopher Paul Curtis. This Newbery award winner features a 10-year-old boy, orphaned during the Depression, who sets out in search of the man he believes is his father. Sound a little like Charles Dickens? It is, in the best sense: full of humor and hope.

Copies of the book are available at the library. Call 439-9314 for more information and to sign up.

Tentative future plans include a "favorite book night," a reprise of Lois Lowry's "The Giver" (soon to be a feature film) and a foray into graphic novels. So come on, fellas — join the discussion. In addition to great books, there's food.

Book ends

Real Estate TODAY

Licensed Associate Broker, CBR, SRES

Big Returns

Many real estate professionals advise sellers that prospective buyers are no longer just concerned about kitchen conditions but are now equally concerned about bathrooms when they are sizing up a house. Homebuyers' expectations today are often defined by new construction in which bathrooms contain luxurious amenities. Thus, homeowners with an eye toward selling have good reason to remodel their bathrooms to increase the attractiveness of their homes.

The good news is that a bathroom remodel returns a national average of 85% when the house is sold. It is exceeded in value as a home improvement only by a kitchen remodel. The bottom line is that a home will always sell for more with updated kitchen and baths.

Remember, I have the experience, resources and expertise to guide you through the remodeling process. Count on Cathy and the Cooley Team to show you how paying attention to detail will help separate your home from the competition.

School rallies behind teacher battling illness

Benefit to raise money to help Colin Poole pay for cancer treatments

By WILLIAM R. DEVOE
devoew@spotlightnews.com

Ravena-Coeymans-Selkirk Central School District staffers will hold a fundraiser one of their own: Colin Poole, a Spanish teacher at the RCS Middle School, who is battling Burkitt's Lymphoma.

On Friday, Jan. 18, at 7 p.m., RCS staff members will play a benefit basketball game versus a team of New York State Troopers to raise money for costs associated with Poole's treatment. The game will take place in the RCS high school gymnasium. Tickets cost $3 for adults and $2 for students.

There also will be a silent auction, a 50/50 raffle and bake sale.

"Mr. Poole's great. He's a known entity — he's involved with the kids. He's young. He's active," Middle School Principal Pam Black said.

Black said she's amazed at how the RCS staff has rallied to help Poole.

"I have people come up and say to me that they've never seen a staff come together like this," she said. Black said that raffles are held on a weekly basis and people donate regularly to help Poole and his wife manage out-of-pocket expenses associated with his illness.

Burkitt's lymphoma is cancer of the lymphatic system, which helps fight infection.

Poole could not be interviewed for this story because he is in New York City receiving chemotherapy until the end of March.

Donations can be made to the Colin Poole Benefit Fund c/o Bethany Losito, RCS Middle School, 2025 Route 9W, Ravena 12143.

The Delmar Dash is a fun, time-honored tradition

By MARCIA ADAMS

The Delmar Dash is, in my mind, one of the anchor pins in the Hudson Mohawk Road Runners Club racing schedule. Judging from the turnout, others feel the same way. Unbeknownst to some, the Dash is actually two races in one. For the adult runner, it is the first long run of the spring season. At a distance of 5 miles, it presents a unique opportunity to limber up, if you have just started your warm-weather program or to stay "in tune" if you are headed for Boston or other spring races. For Club members, it is the Grand Prix event for the under 40 runner.

The second half of the Delmar experience is our future. With more than 300 participants, it is one of the largest kids' races on the HMRRC race schedule. Three distances are offered for children 12 and under: the mile, the ½ mile and the ¼ mile.

In 2007, a "One Step at a Time" Marathon was added to encourage children to establish a regular exercise program. With cooperation from the Bethlehem school district, pre-registration for kids races was also introduced in an effort to eliminate some of the congestion on race day.

Perhaps the most exciting part of the Delmar Dash is the cooperation of the volunteers who, year after year, step forward to be a part of this event in support of the runners involved. The original organizer of the race, Hank Steadman, set the framework in place and each director since has benefited from his distinctive leadership. Evidence of that is the fact that many of the volunteers have been with the Dash almost since its inception. Maureen McLeod is lead on organizing the course marshals and the finish line. Dave Banas organizes and coordinates all the kids' races.

Rounding out the planning team are Marty DeLaney of the Greater Bethlehem Chamber of Commerce, Sandy Morley, vice principal of the Bethlehem Central Middle School and Mark Bryant of Bryant Asset Management, the corporate sponsor for the adult race. Each provides insight and wisdom to help make each year's race just a little different – and hopefully better – for the runners.

None of the races connected to the Dash could even happen if it were not for the unbelievable cooperation that is received from the Bethlehem Police Department and the Highway Department. These two public service organizations definitely, in the minds of the race organizers, exemplify public service. Each member goes above and beyond not only to provide the race organizers with assistance and advice at the planning stage but also coverage to keep the runners safe on race day. Add to these two the services of the EMTs who are there "just in case" and the quality of the safety connected to this race is unsurpassed.

This year's Dash will be held on Sunday, April 6. The adult race will go off at 9 a.m., followed at 10 a.m. by the kids' race. Technical short-sleeved T-shirts will be provided to the first 400 preregistered runners in the adult race. According to co-race director, Tom Adams, the design for the shirt this year is "simple but elegant, but most importantly, it will be a great running shirt. I can't release all the details but, if you are planning to run, you should be sure you pre-register so you aren't disappointed."

On the kids' race side, we are pleased and excited to welcome a new corporate sponsor to the kids' race series – The Spotlight. To honor The Spotlight's participation, we will name the kids' races the "Spotlight on Youth" series. The Spotlight, together with others, has been very instrumental in keeping the entrance cost for the children to a minimum level. T-shirts will still be provided to each race participant of the kids' races.

In the past few years, the Delmar Dash has had more than 500 participants. We anticipate that this year will be no exception and have made plans to keep the registration process as simple as possible.

As co-race director, Tom Adams, explains: "We cannot encourage runners enough to pre-register and to make use of active.com as a means for registering. This year, anyone registering for the Dash using active.com by March 1 will have their active.com fee waived. We hope that this will encourage people to take advantage of this electronic method of race entry. Also, for the first time, there will be NO day of race T-shirts – only pre-registered runners will be given shirts. Hopefully this will make the day of race itself go smoother and simpler for all involved."

Each year the races connected to the Delmar Dash – both adult and kids – have been fortunate to have a large number of spectators and we hope this year will be no exception. One year there was a musician along the course and runners were so pleased with the accompaniment. Hopefully this impromptu display will continue and grow with each year. Also, we will continue the "coveted" Chamber Pot award – a trophy sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce that represents the winner among the corporate teams that enter the adult race. To be eligible, the team must have two running members and one volunteer and be a member of the Bethlehem Chamber of Commerce. The best time for the team wins the Pot and has the opportunity to display it in their business.

As Tom Adams sums it up, "the whole idea is to have a great, competitive race with a lot of fun as well."

Exercise a little differently in the winter

By Dr. ROBERT S. GOLDEN

Exercising outdoors in cold weather can be exhilarating. Even if skiing isn't your all-time favorite sport, you can have just as much fun running, cycling or walking in wintertime. Winter sunlight can revive your spirits and exercise in the cool, crisp air can relieve stress and tension.

There are special considerations to remember for cold-weather exercise:

First, don't overdress. Exercise raises body temperature significantly and even a moderate workout can make you feel as if it's 30 degrees warmer. The answer to this is wearing several layers of loose-fitting thin layers of fabric.

The first layer should be thermal underwear made of a fabric that draws sweat away from your body. That would be something other than cotton, as cotton holds moisture next to your skin and makes you feel cold and clammy.

Your middle layer should be a synthetic turtleneck and wool sweater. Sweatpants or Lycra tights worn over thermals will help keep your legs warm.

The outer layer should be waterproof, wind-resistant, yet breathable (so that moisture is not trapped inside). Or, for a short workout in dry weather, just an ordinary windbreaker would be suitable.

Zipper make clothes more adaptable for controlling the amount of air you let in or for removing quickly. Mittens are warmer than gloves. Fingers resting against each other stay warmer than fingers separate by the added air surface between the fingers of gloves.

Headgear is important since you lose a lot of heat through your head. An extra pair of socks will always help. Be sure to wear shoes with good traction, especially if there is ice or snow on the ground.

Drink fluids before, during and after exercise. Skip alcohol and caffeine, as both can be dehydrating.

Most important of all, get out there and have fun!

But be careful with the shovel

One thing that's not fun is shoveling. If you're going to shovel snow, be careful. There's nothing prettier than a new-fallen snow, but so potentially dangerous to your health as well. The tragedy of the fatal or near-fatal heart attack or stroke attributed to shoveling snow tends to overshadow a hazard that is even more common.

The same snow that causes heart stress also causes dangerous spinal disc stress. When you consider a shovel full of snow weighs 5 to 10 pounds, you realize the tremendous cumulative weight one has to life to clear an area. The average driveway or walk will hold hundreds of pounds of snow.

Snow seems to present a challenge to most people; the cold air invigorates them to action; and, the same cold air numbs their sense of pain and fatigue, thereby masking the severity, causing too much exertion and too much work without rest breaks.

NEW TREND IN HEALTHCARE

at Community Care Physicians, PC

Continually driving innovation in healthcare, Community Care has changed the standard of medical treatment in the Capital Region.

All of our providers and staff use a confidential electronic health record (EHR). The EHR is an electronic version of a patient's chart. More secure than a paper record, the EHR includes high-tech tools to monitor patients, intercept errors, provide immediate access to patient information, improve billing, and promote preventive medicine; overall, improving quality of care, enhancing patient safety and increasing efficiency.

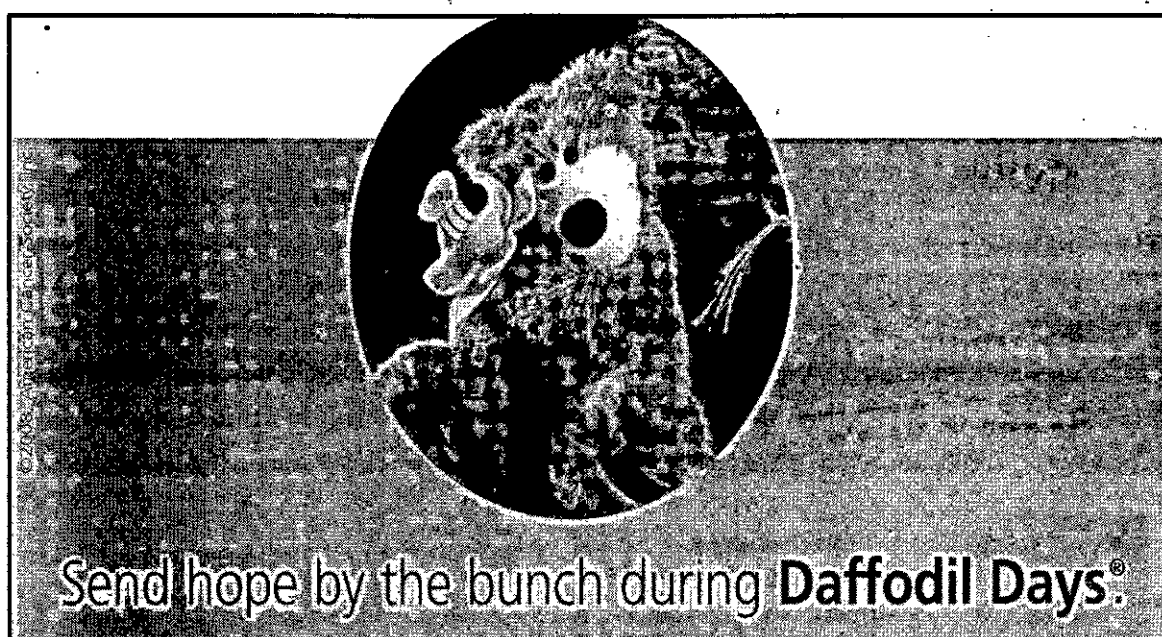

Your prescriptions can even be immediately faxed to your pharmacy! The electronic health record is secure and allows for better medical care.

Top five health stories to watch for in 2008

When warnings about trans fats emerged, you worked hard to eliminate them from your family's diet. You were quick to clean out the kids' toy box when lead contamination fears prompted recalls of foreign-made toys in 2007. Keeping on top of health news can help you and your family lead healthier, happier lives.

"Staying abreast of health news becomes more critical every year," says Dr. Holly G. Atkinson, medical editor in chief of EverydayHealth.com, the award-winning Web site that helps people manage their health online daily. "Knowledge is power and being aware of the latest developments in medicine can help you make informed decisions about your own health care."

So what health developments on the horizon for 2008 are like to have the most impact on you and your family? Atkinson advises we keep our eyes on the following five developments:

- Personalized medicine through genetic testing

Genetic testing is promising to make it possible to identify many ailments you may be predisposed to such as heart disease, diabetes, osteoporosis, hypertension, high cholesterol and colon, breast or skin cancers. Testing to see if you carry the genes that have been linked to these diseases could allow for early diagnosis, treatment, and preventative measures tailored to your specific genetic makeup and lifestyle.

"For example, it's estimated that 600,000 Americans have 'familial hypercholesterolemia,' a disease that causes high cholesterol levels, which in turn contributes to the risk of heart attack," Atkinson says. "Genetic testing can tell you if you are one of those 600,000 so your doctor can help you create a preventative plan for avoiding cholesterol-linked heart disease."

What you can do: A new genetic test allows doctors to definitively identify people whose genes place them at risk of high cholesterol, putting them at risk for heart disease. If you have a family history of high cholesterol, heart disease before age 45 in men and 55 in women, tendon xanthomas (a waxy-looking build-up on tendons in the hands or feet) or known familial hypercholesterolemia, consider getting tested.

- Controlling obesity at an earlier age

Obesity and corresponding diseases such as diabetes, liver and kidney problems, orthopedic injury and ultimately heart disease continue to rise among children, teens and young adults.

"For the first time in recorded medical history, we are at risk of life expectancy actually going down," Atkinson says. "Obesity is a monumental threat to health."

Studies show that as much as a third of all American children and teens are overweight or obese, and yet many parents (around 40 percent by a recent study) don't realize it. Medical professionals are beginning to see more children suffering from obesity-related diseases once thought to affect only adults.

What you can do: First, recognize if your child is overweight. If your child has a weight problem, get professional help immediately - for the entire family. Children learn health habits at home; lead by example by taking steps to control your own weight and heart health. Create a healthful home environment conducive to good eating and exercise habits: for example, throw out the junk food, cut up vegetables and put them out before dinner, ban eating while watching TV, and take an evening family walk. Also, support community initiatives to fund healthful lunches and more exercise at school.

- Vitamins and antioxidants

Recent studies have shown that antioxidants and some vitamins may have less of a positive health impact than previously thought. In fact, some data indicates such supplements may actually boost your risk of some types of cancer, including prostate cancer, increase mortality rates, or fail to have any positive impact on cardiovascular health.

What you can do: "Patients should be aware that many of the benefits claimed by manufacturers of these supplements have not been substantiated by research," Atkinson says. "For example, studies do not show a benefit from vitamin C, vitamin E, or beta carotene for prevention of cardiovascular events. Do not substitute these supplements for medically proven courses of disease treatment or prevention, including practicing healthful lifestyle habits."

- DNA paternity tests hit

drugstores

For years, DNA testing was hard to come by. Now, at least one company is selling a paternity test direct to consumers through drugstores. This follows a growing trend of companies marketing genetic testing for different health risks, like breast cancer, directly to consumers. But Atkinson warns consumers to be cautious.

What you can do: "If you're interested in the information, consider first the consequences of having that knowledge, and how the information may help or harm in any given situation," she says. "Learn about the test, what it can show, and consider the truth and consequences."

- Environmental health risks

"The health of the environment directly impacts our own health," Dr. Atkinson says. "Environmentally responsible lifestyles not only save the planet, they can save us as individuals as well."

Millions of Americans are turning to healthful habits that also benefit the environment, such as eating organically grown produce, walking or biking to work or school, avoiding carcinogens, reducing their contributions to greenhouse gasses, and recycling waste, including leftover medications. These practices can improve your overall health while also reducing your negative impact on the environment.

What you can do: Make lifestyle changes that can benefit the environment, such as committing to reduce your family's output of carbon dioxide - a harmful greenhouse gas - by 3,000 pounds in 2008. Take simple steps - from washing clothes in cold water rather than hot to keeping your tires properly inflated - that are sure to will help.

Teachers: Get Energy Smart!

During the school year 2007–2008, educators across New York State will gather at teacher centers, nature preserves, college classrooms, and even downtown offices to “get smart” about energy education. More than a hundred professional development workshops are expected to take place under the New York Energy Smart Students program. Energy Smart Students focuses on how to raise the level of students’ knowledge of energy efficiency and its impact on the environment. This unique program was created by NYSERDA (New York State Energy Research and Development Authority).

Workshop Content

Each of the three workshops is targeted at students’ different educational levels.

ABCs of Energy, Grades K–3

The ABCs are one of the building blocks of primary students. Why not teach the ABCs of energy at the same time? This hands-on workshop introduces basic energy content through fun and engaging activities that will lay the ground work for energy education at an early age. Students will apply classroom learning to their own lives through a family-oriented take-home activity.

The 4 Es of Energy, Grades 4–6

Do you know the 4 Es of energy? This interactive workshop promotes an understanding of energy’s relationship with the environment, our economy, efficiency AND the all-important “E” – education. You will use hands-on activities to explore energy forms and sources, global climate change and actions we can take to address the energy challenges we face.

Energy Trilogy, Grades 7–12

Energy – we all depend upon it every day, but what are the consequences for the global community’s growing demand for it? This interactive workshop will highlight the Energy Trilogy – how economics, efficiency and the environment relate to the energy challenges before us. Don’t miss this exciting opportunity to introduce your students to the impacts of their energy use and explore actions we can take to make a difference.

An Energy Smart Students workshop will raise your Energy IQ – and increase your ability to promote understanding and action among your students for their lives, now and in the future.

Each workshop centers on an innovative new curriculum created by the NEF (National Energy Foundation), a not-for-profit organization dedicated to the development and dissemination of supplementary educational programs and materials. Engaging hands-on activities that apply learning to a student’s life and experiences are modeled.

By attending, you will receive: an Energy Education Teacher’s Guide; an information-packed CD that includes the Conceptual Framework for Energy Education, basic information on energy and an Energy Glossary; color posters; and class sets of the Energy Action Challenge to use with your students. Instructional materials are correlated in an integrated manner to New York State learning standards in math, science, technology, global studies, English language arts, and family and consumer science.

Workshop Presenters

Workshop presenters are excellent, experienced educators from throughout New York who were selected to attend NYSERDA’s Energy Educator Institute in Albany last summer. To learn who will be leading workshops in your area, read the Energy Educators’ bios at www.getenergysmart.org. Click on Energy Education.

FORECASTING 2008: From Trends to Tips

By Ruth H. Mahoney,
Senior Vice President,
Key Private Bank

To most business people, financial markets are like conversations among elephants: conducted at a very high level and obscured by a cloud of dust.

No one knows where the stock market or the price of oil will be this time next year; but we can cut through the dust to speculate on the future by analyzing current trends. These forces will determine the availability and cost of credit, which companies need to expand facilities, upgrade equipment or add staff. Most financial experts agree that markets, and the availability of credit, will improve probably later in 2008 rather than sooner.

The housing slump and the subprime mortgage fiasco will continue to slow the economy. Overall growth will help, but this will take time before widespread renewal of economic energy and progress.

Congress's Joint Economic Committee predicts up to 2 million foreclosures could occur on subprime mortgages by the end of 2008, nearly twice the typical peak of new home construction, going back to 1965. These foreclosures will erase more than $100 billion in housing value, with nearly one-third of that in value loss to homes neighboring foreclosed properties. The number of subprime loans that will reset to higher rates is peaking this winter, and the lag time from resetting to foreclosure is typically 12 months, so this problem will endure through 2008.

Foreclosures are not the only factor swelling the amount of real estate inventory and ratcheting down prices. Approximately 40 percent of home sales over the past several years was in second homes or for investments, and both types of purchases will diminish. In addition, desperate sellers who had held back early in the decline hoping for a price rebound may despair and begin to sell, pumping more inventory into the market.

Investors who bought mortgage-backed securities backed by subprime loans thought they had made relatively secure investments. However, huge recent write-downs at major financial institutions demonstrate the unfortunate outcomes of many such investments.

Employment may also take a hit, and not just the leaders of financial institutions. Nearly all U.S. job growth since 2001 has been in housing and health care, offsetting huge losses in manufacturing jobs. However, hospital consolidations and a huge drop in demand for new homes could threaten future employment gains in these key sectors.

Competition is now holding down inflation, but when real estate values begin to rebound, so could inflation. The Federal Reserve is holding interest rates steady or reducing them, which typically brightens the economic mood generally and encourages home buying in particular. However, from the present levels, even more rate cuts may be needed to make a significant difference in the mortgage market — cuts beyond the recent reductions. Such reductions generally take 12 months or so to bring real economic improvement, so recent cuts should begin to help the economy later next year. Increases made in the money supply can also help the economy, but with a longer lag. Therefore, money supply increases made two years ago may begin to exert a positive effect on broad economic revitalization in the early part of 2008.

The falling U.S. dollar is also exerting a mixed influence. It is facilitating exports by U.S. manufacturers, but it is also raising the prices of imports from abroad and pressuring inflation upwards. The dollar may continue to weaken, versus foreign currencies. However, familiar cycles of flight to quality and the repricing of risk may reverse this skid.

When everything is going well, investors take more risks, because they feel secure and seek higher returns. That runs up the prices of riskier assets and makes them more expensive than they should be, given the inherently higher risk. Then, when problems begin to crop up, investors tend to sell higher-risk assets and buy higher-quality replacements. If the selling is gradual and does not disturb the markets too much, that would be considered a simple "repricing of risk." If the market adjustments are sudden and more radical, as has happened with subprime loans and housing, the "flight to quality" can cause the higher-risk assets to drop substantially and cause the higher-price assets to jump. When investors worry significantly about international stability and the security of their overseas investments, they often retrench to safer investments in dollars to reduce risk, and that causes the dollar to rise in value against other currencies. The typical peak-to-trough cycle in dollar valuation versus other currencies is seven to eight years, and the last peak was in 2000. Therefore, another may be due, and the dollar could rebound, if foreign markets become more uncertain.

Energy costs constitute another important economic barometer. The rise and fall of those markets impacts overall economic health, though not always in obvious ways. For example, even as the price-per-barrel of crude oil hits record highs, the stock market has not been taking the hits that some people predicted. We are now in the typical fall cycle of price run-ups spurred by increased demand for heating oil and natural gas for home heating. However, this may be related less to ordinary supply and demand factors at present than to speculators shorting the dollar. Naturally, this drives down the dollar and drives up the price of oil. Energy-intensive industries such as transportation and manufacturing must either pass along higher costs to customers or see their profit margins reduced.

Despite all this, for now, inflation is not dead; it's only sleeping, and rather lightly at that. Therefore, many observers return in their thinking to the repricing of risk. The fall in value of mortgage-backed securities reflects, at least in part, that we have reached the stage of the economic cycle where risks begin to rise and investors want to be paid more for taking risks. Thus, while problems in the mortgage area do not cause other risky assets to come under pressure, the economic conditions putting pressure on mortgage assets may also begin to affect other higher-risk areas of lending and investing. This will tighten credit for all borrowers and make it more difficult for companies to finance expansions.

Smaller companies are another area of volatile investments that seem to be coming under pressure. Small-cap companies have become both more expensive and less vigorous in their growth. This has prompted many investors to refocus on very large, very high quality firms — in short, the traditional, established blue chips. They want to be in GE, 3M, Procter & Gamble, the larger U.S. firms that offer a more-diversified exposure to the economy since they operate in both consumer and business-to-business environments, both in the United States and overseas.

This may seem to be a conservative, risk-averse suggestion, but a cautious assessment of ongoing trends in unsettled times has shaped it.

supervisor's position but did not disclose who they were.

"I discussed all the appointments with all the board members since the beginning of December and no questions were raised prior to this meeting," said Cunningham.

Other appointments questioned by Messina at the organizational meeting included two new appointments to the town zoning board of appeals. Matthew Watson and David DeCancio replace new town board member Mark Hennessey and Gil Brookins, whose ZBA term expired about a week ago. Messina argued that because of Brookins' experience on the ZBA, he should be allowed to stay on for another year instead of putting two new people in the positions.

"Although these two have excellent backgrounds, we should consider making one new appointment and reconsider Gil Brookins for the other slot," said Messina, who added that Brookins could serve a one-year term for continuity.

That option was turned down because of municipal law stating ZBA members are to serve a term of five years.

"I am not sure we have the authority to change the term of five years," said board member Kyle Kotary.

DeCancio and Watson were also approved by a 4-to-1 vote.

Other appointments include Nicholas A. Behuniak as a member of the town planning board and Jacqueline Conti, who will serve on the board of assessment review. James Potter was reappointed as town attorney and Josh Cansler accepted the appointment of public works commissioner. George Leveille will remain as director of economic development and planning. Parker Mathusa will also stay as planning board chairman with Michael Hodom serving as ZBA chair.

Trail plan still on track

Transformation of old rail line continues as group hammers out acquisition details

By JIM CUOZZO
news@spotlightnews.com

Albany County officials continue to work toward acquiring 9 miles of old Delaware and Hudson rail line between the Port of Albany and Voorheesville so it can be converted to a public recreational trail.

A press conference Friday, Jan. 4, hosted by several local, county and state legislators was held next to the rail line in Elsmere in the parking lot of the Nathaniel Adams Post American Legion to remind the community the project, unlike the rail line, has not been abandoned.

"We are determined, through our efforts, to make this happen," said Albany County Executive Michael Breslin, D-Delmar.

Scenic Hudson, the non-profit conservation organization, is partnering with the county to purchase the rail bed, but liability issues with Canadian Pacific Railroad, the line owners, are getting in the way.

"We need Canadian Pacific to absolve the county of all responsibility of what may or may not be on the site," said county legislator Charles Dawson, D-Glenmont, chairman of the county's conservation and reational attraction serving the entire Capital Region."

Officials and preservationists believe the rail trail can link parks and other recreational trails and municipalities to make a new bike and pedestrian route, preserving open space and linking neighborhoods together while also providing physical fitness opportunities.

"I continue to support the project, and, in turn, will provide all the resources possible toward the project," said Bethlehem town Supervisor Jack Cunningham.

Caleb Wistar, representing members of Bethlehem Tomorrow, a local group of 400 supporters of the rail trail project, said he urged officials to make this project happen "as soon as possible."

Jill Knapp, representing the Mohawk-Hudson Land Conservancy, and Martin Daley, project director for Parks and Trails New York, have also said they support the project.

"Trails enhance the quality of life, a critical factor in attracting and retaining business," said Daley.

"It's not about a rail trail; it's about communitywide improvements."

improvement committee.

"It's not about a rail trail; it's about communitywide improvements," Dawson said.

Scenic Hudson matched a $350,000 grant from the state Land and Water Conservation Fund to make the acquisition happen.

"Scenic Hudson is committed to the preservation of this 9-mile rail corridor," said Seth McKee, director. "It has great potential to become a vital rec-

State unveils passenger rights bill

Albany Airport goes beyond legislation to prevent extended tarmac waits

By GRAHAM S. PARKER
parker@spotlightnews.com

The state's Airline Passenger Bill of Rights went into effect Tuesday, Jan. 1.

Members of the state's Consumer Protection Board joined Albany International Airport officials New Year's Day to welcome the legislation. However, the Albany airport has had its own in place since March of last year, sparked by the same storms in February 2007 that left thousands grounded aboard aircraft without food and water.

Last month, the airport's plan was put into action after a Continental flight to Newark was delayed and sat on the Albany tarmac for 90 minutes. The airport brought the passengers back into the terminal and fed them pizza and refreshments.

The New York legislation states that "whenever airline passengers in New York state are delayed for more than three hours on the aircraft prior to takeoff, the carrier must ensure that passengers are provided, as needed, with electric generation service and temporary power

"I think it's a good start. The airlines were concerned about the legislation, but we have to be concerned about our passengers."

for fresh air and lights; waste removal service in order to service the holding tanks for on-board restrooms; and adequate food, drinking water and other refreshments."

Albany's bill of rights cuts the waiting time in half to just 90 minutes before the same plan goes into effect.

"I think it's (the state Passenger Bill of Rights) a good start. The airlines were concerned about the legislation, but we have to be concerned about our passengers," said Doug Meyers, airport spokesman.

Albany put its policy into effect after members of the Albany County Airport Authority, including Meyers, were stranded for five hours at Philadelphia International Airport waiting to return home to Albany. Executives were expecting a flight of no more than 45 minutes from Philadelphia to Albany. Once the aircraft taxied onto the runway, passengers were told the delay was due to another plane that was in the way of the departing flight. After the experience, airport officials said they never saw that craft. The Philadelphia airport did not return Albany officials' calls.

The Authority vowed it would never happen to its passengers.

That was Valentine's Day last year. The Northeast was pounded with snow, and several airports experienced the same delays. It was what sparked the state to act and protect passengers' rights to food and water.

"The state set up a minimum requirement, and Albany (International) Airport has chosen to go beyond the spirit of the law, which we recommend," said Deborah Sturm Rausch, CPB spokeswoman.

To implement such a plan is much easier for a smaller airport like Albany, said Meyers. The airport's 90-minute plan and the state's three-hour plan, however, don't extend out of state. Federal oversight may be needed to extend these rights to all passengers, said Meyers.

Albany Medical Center has been lauded by the American Heart Association/Stroke Association for being a national leader in following evidence-based guidelines for patients with coronary artery disease and heart failure.

By receiving the Sustained Performance Achievement Awards, Albany Med becomes one of only five hospitals in the nation and one of two hospitals in New York State to receive the distinction in multiple categories under the American Heart Association/Stroke Association's Get With The Guidelines (GTWG) program.

"Receiving this award signifies that the cardiology team at Albany Med has established itself among the top hospitals in the country for the treatment of heart attack and heart failure," said Edward Philbin, M.D., associate professor and vice chair for clinical affairs, department of medicine, and George Pataki Chair in Cardiology at Albany Medical Center. "I applaud the physicians and staff at Albany Med who dedicate themselves to implementing the acute and secondary prevention guidelines, and who, by doing so, are doing everything possible to extend the lives of our patients."

Get With The Guidelines helps ensure that patients treated and discharged receive quality care in accordance with guidelines that will reduce the risk of secondary events. It takes advantage of the "teachable moment," the time soon after an acute event, when patients are most likely to listen to their healthcare professionals' treatment recommendations. Studies demonstrate that patients who are taught how to manage their risk factors while still in the hospital reduce their risk of a second heart attack.

Under the protocols, heart patients are started on aggressive risk-reduction therapies such as cholesterol-lowering drugs, beta-blockers, ACE inhibitors, aspirin, diuretics and anticoagulants in the hospital.

The program is designed to improve patient outcomes and save lives by providing the most current scientific guidelines and evidence-based treatment and therapies for patients in the categories of coronary artery disease, heart failure and stroke. Initial, annual, and sustained performance awards are conferred on hospitals which maintain at least 85 percent adherence to all of the performance measures set forth at the intervals of three consecutive months, 12 consecutive months, and 24 or more consecutive months.

Albany Med received Initial Performance Awards in all three categories in 2005 and 2006 and became the second hospital in the nation to receive the Annual Performance Awards in all three categories in 2007. Albany Med received the Sustained Performance Award in the categories of coronary artery disease and heart failure, which was presented to Philbin on Nov. 5 at the annual Get With The Guidelines awards ceremony in Orlando, Fla.

Family Life Center takes the next step

Division of city mission prepares people for independent living

By GREG HITCHCOCK
news@spotlightnews.com

As they walk in the receiving room of the City Mission of Schenectady, the homeless and tempest-tossed citizenry are treated with dignity and respect by the mission's staff. That is because it is the city mission's mission to take them to the next level of living independently.

"We like to think of ourselves as a stepping stone. We want to be able to help them enhance skills they already have, or obtain skills they need," Chris Parsons, director of the city mission's Family Life Center, said. The Family Life Center, which opened in March 2003, is a full-service housing and career-oriented program which assists Schenectady's homeless become independent by giving them a place to live while working on educational and vocational skills.

The mission houses women 18 years of age and older and their children, staying at the mission between one and two years.

"We want them to be equipped not only to get a job, but to place themselves on a career track," Parsons said. "That means getting their GEDs, going to SCCC (Schenectady County Community College), going to a vocational training program, and participating in our classes."

The mission offers a skills program that helps them with basic skills such as computer knowledge, home management

"It takes a lot of strength to walk through that door and say 'I am homeless, help me.' That is not a negative, but rather it is a positive."

Chris Parsons

"We have a partnership with SEFCU. They come in once a month and help them with credit issues, budgeting, banking, and other financial issues," she said.

A hallmark of the Family Life Center is the addictions groups on-site which offers counseling on any addictions members may have before they start on educational and vocational goals.

"If you are dealing with domestic violence or addiction it is hard to focus on academics or vocational training while you have all this emotional turmoil going on. So you deal with that first," Parsons said. "If you don't resolve some of those issues you are just setting them up to repeat the same journey."

Parsons said the Family Life Center is very individually focused and strength-based. It is not always looking at what is wrong with someone but what their strengths are, she said.

She said bad decisions were made, but that does not make them a bad person and the center is there to help identify that inner strength and building on that.

"It takes a lot of strength to walk through that door and say 'I am homeless, help me.' That is not a negative, but rather it is a positive," Parsons said. "Being able to grow is a process that takes time. We must equip people to be all that they can be."

homeless person as a single adult with a disabling condition who has been continuously homeless for one year, or who has been homeless four or more times within the past three years.

The Schenectady City Mission is one of several city organizations that provides services to Schenectady's chronically homeless, offering warm meals and temporary housing. As of Nov. 30, the City Mission had served 115,872 meals and provided 19,646 nights of lodging in 2007. That averages out to 10,534 meals and 1,786 nights of shelter each month — and the demand remains greater than the supply.

While the mission's large and newly renovated soup kitchen rarely has to turn people away, according to Executive Director Michael Saccocio, there is always a need for more beds. The mission runs the city's only men's shelter.

"We're always full, not just in the winter," said Saccocio. "Homelessness is a year-round problem and our shelters are always full. We do see a surge in need with cold weather and snow, though, and last Saturday we put up 57 men in a shelter with 43 beds."

Despite these seemingly grim statistics, Schenectady's homelessness problem is not as overwhelming as it is in other larger cities, nor do county leaders feel it is unsolvable.

Each year, Schenectady holds a "street count." For a set period of time on a single day, representatives from homelessness service organizations like the Salvation Army, Bethesda House and the City Mission do a literal tally of the homeless people they see on the street in one 24-hour period.

In 2006, 54 homeless people were identified in the city and 15 homeless people were identified in surrounding municipalities, which suggests that homelessness is not confined to the downtown area. Eighteen of the identified people were recognized as being chronically homeless.

While Saccocio couldn't determine whether or not the number of chronically homeless people in the county was increasing or decreasing, he cited three key changes that affect the general homeless population—the rise of women and children as part of the homeless population, the increased needs of the working poor and the growing need for affordable housing.

The City Mission has responded to the increased number of homeless women and children homelessness population by renovating several buildings and expanding their programs to keep families intact.

In the backyard of what used to be a well-known drug house on Lafayette Street, there is now a playground where mothers and children can play safely while staying at the Mission. The Mission bought the property, bringing their holdings to nearly a city block on Hamilton, Clinton and Lafayette streets. The Mission currently owns 20 apartments in Schenectady.

Many of the properties on Lafayette Street are now apartments that serve as transitional housing for families who take part in life skills and career training provided by the City Mission.

But according to Saccocio, providing services only to those already on the streets isn't the only answer. By offering services to members of the working poor, groups like the Mission and Bethesda House try to ensure their clients don't end up homeless because they can't meet their rent or because they can't afford costly but essential health treatment.

With the costs of utilities soaring, Saccocio said he's seen a dramatic increase in the number of hard working families that can't make ends meet.

According to officials at the City Mission, Bethesda House and the county's Ten-Year Plan to End Homelessness, the ultimate solution to homelessness is more affordable housing.

The plan calls for the development of a team to assist in finding housing for people who are displaced due to code violations and eviction and seeks funding to create a family shelter facility. It also calls for a review of available and current data on rental housing and jobs. Funds could be available through grants, said Bethesda House officials.

Affordable housing isn't only a problem being addressed within the county. In mid-December, Gov. Eliot Spitzer announced the construction or renovation of more than 800 affordable homes across the state, financed by two state housing agencies — the Housing Finance Agency and the Affordable Housing Corporation.

While a large portion of the money went to projects in Monroe County, Westchester County and New York City, $300,000 was allocated to a renovation project of 30 homes in nearby Rensselaer County.

While any renovation or creation of more affordable housing is good news for both communities who want to see neighborhood improvement or homelessness and low-income service providers, experts say there simply never seems to be enough money to completely solve the problem.

"There's always a shortage in funds," said Edward August, the executive director of Better Neighborhoods, Inc., a Schenectady nonprofit funded by the state and private donors to renovate property with the intent to house low-income families.

August's organization is currently undergoing a multi-unit renovation on Albany Street for low-income families. In addition to making affordable housing available, Better Neighborhoods also provides vital services like foreclosure counseling and classes for first-time homebuyers.

In recent years, Bethesda House has been the community leader in employing a successful Housing-First permanent housing initiative. The program's motto is "if housing comes first, healing and health will follow."

"Sometimes asking a person to participate in a program right off the street is just too much to ask," said Anderton. "That's why we have a Housing First initiative for the chronically homeless. We get someone into a permanent routine. We get them feeling safe, and then they can opt to enter into some of the programs that we offer."

As part of their Housing First initiative, Bethesda House opened The Lighthouse in 2002. It's the area's first and only permanent supported housing program.

At The Lighthouse, 10 people with mental disabilities, who were once chronically homeless, now live in 10 restored apartment units in downtown Schenectady.

Most of the participants in the program have lived in the residences for two to four years.

The residents are expected to pay rent, take care of the property, respect other residents of the group home and to behave safely. Residents are not allowed alcohol or drugs on the premises.

While participants are not mandated to receive medical attention or treatment, 90 percent of the participants are seeking treatment, taking medication and have asked Bethesda House to manage their money for them.

Two of the residents work part-time and two other residents are furthering their education at Schenectady County Community College.

While many of the services in the county only address emergency situations, the recent plan to rid homelessness recommends that funding be extradited for proactive services that keep people in their homes and off the streets. Short-term mortgage or rent assistance, legal assistance programs and the utilization of housing placement services are all strategies the county hopes to employ as preventative measures.

But perhaps the nonprofit organizations and service groups and the government funding are not the only answer to end homelessness in Schenectady County. Members of the community who are private citizens also play a major role.

The City Mission is entirely funded by private citizens. Mission officials said they have so much interest from community members who want to volunteer that they have to turn people away.

For 2007's Thanksgiving Dinner, the Mission saw 74 volunteers help prepare, serve and deliver hot meals to needy Schenectadians.

And community members don't necessarily have to work in a food kitchen to help the effort. Donating coats, gloves and other warm clothing items to Salvation Army or the City Mission also helps the effort in the cold winter months.

According to the county's Ten-Year Plan, clearly the answer to the homelessness problem does not fall on the back of any one agency. It's a communal effort. Organizations work together with each other, with the county's Department of Social Services, with local businesses, with local politicians and with community members. It's the only way that some people won't slip through the cracks.

No one should have to sleep in a dumpster in the middle of winter.

For information on how you can help Schenectady's homeless, call the City Mission at 346-2275, ext. 308, or Bethesda House at 374-7873.

Madison Willey's skis each look to be about 3 feet in length.

"This is her first season out here," says her father Chris Willey of Rotterdam. "We were here this past Wednesday, so it's her second time out so far."

Madison Willey is 2 years old. She is dressed in a pink ski jacket and pullover cap and she glides slowly on her skis as her father holds her shoulder.

This is a common scene at Rotterdam's Maple Ski Ridge where the motto is "Ski Close, Ski Often."

As the only ski and snowboard park in the Capital District, Maple Ski Ridge has been the home of area skiers and snowboarders for more than 40 years, and continues to give children who are new to the sport, like Madison, a chance to learn the ropes before moving on to other out of area, and more difficult slopes.

But Maple Ski Ridge isn't only for beginners. For experienced winter athletes like Matthew March, 12, a snowboarder, Maple Ski Ridge is like a second home.

March frequently goes snowboarding after school and he makes it a high tech affair. Equipped with a small handheld camera, March and friends hit the Ridge Freestyle Terrain Park, which offers challenging jumps, rails and slides to snowboarders and skiers alike.

"Check this out," says March, showing the camera's screen to his mother Melanie inside the Ridge's rustic lodge, which smells of coffee and hot concession food. March's video turns out to be a blooper of one of his friends falling Madison Willey, 2, shares slope time with her father, Chris.

Maple Ski Ridge makes snow when Mother Nature doesn't create her own.

Young and old hit the Ridge hard off of his snowboard.

"He's okay though," says March, who turns to another friend and shows the video again.

The lodge is also the home of the Schenectady Ski School, which offers seven weekly classes to "ski tykes" and "ski stars" alike. There are also private lessons.

The ski school is directed by Freddy Anderson, who started the school in 1950 at Schenectady's Municipal Golf Course.

When George Mulyca put a towrope in his field in 1966, Anderson approached the man and asked if she could start teaching ski lessons on his property located off of Route 159.

The Mulyca family still owns Maple Ski Ridge and the one towline in an open field has changed too. The Ridge is now the home of eight trails, a towline, a double and triple chair lift.

In spite of the changes, Anderson 87, continues to do what she loves — teach people of all ages how to ski.

"We're now teaching lessons to 2,200 people a week, and we have a staff of 60, including my daughter Christina, who is the co-director," says Anderson, who can often be found during the day at the school's sign-up kiosk in the lodge, unless of course she is out skiing.

"I still ski everyday," says Anderson, who, much like Madison Willey, put on her first pair of skis only shortly after she learned to walk. "I was never very interested in racing, but I love to teach."

The ski school is certified by the Professional Ski Instructors of America and teaches the well-known American Teaching System of skiing.

For those completely new to the sport, the Ridge offers rentals of skis, ski bindings, boots, snowboards and other essential equipment to give everyone a chance on the slopes.

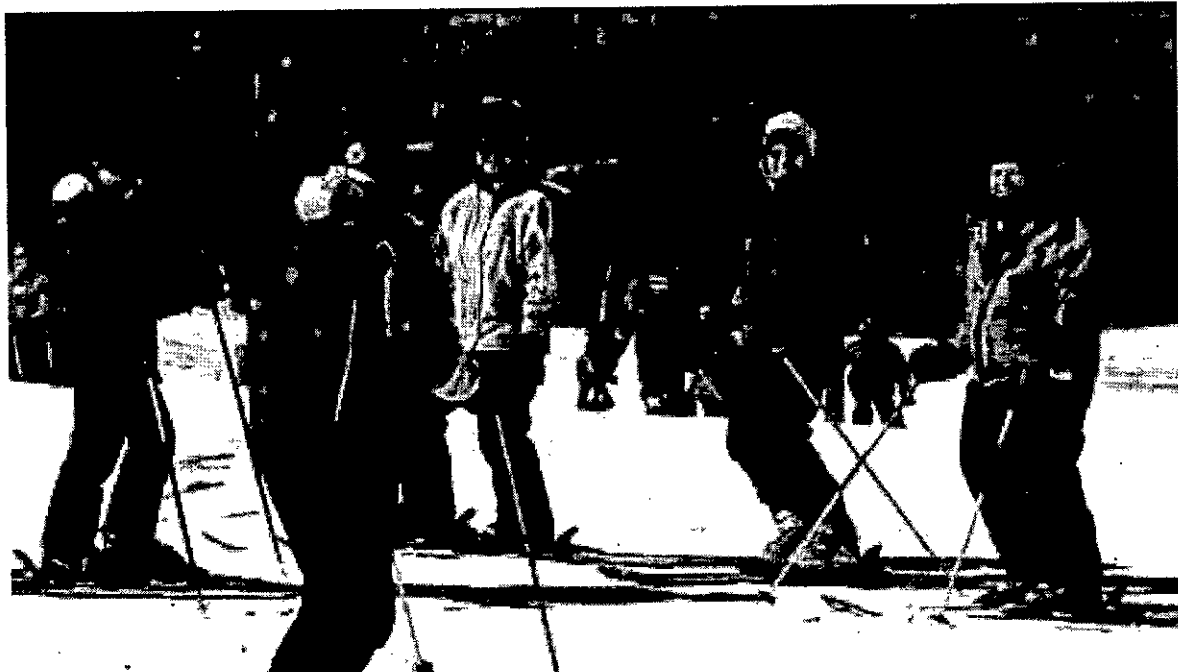

And for those that think the recent warm weather might make conditions difficult, officials at the Ridge say their trails will continue to be covered with white, fluffy snow.

"We've been making snow like crazy this year," says Lorraine Moyer, director of ticket sales.

On Friday, Feb. 1 and Saturday, Feb. 2, Maple Ski Ridge will "go red" in a 24-hour ski-a-thon to raise money for the American Heart Association's "Go Red for Women" campaign. For information or to sponsor a team, call 381-4700. To have a registration packet mailed to you, call the American Heart Association at 869-4042.

Maple Ski Ridge is located at 2725 Mariaville Road in Schenectady.

For information about ticket rates or snow conditions, call 381-4700 or visit Maple Ski Ridge online at www.mapleskiridge.com.

Bethlehem girls too much for Burnt Hills

By MIKE CIOFFI
jonasr@spotlightnews.com

The Bethlehem girls basketball team won its sixth game in a row last Friday night with a 55-27 defeat of Burnt Hills in a Suburban Council game at Bethlehem High.

Bethlehem (10-1, 7-1) started a 10-0 run in the first quarter and never relinquished the lead. Burnt Hills got its first point from the foul line on a shot by Janna Juron with less than four minutes to play in the first quarter. Alex McCullough sparked Bethlehem's strong start with seven of her game-high 15 points in the first quarter.

"We're playing well now, and tonight was nice because we got to rotate a lot of girls in and the bench played real well, which is something we've been looking forward to," Bethlehem coach Mark Nealon said.

The Eagles got 17 points from the bench, led by Kristina Maksuti's seven points.

Burnt Hills (5-6 overall, 2-5 league) played without starting sophomore point guard Emily Ostrom, who is nursing an injured ankle.

"We got a lot of younger players and losing our point

The Spartans closed to within four after Georgina Farrow, who led Burnt Hills with 14 points, hit a three pointer early in the second. But that was as close as Burnt Hills got as it scored only four points in the first half after that field goal and was down 30-12 at halftime.

"They created a lot of match-up problems for us because of their size and athleticism, the way they shoot the ball from the perimeter and their post can step off and knock down shots. They're one of the better teams in the Suburban Council, if not the state," Burnt Hills coach George Dudas said.

The Spartans outscored Bethlehem 14-10 in the third quarter thanks to a three pointer by Leanne Marchant, but the third quarter ended with Burnt Hills down 44-22.

The two teams combined for only five baskets in the fourth quarter, two by Maksuti. Meg Olson, Bethlehem's leading scorer, added 12 points.

The 27 points the Eagles gave up were the fewest they've allowed all season. Nealon felt it was attributed to team defense, coupled with Burnt Hills inability to get shots to fall.

"I think it was a combination of both. We concentrate on playing smart on the defensive end. We might have caught them on a little bit of an off night," he said.

The Spartans, who have now lost four in a row, will welcome the return of Ostrom at the point position as their Suburban Council schedule gets tougher.

"We just have to keep improving everyday and make sure we're giving the kind of effort that will make a change," Dudas said.

Bethlehem has seven games remaining, including four against teams they've beaten by 17 or more points.

"We played very well against Columbia (a 53-29 win), but they've improved dramatically and gave Amsterdam all they can handle. We aren't looking past anybody, but Columbia's going to be tough," Nealon said.

"They created a lot of match-up problems for us because of their size and athleticism, the way they shoot the ball from the perimeter and their post can step off and knock down shots. They're one of the better teams in the Suburban Council, if not the state."

guard hurt us," Burnt Hills coach George Dudas said. "We've been struggling trying to put a different person in to run the show. It makes a difference, but take nothing away from Bethlehem, they're a solid program."

The win is the Eagles 10th of the season. Their only loss came at Shenendehowa on Dec. 11.

Program

Shaker varsity boys basketball coach Jeff Holmes said it was important for him to get his players involved in the program.

"It kind of brings a lump to my throat watching (my players work with the kids)," said Holmes. "They are having such a good time. I'm sure that when they leave, they'll think, 'Boy, that hour went by fast.'"

Steadman helped with the younger athletes, showing them how to make a bounce pass and how to shoot the ball.

"Shooting was what I always thought was fun," said Steadman, a senior at Shaker. "Being handicapped, I'm not as fast as the other kids, so I try to work on shooting."

"He shoots the ball on the sidelines all the time," said Holmes. "He's actually a really good shooter."

Wrieden said that the interaction between the high school athletes and their younger counterparts is what makes the program worthwhile.

"The goal is to get the kids to learn basketball skills and have a good time," said Wrieden.

"It's a good social experience, and it's also good to get the kids up and moving," added Tetreault. "Any activity is good for a kid."

The Shooting Stars Challenger Basketball League will run every Saturday from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. at Sand Creek Middle School off Sand Creek Road in Colonie through March 8. The program is still accepting registrations for any child in the Capital District.

Basketball now part of league for handicap kids

Michael Steadman loves basketball, but a physical handicap prevents him from being more than a student assistant coach on the Shaker High School varsity boys basketball team.

Now, Steadman has another outlet to showcase his basketball knowledge and help other children facing physical and emotional handicaps, thanks to Colonie Youth Center's new Shooting Stars Challenger Basketball League. The program gives people age 5 to 21 a chance to play basketball with the help of volunteers such as Steadman.

"This is very fun," said Steadman. "I can't express this. If you stand here and watch them, they already have a lot of skills. They can dribble, they can pass and they can shoot. And when they make a basket, they look back with the biggest smiles on their faces."

The 10-week program is the brainchild of retired North Colonie special education teacher Gail Wrieden, who has also started challenger programs in Colonie for baseball, soccer and bowling.

"I wanted to keep them going in sports through the winter," said Wrieden. "A lot of the kids that are here are also part of the challenger baseball, soccer and bowling leagues."

"She came to us in mid November and said, 'I have an idea. I'd like to start a challenger basketball league.' And we said,

"It kind of brings a lump to my throat watching (my players work with the kids). They are having such a good time. I'm sure that when they leave, they'll think, 'Boy, that hour went by fast.'"

Jeff Holmes

"How soon can you start?" said Nikki Caruso, Colonie Youth Center interim executive director.

Right away, as it turned out. Within a month, registration forms became available. By the time the first session took place Jan. 5 at Sand Creek Middle School, 34 children were signed up.

"I expected (a large group for the first session) because (challenger) baseball started with 30 (children), and now it's up to 51," said Wrieden. "These are a lot of the same kids."

Nancy Tetreault of Colonie didn't hesitate to sign her 7-year-old son, Brian, up for the challenger basketball program. He was already playing in Wrieden's baseball, soccer and bowling programs, as well as the Albany Cougars - a hockey program for people of all ages with physical and emotional handicaps.

"It's very rewarding to watch him grow," said Tetreault. "It's a slow road, but he's definitely getting better (at sports). It's nice that they have these programs available, too."

Peg Ellett's 14-year-old daughter, Jessica, is another multi-challenger sport participant, but was more excited about the basketball program than the others.

"If I had to ask her what her favorite sport is, it's basketball. She's a basketball junkie," said Ellett, a Latham resident. "She couldn't wait to come here today and play."

Like other challenger programs, the Shooting Stars league emphasizes learning the basic skills of the sport and allowing everyone to participate with the help of volunteers, many of whom are high school athletes. At the first day of the Shooting Stars league, members of Shaker's boys and Colonie Central's girls basketball teams taught the players how to dribble, pass and shoot the basketball. The younger players shot at a floor-based basket 4 feet off the ground, while the older players shot at a standard 10-foot hoop.

"The (volunteers) show them what to do and talk to them," said Wrieden.
