Albany County jail recovery program looks to rehabilitate, instead of punish addicts

By JIM FRANCO
francoj@spotlightnews.com

COLONIE — “There is a common theme down here, if you don’t drink or use drugs, you won’t end up in jail,” said Mike, an inmate as he sat in the bowels of the Albany County jail.

On paper, it’s a simple solution. In practice, though, the dozen men in the Sheriff’s Heroin Addiction Recovery Program (SHARP) are examples of how hard it is to accomplish.

Mike and others, during a wide-ranging, group session-type interview in the SHARP unit, said they have been in and out of jail for years, doing time for minor offenses like petit larceny, DWI, probation violation and possession of narcotics. Some crimes were committed to feed their addictions - that is, they said, at the root of everything and where the downward spiral starts - and others were, to some degree, related to drug use.

The stories are like a skipping record: Go on a binge that can last months, get arrested, do a few months in jail, get out of jail, maybe stay clean for a little while, go on a binge, get arrested ...

But, this time, rather than sit in a cell and waste six or eight or 10 months, the men in the SHARP unit are using the time to prepare for life on the outside, and that all starts, they know now, with recovery from addiction.

Inmates a part of the Sheriff’s Heroin Addiction Recovery Program (SHARP) start to learn that the best way to stay out of jail is to stay away from drugs.

Bethlehem Dems battle for the ballot

By ALI HIBBS
hibbsa@spotlightnews.com

BETHLEHEM — Democratic candidates Dan Coffey and Giles Wagoner may no longer appear on their party's ballot line in November, nor be able to primary Democratic opponents Dan Morin and George Harder, following an Aug. 1 decision signed by State Supreme Court Justice L. Michael Mackey in a lawsuit brought by Morin and Harder.

Morin and Harder, after being passed over by the Bethlehem Democratic Committee (BDC) for endorsements, gathered enough petitions to challenge the party-endorsed candidates in the September 12 primary election. When Highway Superintendent Brent Meredith declined to run again, the committee had a limited amount of time to choose replacements and re-opened the interview process. A decision was made to run Town Board member and candidate Giles Wagoner for Highway Superintendent instead, opening up a spot in the Town Board race. Coffey, who was a member of the committee to fill vacancies along with Jeff Kuhn and Pam Skripak (all three are part of BDC leadership), stepped into that race.

Sometime after Coffey filed the certificates of substitution with the Albany County Board of Elections on July 12, Democratic Commissioner (and BDC member) Matt Clyne made Morin and Harder aware that signatures had been omitted from one of the sections on the certificate.

The issue outlined in the lawsuit concerned one of three sections on the one-page certificate — the affidavit section. While all the necessary signatures appear on another section on the same certificate, which was also notarized, committee members failed to sign the affidavit portion of the certificate as well.

Coffey and Wagoner argued that the lawsuit should be dismissed, as they felt they had demonstrated substantial compliance and cited case law for support. They also requested Mackey recuse himself because he has had a previous relationship with Clyne, a former long-time BDC chair, and questioned the validity of the lawsuit itself, as it was notarized by Clyne, who also appeared as a respondent.

"While the undersigned and Clyne worked together in local politics and government for many years," wrote Mackey in his decision, "this relationship does not influence the court's conduct nor affect the court's impartiality... Other than attending lunches with Clyne and other political leaders and lawyers, we have not socialized together."

However, the two men have often been described as close allies.

In 2014, when the Albany County Democratic Committee was internally fractured, Clyne lost his seat to Carolyn McLaughlin. At the time, Clyne, Mackey and Democrat Justin Corcoran (who now works in Mackey's court and authored the Aug. 1 decision) represented sitting Democratic leadership and the party's status quo.

On the other side of the party divide were Coffey and BDC Chair Jeff Kuhn, insurgent Dems frustrated with a party they viewed as being run by a small minority of members making decisions behind closed doors.

Clyne, who, at the time, was county elections commissioner as well as chair of the countywide Dem committee, had also served as BDC chair for 22 years. In 2012, Kuhn, backed by a group of reform-minded party members, narrowly defeated him for BDC chair.

Also in 2014, Clyne was rebuked by the Appellate Division of the state Supreme Court for using his power as elections commissioner to invalidate the petitions of a political opponent of Corcoran, which, according to the finding, "was done out of a misguided interest" and "amounted to little more than an unreasonable and unjustified restraint upon the right of primary voters to choose among eligible and qualified candidates."

According to designating petitions, Harder and Morin both appointed Clyne to their committees to fill vacancies. Furthermore, Clyne carried petitions for both, gathering 63 signatures for each

Clyne admitted that he informed Morin and Harder of the error, but neglected to tell Wagoner and Coffey, even though they may have had time to address the error. (Morin and Harder filed the lawsuit one day before the deadline to approve a substitute under election law; two days after it was filed, the candidates were still unaware of the suit.)

"Yes, I did make them aware of it," Clyne said of Morin and Harder. Asked if he had attempted to alert Wagoner, Coffey or BDC to the issue, he replied, "No, I don't have to inform them of anything. They filed a certificate and it's like any other certificate, I advise people of defects in many documents."

Asked if he felt a responsibility to alert all the candidates, he said, "No, no. This happens all the time."

Clyne also argued (essentially against himself) to invalidate the BDC substitutions during the Aug. 1 court hearing. He said his actions had nothing to do with the blighted history between himself and the respondents in the case. "It's a judgment call on my part about what I think is proper and what should be done in regard to the committee," he said. "I'm opposed to the shenanigans that were going on, swapping out candidates." Without speculating as to motivation, he criticized Meredith for going through the petitioning process and then, "jumping ship."

Clyne also noted that he carried petitions for Wagoner as well, and said he felt that he should run for the position for which the party initially supported him. "I don't think that's appropriate," he said. "It never happened in all the time I was chairman, and it never would have happened."

In a letter to BDC membership, Kuhn wrote, "Ideally, the Democratic elections commission is supposed to assist Democratic candidates and officials to avoid or correct technical compliance issues with election documents." He went on to say that BDC maintains that the documents, even if not filled out 100 percent correctly, were still valid.

In his decision, Mackey cited a number of state court cases in which minor mistakes on certificate of substitution filings have cost candidates their ballot line, including one that invalidated Republican replacements who signed the affidavit as committee officers, failing to reference their status as members of the committee to fill vacancies. "Based upon the above-cited precedent," wrote Mackey, "the certificates of substitution here must be declared invalid because the members of the committee to fill vacancies neglected to execute the requisite affidavit."

An appeal has been filed, arguing that election law does not require two signatures on a single document and that the existence of all necessary elements on the document should suffice. It also argues that the suit itself should be nullified, as Clyne, who they argue is an interested party, notarized it. The appeal also cites extensive case law, including a 1976 case in which a substitution certificate was considered valid with no affixed affidavit at all.

Barring the success of those arguments, the appeal requests that the court allow the candidates the "option to ballot," meaning that, even if their names don't appear on the pre-printed ballot, they would still have any opportunity to win the primary election through a write-in process. If the judge denies this request, there will be no primary in which to write in votes.

"I don't see how any court could overturn it," said Clyne. "The precedent is too well established. It's clearly defective, they didn't sign the affidavit, there's no getting around that."

"The voters should not be denied the right to choose based on a paperwork technicality," argued Coffey.

The parties will be heard in Appellate court on Aug. 24, and a decision is expected late in the month.

Both Harder and Morin have declined to comment while the matter is still under litigation.

"These events are obviously frustrating and disappointing," wrote Kuhn in his letter to BDC, "and my fear is that the only ultimate beneficiaries will be the Republican candidates for the offices in question in what should have been a strong Democratic year."

On Thursday, Aug. 10, BDC is holding a public meeting at Bethlehem Town Library at 7 p.m. to discuss the matter with members and determine how the committee should move forward.

Second sex abuse case dismissed

Judge rules that state's Constitution doesn't give the Justice Center authority to prosecute

jfranco@spotlightnews.com

ALBANY — For the second time, a judge tossed a sex abuse case brought by the Justice Center for the Protection of People with Special Needs based on the opinion the state agency does not have the authority to prosecute criminal charges.

The decision, made late last month by Albany County Judge William Carter, questions not only the legitimacy of the Justice Center's authority, but according to many observers, is also another step that will ultimately lead to a re-examination of every case the center has handled.

In August 2016, Justin Hope, of Guilderland, allegedly plied a client of Vanderheyden Hall with booze and marijuana, brought him to a sporting event and eventually to his apartment to engage in oral sex. In March, the former employee at the Rensselaer County home for troubled and delinquent youth and young adults, was arrested and charged with the felonies of criminal sexual abuse and endangering the welfare of an incompetent or physical disabled person as well as the misdemeanors of sexual abuse and sexual misconduct.

Carter tossed those charges, but just days prior to his decision the State Police arrested Hope — this time with Justice Center assistance — and charged him with three misdemeanors of sexual abuse in the second degree for the same incident. Those charges are still pending, and the case is being prosecuted by Rensselaer County District Attorney Joel Ablove, said a spokesman, rather than the Justice Center.

Hope's attorney, Lee Kindlon, said there is the legal issue of double jeopardy — which basically protects a person from being tried for the same charge twice — that will have to be addressed as the case proceeds.

“Can you bring charges in a different county by a different set of prosecutors? It's an interesting legal question,” he said. “I think the state is hedging their bets to see if they can get something against Justin Hope.”

In dismissing the case, Carter cited an Albany County court decision that threw out charges against Marina Viviani, a teacher at The LaSalle School in Guilderland, and a dissenting opinion in a Court of Appeals decision that determined the Justice Center does not have unilateral authority to prosecute.

In 2016, the Justice Center charged Viviani with having inappropriate sexual contact with a student. In March, Judge Thomas Breslin ruled the New York State Constitution does not allow the Justice Center the authority to bring charges. That power — he said after hearing oral arguments from Viviani's attorney, Michael Pollok, the Justice Center and the Attorney General's Office — is exclusive to the elected county DAs and the AG.

He also cited a dissenting Court of Appeals opinion, written by Justice Jenny Rivera, which strongly outlined the dangers of a legislative body giving state agencies the power to prosecute. Since that issue was not brought up at the trial level, though, the merits were not addressed by the court as a whole.

If the Justice Center did cede ultimate authority and oversight to prosecute Viviani to the DA, Breslin ruled, it would have passed legal muster. The Justice Center, however, argued that it didn't need the DA to sign off on or oversee anything because it does have the legal authority, granted by the Legislature, to prosecute. Carter saw it the same way as Breslin.

“The Justice Center maintains that record development is unnecessary as the Albany County District Attorney's Office did not maintain ultimate prosecutorial authority in this case and was not constitutionally required to do so,” Carter wrote. “Pursuant to Davidson and Viviani, this court finds that the Justice Center did not have unilateral authority to prosecute this case.”

In other words, even if the state Legislature did grant the Justice Center authority to unilaterally prosecute cases when it was created in 2012 — and opened its doors a year later — without DA oversight, it was done in violation of the state Constitution.

“I applaud their mission statement, but in reality the courts are starting to realize that not every state agency can act as its own prosecutorial authority,” Kindlon said. “Our constitution is pretty clear about who can prosecute a case, and I don't think the Justice Center has a leg to stand on.”

The Justice Center did file a notice of appeal in the Viviani case, and Kindlon seems to think when the center files the legal paperwork it will include his case, and possibly another pending case brought by the Justice Center against Nicole Hodgdon, who is accused of raping a student at Hope House in 2016.

She is being represented by Kindlon's father, Terry Kindlon, who has a motion

BCSD restructures counseling program

District officials say changes should have minimal impact on graduating seniors

By ALI HIBBS
hibbsa@spotlightnews.com

BETHLEHEM — While recent changes to student-counselor assignments throughout the Bethlehem Central School District were meant, in part, to ease the transition from the middle school to the high school, the move has some seniors concerned about how those changes could affect college recommendation letters, which may now be written by counselors with whom they are unfamiliar.

In a July 10 email, the district wrote to concerned students and their parents: “In planning for the restructuring, we developed a plan that was the least disruptive for our rising 12th graders (current 11th graders) who are in the midst of their college planning process. In order to accomplish this, many of our rising 12th graders will be keeping their current counselors, with the exception of a small group of students.”

Last year, the district evaluated its counseling program the using the American School Counselor Association (ASCA) model, according to K-12 School Counselor Supervisor Kristen Connor, to ensure academic, career and social and emotional development for all students. She noted that the restructuring was also intended to strengthen support for students transitioning from elementary to middle school as well as from middle to high school.

“We hired and assigned a counselor to each elementary building,” said Connor. “Every student will now have access to a full-time counselor. These elementary counselors work with administrators and teachers to support social-emotional curriculum, which includes, among other things, coping strategies, mindfulness and positive approaches to problem solving.”

“At the middle school, counselors collaborate with faculty and staff to implement character strength programs, mindfulness programs and also are introducing the web-based resource for career planning, Naviance, to middle school students giving them (and their parents) greater opportunities to explore fields of study and college and career information.

“The high school counseling program has been restructured to include two dedicated ninth grade counselors who will be visible at the high school and middle school, lending additional support to our eighth grade students. The five remaining counselors will serve students in grades 10-12 supporting academic, social and emotional needs of students. In addition, the district hired a Student Assistance Counselor who will provide additional support to the department and to students who have mental health needs.”

In the case of seniors who will be given a new counselor in the coming year, BCSD spokesperson Jo Ellen Gardner said, “Our counselors are professionals who communicate regularly with one another and every senior will receive the same high level of service from the Counseling Center that they expect and deserve.”

Atria Delmar Place hosts 'corny' cookoff

By DIEGO CAGARA
intern@spotlightnews.com

DELMAR — If one thinks that cooking showdowns have become corny, this is at least one case in which that could be considered a good thing.

Corn was the one required ingredient in a cooking competition that pitted four teams of two against one another at Atria Senior Living at Delmar Place. Starting at 2 p.m. on July 20, the scorching weather of that Thursday afternoon certainly intensified the cook-off, held on the driveway of the property. A chef from each Capital District Atria community—Crossgates, Guilderland, Delmar Place and Shaker—represented one half of each team, making it a friendly and local competition.

After 40 minutes during which each team prepared their dish, Albany Mayor Kathy Sheehan arrived to announce the winning team: Atria Shaker Chef Shane Perry and Albany firefighter Francisco Almonte. They created a hummus-like falafel kebab and served petite taste samples to the crowd (mainly Atria Senior Living residents).

Ana-Alysse Russo, an Atria Delmar Place chef, and Gerald Young, a Bethlehem police detective, made up the second team and crafted a scrumptious dish of sautéed shrimp in curry sauce served over risotto and corn chowder. Its Eastern-inspired taste made a visible impression on the audience.

The third team consisted of Steve Barnes, a restaurant critic from the Times Union, and Atria Crossgate Chef Kevin Hitchcock. Together, they fashioned a chicken, sausage and vegetable skewer with rosemary stems, corn, tomatoes, onions, avocado and relish underneath, making for an enriching multi-layered flavor experience.

The fourth and last team was Atria Guilderland Chef David Peralta and Lt. Anthony Geraci of the Albany Police Department. They created stuffed chicken breast with peppers, mushroom, basil, garlic and cheese as well as couscous with corn, chives and rosemary tomatoes.

"They're torturing us," quipped one of the audience members who anxiously watched as the teams were still making their dishes. "With the smell of the food and them cooking right in front of us, it's like torture."

A panel of judges, including Divisional Director of Culinary Services Scott Weaver and Steve Heider, a retired Chief of Police of Colonie, judged the dishes on three categories: taste, presentation and originality. As they tried each of the dishes, they filled out forms which ultimately led to deciding who the winner of the competition was.

Prior to the actual competition, a wide array of ingredients was visible on an elongated table to the side, including tomatoes, red peppers, vegetables, sausage, garlic, shrimp, eggs, garlic and of course, corn. It was comical to watch as the four teams of grown adults rushed to the table to yank all the ingredients they each wanted for their anticipated dishes.

"Everybody is winging it," said one of the event hosts after asking each team what they were planning on making when the competition kicked off. Having no idea at first, the chefs' concentration was evident as they gathered all their preferred ingredients and pondered for a few moments what they could create.

Barnes even openly asked the residents what they wanted and some notably replied, "Corn fritters!" while someone else requested, "Please no onions!"

Trash talk, albeit all in good fun, sometimes permeated the competition with the teams reminded that "two chefs here are armed" and that "everyone has knives," garnering laughter from the crowd.

David Peralta jokingly underestimated the other teams by saying that "they don't know to cook."

"Don't overcook your shrimp, it'll get too dry," Kevin Hitchcock also passively remarked to Ana-Alysse Russo who in turn, shook her head and declared, "I'm no amateur!" Hearing the audience fake gasp made this local family-friendly event even more enjoyable, one onlooker even calling out in support of Russo, "Good for you!"

Each team insisted that its dishes were original and from brand new recipes, spicing up the competition even more. It was an intimate event as the teams catered to the judges and the Atria Senior Living residents, ensuring everyone felt involved by providing taste samples and listening to people's cuisine preferences.

A long-term health care industry is challenged by an aging generation

By MICHAEL HALLISEY
halliseym@spotlightnews.com

As a generation grows older, concerns loom over how a health care industry is going to meet the demands of its needs.

Experts agree that the United States is on the path of a potential staffing crisis within the long-term care industry. They just can't put a finger on how severe that will become.

The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics sees the need to add 1.1 million workers — personal care aides, home health aides and nursing assistants — by 2024, a 26 percent increase over 2014. Another study more than doubles that estimate. The Philip R. Lee Institute for Health Policy Studies at the University of California San Francisco published a report in 2015 that estimates staffing demands for long-term care workers will rise by 2.5 million in less than 15 years.

The study predicts there will be little impact on demand for new workers even if long-term care use shifts from institutional care to home-based care.

"Even if 20 percent of elderly patients move out of nursing homes into home health care, which would be huge change, the projected increase in demand for long-term care workers would only drop from 79 percent to 74 percent," said lead author Joanne Spetz, PhD, professor at the UCSF Phillip R. Lee Institute for Health Policy Studies and associate director for research strategy at the UCSF Center for the Health Professions. "Filling these jobs will be a big challenge under any scenario."

Spetz and his fellow authors note that 20 percent of Americans will be 65 years or older by 2030, and that 19 million adults will need long-term care services by 2050, up from 8 million in 2000.

The industry is challenged to meet the growing need for health care workers. Entry-level positions on average provide an under-whelming $10 an hour, and some argue that the career path provides little opportunity to advance. The UCSF report points to policy makers and educators to "redouble" efforts in recruiting, training and maintaining long-term care workers.

"Health care workers are the backbone of public health system," said New York State Assembly Speaker Carl Heastie. "We want to ensure that New York's dedicated nurses are provided sensible and manageable workloads so they can focus on providing excellent care for each of their patients."

While the UCSF report published in the June 2015 edition of "Health Affairs," New York state was already working to address the issue. The state passed a bill to require acute care facilities and nursing homes to adopt minimum staffing requirements, establishing a safe nurse-patient ratio.

The bill would require a hospital or nursing home's application for an operating certificate to contain a staffing plan with standards for nurse-patient ratios and require compliance with the standards established. Additionally, it would require acute care facilities to publicly disclose their staffing requirements and direct the Department of Health to consider an applicant's staffing violations when reviewing applications and renewals for its operating certificate.

"The number of patients assigned to a nurse has a direct impact on the quality of care that nurse can provide," said Assemblymember Aileen Gunther. "This bill would go a long way to improve patient care and reduce incidences of adverse outcomes for health care facilities."

This story is an excerpt from the feature article published in this month's Senior Spotlight monthly magazine.

“This is like a pre-game,” Mike said. “You get familiar with the group settings and how things go in meetings and you open up a little bit about yourself. In jail, you never get to work on things like that. You always deal with all the nonsense that goes on in jail like fights and drugs and smoking. Down here, you are with a group of guys trying to get to the same goal and that goal is to break the cycle.”

SHARP

Sheriff Craig Apple started SHARP in 2015 in an underutilized wing in the bowels of the jail to give inmates a chance at treatment while they pay their debt to society. They are in jail anyway, so it gives new meaning to the phrase “captive audience.”

But, the program is voluntary and the men who sign up do not get any time off their sentence, they live in a bunk-house type setting with far less privacy than the general population, they share one bathroom and are often mocked by “tough” inmates in general population.

There are no advantages to being an inmate being in SHARP outside of getting help to beat their addictions.

Apple reached out to the Addiction Care Center, who with some creative financing provided the initial counselors, and now the state Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse Services kicks in some money and more money is expected from state politicians.

Other jails across the country are following suit, and law enforcement from as far away as England have come to check out the program that does not directly cost Albany County taxpayers any additional money because the wing was already there and the staff would be guarding the inmates anyway.

“There are bad people out there doing horrific things and they will get theirs,” Apple said. “They are not what this program is about. This program is about the people doing nuisance crimes and committing small offenses and if they get out of jail without help they will do it again and it costs taxpayers and society millions of dollars every year. This is a way to break that cycle.

“And it’s working. Lives are being changed in that unit.”

Sixty-one of the 81 people who were released from SHARP into treatment are still in treatment. Thirty-four have been in treatment for more than seven months. The recidivism rate for SHARP inmates is about 12.6 percent, Apple said, compared to a rate of 75 percent for drug addicts who don’t get any treatment.

Joan Wennstrom, a credentialed alcohol and substance abuse counselor who screens inmates for SHARP and works with them once they are enrolled, called it a “restorative approach” to criminal justice with the goal of restoring a sense of personal responsibility. Ultimately, she said, recovery is up to the individual and SHARP helps inmates find their way through a litany of barriers to that end.

“There is more responsibility on them to succeed than on any structure,” she said.

While SHARP is not a 12-step program, the inmates hold their own Narcotics Anonymous meetings and support each other, not just with the addiction, but with other problems and issues that come with being incarcerated. That support, and helping each other deal with being in jail and staying away from that first hit or drink, is a fundamental cornerstone of successful, long-term recovery.

“I spent years and years beating myself

“You get familiar with the group settings and how things go in meetings and you open up a little bit about yourself. In jail, you never get to work on things like that. You always deal with all the nonsense that goes on in jail like fights and drugs and smoking. Down here, you are with a group of guys trying to get to the same goal and that goal is to break the cycle.”

— Mike,
an inmate enrolled in SHARP

up to come to this point in my life where I realize I can’t do it by myself,” said an inmate named Orlando. “The SHARP program, and being around other people who are fighting the same addiction you are fighting is crucial. I’ve tried to do this on my own and can’t. It’s the old way of thinking that causes me to keep using.”

The program has been so successful for the male inmates, the sheriff is planning on opening a women’s version in the coming weeks.

The ONDCP found half of all those incarcerated are drug addicts or alcoholics.

What makes an addict is an ongoing debate. Is it a disease, as defined by the American Medical Association or is it the result of bad choices that eventually leads to a physical addiction? In the end, most agree, the argument is moot. The cycle of active addiction and the costs associated with drug and alcohol abuse is black and white.

Breaking the cycle

“I’ve been in and out of jail since 1995. I’ve heard about this program before but this time around I’m coming to terms with drugs,” said an inmate named Nathan. “I’ve been in recovery before, and I figured this time around I would participate and I would have some clean time when I get out instead of just jail time.”

In a very real sense, the program is rehabilitative rather than punitive, which is especially important given the fact the inmates will spend at most a year in county jail before being released back into society.

“We can have them return after just having done jail time, or we can return them with a sense of purpose, or renewed sense of purpose, and address those areas of deficiency that got them involved in the criminal justice system and subsequently incarcerated,” said Theron Rockwell, director of programs for the Albany County Jail.

“I spent years and years beating myself up to come to this point in my life where I realize I can’t do it by myself. The SHARP program, and being around other people who are fighting the same addiction you are fighting is crucial. I’ve tried to do this on my own and can’t. It’s the old way of thinking that causes me to keep using.”

— Orlando,
an inmate enrolled in SHARP

The cost of addiction

According to a 2014 National Survey on Drug Use and Health, 21.5 million Americans battle a form of substance abuse. Drug abuse and addiction cost our society about $200 billion in healthcare, criminal justice, legal and lost workplace production according to the Office on National Drug Control Policy.

According to the federal Bureau of Justice Statistics, it costs federal, state and local governments $80 billion a year to incarcerate criminals. In this state, it’s about $66,000 per year to keep a person locked up in a state or county facility.

A study by Washington University in St. Louis, suggests that national number jumps to $1 trillion when societal costs like broken families, employment issues and the cost of social service programs are factored in.

“We are re-training them to be people,” said Kerry Thompson, chief deputy at the Albany County Jail.

The desire to break the cycle was a common, passionate theme among the inmates as they sat in a semi-circle dressed in orange hospital-type pants and gray SHARP T-shirts. That is what the program, and how it is structured, is designed to do as it prepares them for a clean and sober life on the outside.

“People say jail is an end but here, in this program, jail is a beginning,” Mike said. “It makes things easier when you come out of jail. Life can hit you fast with bills and family and other things coming at you. Without recovery you are not going to be good at any of those things.

“Here, we are safe. There are no drugs and no booze. We are safe in here. But out there, and with our free will, we can do what we want and that’s when the real test begins.”

CDTA, CDPHP launch area's first bicycle share program

ALBANY COUNTY — When it's just too nice to take a bus, and too far to walk, a bike ride could be a perfect option. Plus, it's more fun, you get a more intimate experience of your surroundings, you get a work out and pedaling is better for the environment than any combustible engine.

All that is now easier to accomplish with the Capital District's first bike share program which was launched July 26, by the Capital District Transportation Authority and CDPHP.

"Through CDPHPCycle!, we are proud to offer another mobility option that helps residents explore the region," said CDTA Board Chair David Stackrow. "CDPHP is a great partner and supporter, and we are looking forward to this next chapter."

There will be 160 bikes at 41 bike stations in Albany, Schenectady, Troy and Saratoga Springs.

"While CDPHP and CDTA have very different business models – health insurance and transportation – we were both born and raised in the Capital Region, and share in our commitment to the health and economic vitality of this region," said CDPHP President and CEO John D. Bennett.

CDPHPCycle! riders can purchase a membership or load a pay-as-you-go account by registering online or downloading the CDPHPCycle! mobile app. For a limited time, bicyclists can purchase a CDPHPCycle! founding membership and ride 90 minutes a day for two years for $105.

The fee for an hour-long ride is $5. A monthly membership is available for $15 and allows an hour a day of riding and an annual membership costing $70 also allows for an hour a day of ride time. Students can sign up for $35 a year and get an hour a day of free time on a bike.

"CDTA has been promoting healthier lifestyles and a healthier community for years through its bikeable bus program and now the first regional bike-share program," said Albany County Executive Daniel P. McCoy. "We're reducing our carbon footprint for a greener environment and engaging in healthy, physical activity."

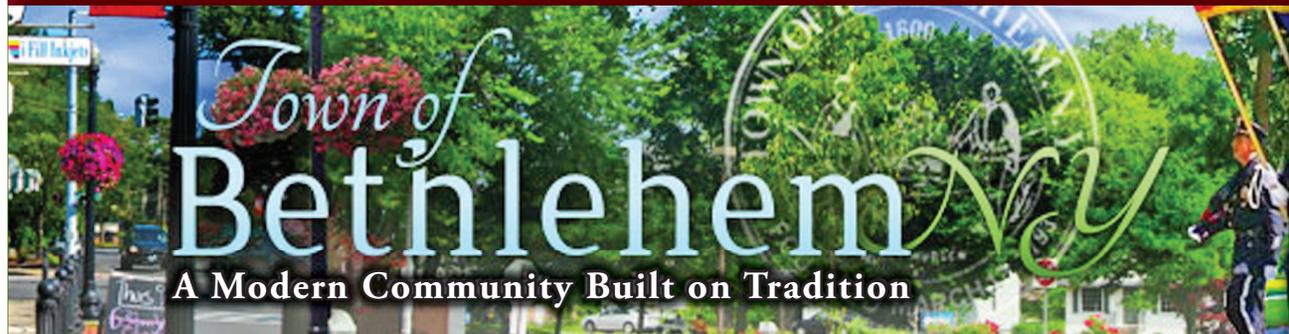

Business owners are already happy with the program because common sense dictates that someone is much more apt to stop and shop while on a bike than on a bus.

"The businesses of Central Avenue are thrilled and want to extend their gratitude to everyone who is working together to develop and implement a plan that brings bike-share stations to our area," said Central Avenue BID Executive Director Anthony Capece. "CDPHP Cycle! will bring a new level of mobility to the capital city area, as well as the opportunity for economic growth as a more geared up city!"

Second sex abuse case dismissed

before Judge Roger McDonough to dismiss the charges based on the same legal argument.

Pollok, in a statement, said: "While I am not familiar with all the facts and circumstances of this new case, we maintain that only the Attorney General or county District Attorneys, or their duly appointed deputies and assistants, may prosecute crimes under the New York State Constitution."

If, as expected, the Court of Appeals does eventually hear the merits of the Justice Center's right to prosecute, it could allow the agency to continue operating as it has or it could force a change in how it does business.

"The 911 bill is vital and I shouldn't have to fight for it," said Michael Carey, a disability rights activist since losing his son Jonathan about 10 years ago. "We have local authorities in every town and county throughout the state and we have systems in place which is the normal 911 system and the normal criminal justice system. To treat the mentally ill and the disabled any differently is discrimination."

His 911 bill would mandate every instance of abuse or neglect be reported to the authorities through 911 system rather than the individual agencies reporting such cases to the Justice Center. He claims to have had the support of the majority of legislators in Albany but the leaders refused to bring the bill to a floor for a vote.

Representatives for the Justice Center did not return requests for comment.

Tri-Village eliminated by Saratoga

EAST GREENBUSH — It was a back and forth, exciting game that either team could have won and neither team deserved to lose.

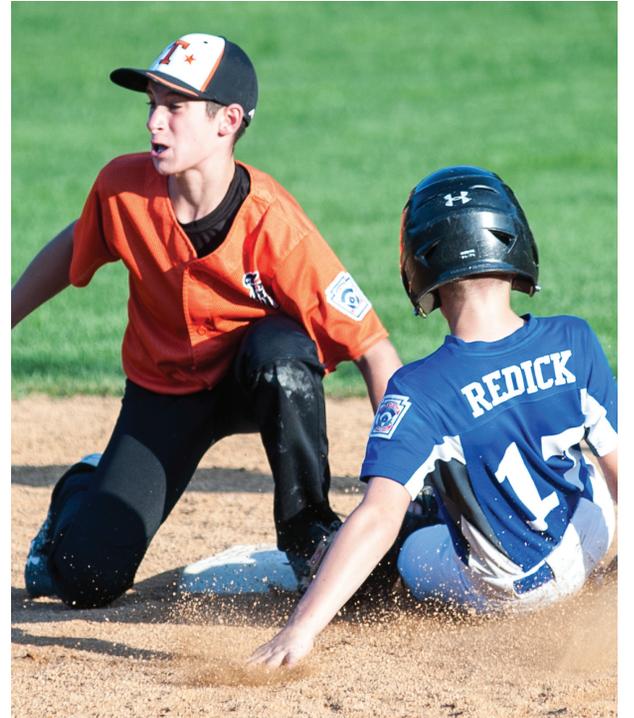

But, the 9-11-year-old Little League team from Saratoga prevailed 19-17 over the squad from Tri-Village on Monday, July 31, in East Greenbush, the District 14 state tournament hosts.

Tri-Village beat Cortlandt America, of Westchester County, in the first round, then lost to Plainview 25-5 and was finally eliminated by Saratoga.

Saratoga lost to Baldwinsville, from outside Syracuse, in the first round then beat Webster, a Rochester suburb, 11-1 before beating Tri-Village.

Saratoga lost to North Bellmore/North Merrick, of Long Island on Tuesday, Aug. 1, and was eliminated from the tournament.

Mid-Island, of Staten Island, cruised to the championship without losing a game, and beat North Bellmore/North Merrick on Thursday, Aug. 3, in the finals.

Photos are from Tri-Village versus Saratoga National in the New York State 9-11-year-old Little League tournament on July 31 in East Greenbush.

FROM THE EDITOR'S DESK

Keep the amusement at the fair

Amusement rides are as safe today as they were yesterday, and the day before.

Despite last month's news on the fatal accident that killed an 18-year-old at the Ohio State Fair, the rides you've grown to love are as safe as they have been. On the other side of the coin, they are as susceptible to accidents as they have always been, too.

The Altamont Fair opens its gates next week, and it is the start of a two-year celebration of its 125-year history. It serves as the greater Capital District's summer fair, and for those who have grown up here, it is the setting to many good memories.

We reached out to the fair's organizers this year, and specifically asked about the rides. You'd probably be surprised that the question was expected, and welcomed. After all, here is the opportunity to speak with our readers on the one topic that will concern all who choose to attend. Perhaps, most importantly, it may be the biggest factor that draws people away from the fair this year.

Let's be honest. From the moment we all step upon the paved area that is the Altamont Fair's midway, we each have determined ourselves to be one of two people: thrill seekers or casual observer.

For the thrill seeker, the fair conjures up the anticipation of riding as many of the rides as humanly possible. With, perhaps, a tried and true method of avoiding motion sickness. There's also the excitement that comes from the grand reveal of the newest ride, often described as the next, scariest thing.

The casual observer sits on the sidelines. The midway may not even be a priority.

But, upon visiting, the sight of some rides serve as a reminder as to why you choose to keep your feet planted on the ground.

Today's headlines should not deter anyone from visiting the fair this year.

Every time the fair comes to town, the state Department of Labor inspects your favorite stomach-churning metal contraption designed specifically to bring back that fried dough you ate ten minutes before.

Whether you choose to ride this year or not is certainly your choice. But, consider how often the fair has rolled into town, and how few accidents have occurred — if you can remember any. Each ride is inspected before each fair. Every time the fair comes to town, the state Department of Labor inspects your favorite stomach-churning metal contraption designed specifically to bring back that fried dough you ate ten minutes before.

According to the Department of Labor's website, there is a three-step process for each inspection:

Each individual part and component of a ride is inspected for defects.

The ride is assembled and inspected again to ensure that all components have been assembled and secured properly.

Ride operators run each ride before yet another inspection. The person operating the ride is also observed to ensure that he or she is operating the ride correctly.

Last year, inspectors performed nearly 1,600 inspections on more than 9,000 amusement devices and issued more than 2,900 orders to correct violations.

If everyone follows the rules, people should be safe to go on those amusement rides, as they had in the past. We don't expect to convert the casual observer out there to hop on a ride. But, if you've always been a thrill seeker, we hope this brings back your confidence.

WHAT HAPPENED 11 YEARS AGO

2006: Jury finds Porco guilty of murder

ORANGE COUNTY — It took a jury fewer than six hours to find Christopher Porco guilty of the murder of his father, Peter Porco, and the attempted murder of his mother, Joan Porco, during an overnight ax attack that took place at their Brockley Drive home in Bethlehem on Nov. 15, 2004.

Jury deliberation began at 10:25 a.m. on Thursday, Aug. 10 and, by 4:12 p.m., the foreperson handed a decision to Judge Jeffrey Berry and the verdict was read.

"On the charge of second-degree murder, how do you find the defendant, Christopher Porco?" asked Berry.

"Guilty, Your Honor," said the foreperson.

A guilty verdict was read again on the second-degree attempted murder of Porco's mother, Joan. Jurors, one by one, pronounced the defendant "Guilty" in front of the defendant and his attorneys, Terence Kindlon and Laurie Shanks.

"The verdict was certainly quicker than we expected," said Kindlon.

Notably absent from courtroom 15 in Orange County Supreme Court, where the verdict was read, was Joan Porco, who almost died from injuries sustained in the attack. She was resting in her hotel room and was not alerted in time to be present in the courtroom when the verdict was handed down. She defended her son and stood by his side throughout the trial.

"We stand before you crushed and profoundly disappointed," said Kindlon.

The 23-year-old Porco slowly stood up as Berry thanked the jury and adjourned sentencing for Oct. 25. The hand and foot cuffs were placed on the prisoner and he was sent away through a side door as two young female friends of Porco hugged and sobbed as they watched police escort him out of the courtroom.

Bethlehem Det. Christopher Bowdish and Bethlehem Police Chief Lou Corsi were present in the courtroom when the verdict was read, as was Patty Szostak, the sister of the late State Appellate Judge Law Clerk Peter Porco.

"I have very mixed feelings," said Szostak. "This has been a long haul for our family and very tragic. I have to trust the process, which is what my brother would want."

Chief Prosecutor Michael McDermott said that although he was pleased by the verdict, the outcome was still very sad.

"I don't know what is going to happen to Mrs. Porco from here on out," he said.

The quick deliberation surprised everyone in attendance, as the case had gone on for more than seven weeks. McDermott credited Assistant District Attorney David Rossi for his outstanding legwork leading up to the trial.

The trial was moved to Orange County due to the amount of coverage on the case.

"It was a big huge inconvenience, but at the end of the day, it probably worked out in our benefit," said McDermott.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Don't misrepresent committee endorsements

To the Editor,
 "It was the intent of the committee to fill vacancies to make those two substitutions, and the petition filed by Harder and Morin is completely invalid. They're trying to deprive the voters of their right to choose in the September 12 primary..." — Dan Coffey, The Spotlight July, 28 2017

The above is Dan Coffey's comment to a lawsuit filed by Democrats Dan Morin and George Harder that sought to remove Coffey, candidate for Town Board, and Giles Wagoner, Candidate for Highway Supervisor, from the September Democratic Primary ballot. On Tuesday, Judge Michael Mackey ruled in favor of Morin and Harder, finding that certificates of substitution are invalid "because the members of the committee to fill vacancies neglected to execute the requisite affidavit."

In essence, Judge Mackey ruled that failing to sign the documents is not a "technicality." Although a strong advocate for ballot access, this particular ruling doesn't get my "Irish up." Here's why.

On May 11, 2017, the Bethlehem Democratic Committee (BDC) met and endorsed candidates for Town offices; among them were Maureen Cunningham and Giles Wagoner for Town Board and Brent Meredith for Highway Superintendent.

There have been no meetings of the BDC since.

However, a July 12th press release, authored by BDC Chairman Jeffrey Kuhn refers to Coffey and Wagoner as "endorsed" Democratic candidates. That statement was not true. The BDC-at large never endorsed Coffey for Town Board or Wagoner for Highway Superintendent. Instead, a "committee to fill vacancies" (BCD Chair Kuhn, First-Vice Chair Coffey and Second-Vice Chair Pam Skripak) selected these candidates.

This is not nitpicking. There is an important distinction between an endorsement by the 60-person BDC, and a candidate who is selected by three people. Further, this is not the first time Kuhn and Coffey have done end-run around's or misrepresented a BDC position.

In 2014, without consulting the Committee, Kuhn, Coffey, and other members of the BDC leadership undertook a secret campaign to support hand-picked candidates for Committee seats in advance of the September primary. They published campaign literature, financed with Committee monies, in support of their candidates.

In 2015, again without first consulting the Committee, Kuhn and Coffey in a letter to Judge Kahn dated April 17, 2015 interjected the BDC as "Interveners" into the Albany County voter rights settlement, a matter of no business to the BDC. Legislative districting lines were, however, a matter of keen interest to Kuhn, who earlier announced he would be running for county legislature.

Voters do want choice at the ballot box. Bethlehem Democrats also want and expect clarity and honesty from the leadership of the Bethlehem Democratic Committee.

What's next? Chairman Kuhn and the BDC leadership are now appealing Judge Mackey's decision to the Appellate Division. We'll see how that plays out.

Regardless of that decision, let two things be clear: Responsibility for the current fiasco rests squarely with Chairman Kuhn and the BDC leadership. And, the Bethlehem Democratic Committee-at large never endorsed the candidacies of Dan Coffey and Giles Wagoner.

— Sean Raleigh,
 Member, Bethlehem Democratic Committee

Ballot or no, still has support

To the Editor,
 Regarding last week's article on Mr. Coffey and Mr. Wagoner being denied access to the Democratic line - This act of removing a choice from voters is an example of old school politics that does a disservice to our citizens. Mr. Morin, Mr. Harder, and especially Mr. Clyne are attempting to take away voters' opportunity to select their own candidates on the Democratic line. I fully support the candidacy of Dan Coffey for Town Board and Giles Wagoner for Highway Superintendent. They have both contributed to the betterment of our town, serving in multiple volunteer capacities to make Bethlehem a great place to live.

— Jeff Baker,
 Member, Bethlehem Democratic Committee

GUILDERLAND — The Altamont Fair is staging a two-year celebration of its 125th anniversary when it opens the gates Tuesday, Aug. 15.

Though, technically speaking, this will be Altamont's 124th annual fair, "the fair was started by a group of Albany men in 1892," said Bev Filkins, chairperson of the Altamont Fair's 125th Celebration Committee. "But, the actual fair did not start until 1893."

The Altamont Fair runs from Tuesday, Aug. 15 to Sunday, Aug. 20.

Choral tryouts

Albany Pro Musica announces auditions for 2017-2018 Season

TROY — Albany Pro Musica, the premiere choral ensemble of the Capital District, will host auditions for its Masterworks and Concert choruses for the 2017-2018 season.

Albany Pro Musica has established a reputation as the preeminent chorus in the Capital Region due to their inspiring a cappella choral music as well as stirring performances with the Canadian Brass, New York City Ballet, Philadelphia Orchestra, Albany Symphony and the Orchestra Pro Musica. Albany Pro Musica follows an exciting season of music in 2016-2017 with the commencement of a rare 3-year residency of internationally acclaimed Norwegian-American composer Ola Gjeilo.

This season the Concert Chorus performs four subscription concerts ranging from evocative works by the newly appointed Composer-In-Residence Ola Gjeilo, to the not-to-be-missed Maurten Lauridsen's "Lux Aeterna."

The Masterworks Chorus meets again next spring of to perform the thrilling "Requiem" by Michael Haydn with full orchestra and professional soloists.

Rehearsals for both ensembles are held at University at Albany each Tuesday evening. Concert choir rehearsal begins Tuesday, Sept. 5, and the first Masterworks rehearsal begins next March.

Auditions for both groups will be held at the University at Albany Tuesday through Thursday, August 15 to 17, from 5 to 7 p.m. To schedule an audition, contact Joseph Farrell, assistant conductor and director of education by email at JoeFar@albanypromusica.org or call (518) 248-3510.

The season opener entitled "Across the Vast Eternal Sky" will feature a program of the music from Gjeilo, with the composer himself at the piano featuring the world-class American String Quartet next to the exquisite voices of Albany Pro Musica.

Concerts this season feature both old beloved and new music, continuing with the popular "Many Moods of Christmas" on Sunday, Dec. 17 and "Broadway Returns" next March, Morten Lauridsen's "Lux Aeterna" and Michael Haydn's "Requiem" next May.

Albany Pro Musica will host the High School Choral Festival next January, this time featuring composer Ola Gjeilo and the musicians of Ma'awlwyck as guest artists Season subscriptions and single tickets for all concerts can be purchased online at www.albanypromusica.org or by phone at (518) 273-0038.

Albany Pro Musica is admired for its mastery of intimate a cappella works and is critically acclaimed for performances of large scale choral and orchestral works. APM is the Chorus-in-Residence at the historic Troy Savings Bank Music Hall, and enjoys a long-standing collaboration with the University at Albany where rehearsals and master classes take place. The organization also participates in civic, educational and community musical events, and regularly partners with local high schools, the Capital District Youth Chorale, the Albany Symphony Orchestra, the New York City Ballet and the Philadelphia Orchestra at Saratoga Performance Arts Center.

In that time, the fair has gone by many different names, said Filkins. Which explains why the organization responsible for putting the fair together each year is officially known as the Albany, Schenectady, Greene County Agricultural & Historical Societies, Inc. (But, for everyone's sake, it does business as The Altamont Fair.)

Organizers formed a committee last October to gather the fair's history. Members reached out to the surrounding community, garnering memorabilia from local townspeople. The effort produced items from historians and collectors. The donated artifacts, some dating back to the 1800s, were placed on display at libraries in Guelderland and Altamont earlier this year. A larger exhibit is planned for the fair next week.

"We will try to archive and preserve what we have," said Filkins.

Schenectady author and historian Don Rittner was hired by The Altamont Fair to write a book, which is expected to be out within the next year. Filkins said the initial effort to gather information developed into the desire to retain the history for future generations. "It may not follow the theme of the 125th celebration, but this is getting us excited to [archive] it."

What is new at the Altamont Fair?

The fair is connected to 21st century technology. Organizers developed a mobile app available from both Google Play and iTunes to keep fair-goers abreast with the latest changes in entertainment. A Facebook page will also encourage people to share photos with the rest of the internet community. The entertainment, however, continues to be defined by that which can be found at the midway, and outside of it.

"New this year, we are having the 'Nerger's

Tigers" featuring rare white tigers," Amy Anderson, the fair manager, "We also have 'World of Wonders' staged in the tradition of old time sideshows, features a sword swallower, a fire eater and some very corny jokes. Michael DeSchalit, master hypnotist, will also perform with his show 'Magically Speaking,' a family-friendly, amazing magic show."

Also new to the fair is a 7-act show from Circus Hollywood, and dog tricks by Dynamo Dogs.

What is returning to the Altamont Fair?

"We have expanded our Agriculture Awareness Trail and Hands-on Farming exhibit, designed to educate and entertain," said Anderson. "The Baby Animal exhibit is returning to give our smaller patrons an opportunity to see the farm animals on their level."

"Clayhaven Farms Belgians are returning to stay all week, pulling our antique fire steam engine and water wagon," said Anderson. "The Giraffe Park petting zoo is a family favorite, with Twigs the Giraffe."

Peter and the Master

Keys will lead off the line up of live music, playing cool jazz on Wednesday. Skeeter Creek follows with a performance on Thursday night. Friday night showcases Bobby Stillwell with a few of his friends in a lively Party Rock performance, and Moonshine Junkies, perform Saturday night with a high-energy modern country set.

One-price admission includes unlimited rides, attractions, Circus Hollywood under the big top, and parking. Admission is $15 at the gate on Tuesday and Wednesday, and $17 at the gate Thursday through Sunday. Wednesday is Senior and Military Day – seniors 65 years and up along with members of the Armed Forces are free until 4 p.m. including rides. Save money by purchasing your tickets online for only $15, you can use the ticket any day of the fair on www.altamontfair.com.

"This is going to be a very, very tremendous fair this year, because of all the work we've done," said Filkins.

LOCALIZED NEWS

How safe are the rides?

ALTAMONT — Concerns over the safety of amusement rides have peaked since last month's fatal accident at the Ohio State Fair.

Now that the area's largest fair is preparing to open, what is to be said about the safety of the rides planned for the Altamont Fair?

"It's important for the public to know that the amusement devices we all enjoy are safe for use," said State Labor Commissioner Roberta Reardon. "Credit is due to the hardworking inspectors in the field who carefully examine each and every ride to make sure they're safe for use."

The New York state Department of Labor inspects all rides at stationary parks outside of New York City at least once a year and inspects rides at traveling carnivals or fairs every time the rides are set up in a new location. A ride cannot legally operate without a permit from the Department of Labor.

The rides at each of our regional fairs are provided by amusement companies that travel the country. Amusements of America, which provided the rides at the Ohio State Fair, is among the largest and travels throughout the East Coast.

"Our hearts go out to everyone involved," said Altamont Fair Treasurer Pat Canaday, speaking on the Ohio State Fair accident that killed one 18-year-old and injured several more.

Altamont Fair employs a different service through Dreamland Amusements Inc. In addition, Canaday said employees of the amusement company are certified National Association of Amusement Ride Safety Officers and trained on state requirements.

A list of the events that have been inspected is available online at www.labor.ny.gov/ride-safety/.

No Maps on my Taps

In 1979, the art of tap dance was re-energized with the release of this landmark film by George T. Nierenberg, featuring music by Lionel Hampton and the dance artistry of Bunny Briggs, Chuck Green, and Harold "Sandman" Sims. A hit with audiences and critics, the talent and ebullient charisma of the three dancers absolutely shines through on every frame. Unavailable for years the film has been restored from the original camera negative and is ready to thrill a new generation. Screening with Nierenberg's restored short film, About Tap! Not rated. 86 minutes. Fri., Aug. 11 at 3, 5, and 7 p.m.; also Wed., Aug. 16, at 7 p.m. GE Theatre, Proctors, 432 State St., Schenectady. $5. (518) 346-6204 or www.proctors.org

Dirty Dancing

"Baby" (Jennifer Grey) is disappointed when her summer plans deposit her at a sleepy resort in the Catskills with her parents. Her luck turns around, however, when the resort's dance instructor, Johnny (Patrick Swayze), enlists her as his new partner and the two fall in love. Though her father forbids her from seeing Johnny, she's determined to help him perform at the summer's last big dance. Rated PG-13. 100 minutes. Mon., Aug. 14, at 2:30, 4:45 and 7 p.m. GE Theatre, Proctors, 432 State St., Schenectady. $5. (518) 346-6204 or www.proctors.org

National Theatre:

Angels in America, Part 1: The Millennium Approaches

In the midst of the AIDS crisis and a conservative Reagan administration, New Yorkers grapple with life and death, love and sex, heaven and hell. Tues., Aug. 15, at 1:30 and 6:30 p.m. GE Theatre, Proctors, 432 State St., Schenectady. $15. (518) 346-6204 or tickets.proctors.org

Key Largo

John Huston co-wrote and compellingly directs this film of Maxwell Anderson's 1939 play with a searing Academy Award-winning performance by Claire Trevor as Rocco's gold-hearted, boozy girlfriend. A hurricane swells outside, but it's nothing compared to the storm within the hotel at Key Largo. There, sadistic mobster Johnny Rocco (Edward G. Robinson) holes up — and holds at gunpoint hotel owner Nora

Temple (Lauren Bacall), her invalid father-in-law (Lionel Barrymore) and ex-GI Frank McCloud (Humphrey Bogart). McCloud's the one man capable of standing up against the belligerent Rocco. But the postwar world's realities may have taken all the fight out of him. Part of the Capitol Park After Dark Movie Series. Wed., Aug. 16, 8 p.m. West Capitol Park, State Capitol, between State Street and Washington Avenue. Free. (518) 474-4759 or summer.empirestateplaza.org

I Am The Blues

Featuring interviews and performances with many of the genre's luminaries. Raw and true to the bone, no character in this film is faking who they are. It is inspiring to see how this group of tough old guys and gals have succeeded in transcending their material circumstances to create something truly beautiful. They may not have much, but what they do with what they have is a joy to witness. If you want to know about the people who eat, sleep and drink the blues, this film is for you. Not rated. 116 minutes. Thurs., Aug. 17 at 7 p.m., and Fri., Aug. 18, at 2, 4:30 and 7:30 p.m. GE Theatre, Proctors, 432 State St., Schenectady. $5. (518) 346-6204 or tickets.proctors.org

Hairspray

John Waters' original version stars Ricki Lake as the "pleasantly plump" teenager who teaches 1962 Baltimore a thing or two about integration after landing a spot on a local TV dance show. Also starring Divine, Sony Bono, Debbie Harry, Jerry Stiller, Vitamin C, Ric Ocasek, Mink Stole and Pia Zadora. Rated PG. 90 minutes. Mon., Aug. 21, 3, 5 and 7 p.m. GE Theatre, Proctors, 432 State St., Schenectady. $5. (518) 346-6204 or tickets.proctors.org

HOROSCOPES

August 2017 Week 2

CAPRICORN

December 22 – January 19
No, no, no, Capricorn! It can't be, but it is. Look for the silver lining. There is much good to be found. An opportunity resurfaces. Nab it.

AQUARIUS

January 20– February 18
Nothing is set in stone, Aquarius. Be flexible and open to suggestions. This is a group effort. A friend provides valuable insight into a dilemma at home.

PISCES

February 19 – March 20
It's true, Pisces. A loved one is in over their head. Help them out if you can. If not, point them to someone who can. A deadline is extended.

ARIES

March 21 – April 19
A friend receives mixed signals. Advise them to proceed with caution. An avenue once closed reopens. Enter it if you dare, Aries. A package arrives.

TAURUS

April 20 – May 20
Feel like you're looking for a needle in a haystack? That's because you are, Taurus. Try a different tactic. A home improvement project begins.

GEMINI

May 21 – June 21
Got the summertime blues, Gemini? Look to a youngster for the cure. A traipse down memory lane inspires a trip to someplace out of the way.

CANCER

June 22 – July 22
Ugh, Cancer. No matter what you do, you cannot get through to a friend. Step aside and let someone else have a stab at it. Travel plans are made.

LEO

July 23 – August 22
A health crisis comes to an end, and old faces come back into the fold. It's time for a celebration. Bring your pals over for a summer feast, Leo.

VIRGO

August 23 – September 22
Make of it what you will, Virgo, but you know deep down the assessment is fair. There are improvements to be made. Get a move on.

LIBRA

September 23 – October 22
Are you kidding, Libra? You know better than to ask that friend for help. They rarely come through for you. Look to a trusted mentor instead.

SCORPIO

October 23 – November 21
Love takes hold, and you are in for some very romantic evenings this week, Scorpio. Enjoy every minute, as work will soon rear its ugly head.

SAGITTARIUS

November 22 – December 21
Alas, Sagittarius. You've been vying for the attention of the wrong person. Take a step back to regroup and then try again. A matter is settled.

Banana Glazed Butterflied Pork Tenderloin

By MICKEY SPELVIN

news@spotlightnews.com

Ingredients

1 1/4 lb pork tenderloin

Rub:

1 Tbs paprika

1 tsp garlic pepper

1 tsp kosher salt

1/2 tsp chili powder (I used New Mexico red)

1 tsp brown sugar

1/2 tsp dried thyme

Banana Glaze:

1 ea large ripe banana, mashed

1 Tbs butter

1/2 cup red onion, minced

1 clove garlic, minced

1/4 cup chicken stock

3/4 cup fresh orange juice

2 tsp Worcestershire sauce

1 Tbs dark rum

1 tsp honey

1 tsp brown sugar

salt/garlic pepper to taste

Directions

Combine the dry rub ingredients and coat the pork with spice mixture. Refrigerate for at least one hour so flavors can meld. In a heavy saucepan, melt butter over medium heat. Add shallots and saute until transparent; about four to five minutes. Add garlic and saute until fragrant; about a minute. Add the remaining glaze ingredients; reduce the heat to medium-low, and simmer for about 10 minutes, stirring frequently. Use an immersion blender (boat motor) to liquify the sauce. Taste for seasoning and adjust as necessary. The finished glaze should be thickened but still pourable. Fire up the grill to high heat. Remove the pork pieces from the refrigerator and let them sit at room temperature for 30 minutes. Grill for about four minutes on each side. Brush on the banana glaze turning to coat both sides. Total cooking time should be about 10 minutes depending on the grill heat. Don't overcook. The pork is thin and will cook quickly. Plate the pork and top with additional glaze. I served the pork with baked plantains and steamed broccoli. Serve remaining glaze at the table separately if desired.

Pairing

Le Charmel Rhone Syrah Grenache

Le Charmel — Rhone Valley, France

You may want to go with a light bodied red with a little juiciness to it. This Syrah/Grenache blend from France provides hints of blackberries, chocolate and spice, with a smooth taste.

■ DROME SOUND MUSICIAN SPOTLIGHT

Trivium

TheSpot518: The band has been around since 2000 or so. It's only natural for the band to have an evolving and changing sound. Now, one of the labels attributed to the band has been "metalcore." It's a genre defined by how some of the vocals are delivered in more of a growl and it almost serves another purpose. Does that make sense?

Corey Beauileu: "We've had the screaming element, sound, from the beginning. We've kind of grown. We have a broad sound. We really like the melodic side of things, and we can go to aggressive, the heavier side of metal. We've always had both elements, and then we've just used them in different ways. It's given us a variety of different songs and not being stuck with having to use screaming all the time. We're able to sing as well. For us, the metal core thing was kinda the big label when we first came out, because the scream-sing thing was popular for that point and time. Over time, we've expanded our sound and done a lot of different things, so that label doesn't really fit us for a style of metal. We just say we're metal because we bring so many different elements of metal and rock in general. The screaming thing, we just use when ever a song calls for it, where the part just really needs it. But, we don't really use it all the time. So, it's definitely something of a tool in the tool kit. It's not something that overall defines what we do."

TheSpot518: Definitely not. But, when you have hardcore fans who witness this change, sometimes you get fans who really dig it, and some not so much. When you go through such a change, are you conscious of how the fans will react? Are you even conscious of the change as it is occurring, or is it something that just naturally happens?

Beauileu: "Every record is just very natural. Even from the beginning, before we even have songs — When we made our first record, we were just making music as music fans. We were playing what we wanted to play. That's how we approach every record, because nobody hears music until it's done and put out. So, you don't really get, 'Hey, what do you guys think of this?' So, we're just playing what we feel inspired to play. Sometimes, we do screaming. Sometimes it's not. We do what we feel the song needs. You know, obviously with every album we put out, it's been slightly different than the one before it. You're always going to get some people who want you to do the same thing over and over again. But, that's not what we're all about as musicians. We're always trying to move forward and try new things, expand our horizons. With every album you're guaranteed fans with expectations of what they think the record is going to be, and not be what it is, and be bummed and say something bad about it. We always think records need time. Every record that we put out, when you give it five or six months, their opinions change because they actually listen to it. They adjust and appreciate what you're doing for that record. Every record has had its moments where there's been resistance. But, those records over time turn out to be some of people's favorite albums."

TheSpot518: After all these years, do you still get a charge out of that feeling, of fans connecting to what it is you're trying to do?

Beauileu: "I think we've put out so many records and gone through it so many times, you kind of expect to get it. Like, a normal thing. So, it's not so much of a surprise anymore. Yep, there's going to be those people who love it. There's going to be people who don't like it. There's going to be people that are going to need time to really let it sink in. It's kind of a normal thing with every release. And, with social media, everyone has a chance to scream their opinion and make it heard. I'm sure even back in the day before social media and the Internet, there's probably the same amount or percentage of people that did that for every record, they just didn't have such an interesting platform like social media to make it known. But, we're used to it. It's no big thing."

HEALTH & FITNESS

20-minute rule

This rule gives you enough time to listen to your body before stuffing your face

By DAN ROMAND
news@spotlightnews.com

The other day my wife and I were at a family get together. Lots of friends, family and fun to be sure —oh, and one other thing, FOOD! Lots and lots of food. Burgers, dogs, sausages and enough salads to float a battleship, a delectable smorgasbord to be sure.

While we were there, people mentioned to us how they always end up stuffing themselves at get togethers like this. They aren't alone. I've been there, and no doubt most of you have, too. You grab a plate go up to a buffet style display of food and proceed to overflow it beyond capacity with goodies. Then, you take it back to the picnic table and devour it within minutes. Next thing you know, you're back in the buffet line for "Round 2," and just a few short minutes later, that too is gone. Soon thereafter, you've eaten so much you can hardly move, and feel like you're going to pass out from the overload.

So what can you do?

There are tons of tricks you can use to help prevent the gorging, but here's one tip I have found which helps me to keep things under control. It's very easy to do and has been proven to work in several studies. I can tell you from personal experience it was one of the difference makers when I lost more than 100 pounds. I figured it out one day while I was eating with a family member who was rail thin. While I was eating my second and third helpings of things, she hadn't even finished half her plate. She would set her fork down after each bite and took her time eating. And, it wasn't just this one time, but every time we ate together. I noticed it would take her 30 or even 40 minutes to eat, and usually she didn't even finish her meal. Yet, she enjoyed her food more and never once felt bloated. I said "a-ha! She's on to something." So, I adopted her rule of eating and called it "The 20-minute Rule."

What is it?

Simply put, you can put whatever you want on your plate. Fill it to the max. But, take your time and enjoy it. The goal is to take 20 minutes to eat it all. Then, once you are done, you CANNOT go back for seconds until 20 minutes after you have FINISHED your plate.

Why does this work?

Well, studies show that most of us eat fast... VERY fast. One study found the average American spent 23 minutes a day eating. That's not 23 minutes per meal, but 23 minutes in TOTAL. Think about that for a second. If you eat four or five times a day, then you spend less than five minutes actually eating each meal.

What is the effect of eating that fast?

Research has found that it takes about 20 minutes from the time you start eating for your brain to signal the rest of your body (especially your stomach) that it's full. When you devour everything in sight within a few, short minutes you don't give your body the time it needs to register that it is full. Next thing you know, you've eaten two or three plates of food. Only afterwards does your brain let you know you've stuffed yourself. So much so, you can't even get up from the table. By implementing the 20-minute rule, I found not only did I eat less, but I also didn't feel bloated and stuffed after I ate. And, funny thing was, I found that I stopped clearing my plate — those poor starving children in China be damned.

SO MUCH FOOD...

and so little time spent on eating it. Most of us eat faster than our body can tell us to stop.

It's a rule I apply every time I sit down to eat. Was it easy to implement? No. Honestly, I still struggle with it. In fact, I found it so hard at first, I had to start setting a timer to prevent myself from rushing through my meal and heading back for seconds. But, over time I learned how to manage it; and, as I did I found the pounds started dropping off.

By slowing down how quickly you eat and waiting 20 minutes before going back for seconds, it has been shown you will eat less and learn to recognize the signs of satiety again. Signals that many of us have lost because we eat too quickly.

So, if you tend to eat your meals faster than superman can fly, only to go back for more, give the 20-minute rule a try. I'm betting you will find yourself eating less and rediscovering the simple joy of tasting your food, instead of inhaling it.

SkyDaddy's 'Wide Eyes'

By ALYSSA LADZINSKI
nysmusic.com

Two years succeeding its debut, self-titled EP as a funky musical quartet, SkyDaddy makes a comeback with its latest EP "Wide Eyes."

Dave Heinz (bass/vox), Joe North (saxophone/EWI), Tom Clancy (guitar/vox) and Pat Agresta (drums) fit together as a jazzy-funk ensemble with nods of soul and rock fusion from downstate New York. However, their solo skills each come together to create all that SkyDaddy stands for. Riding the wave of the ever-growing music scene in the Northeast, the foursome have lent its jam talents to venues across New York City and the Tri-

State area in support of The Nth Power, Pink Talking Fish, Amy Helm, Spiritual Rez, Sophistafunk and Zach Deputy, all within the last year.

The band's self-titled effort brought forth a five-track EP, including "Tell Me I'm Crazy" and "Just Enough Wine."

Dipping their collective toes into varying genres, Heinz, North, Clancey and Agresta use their talents to deliver spacey, progressive jams while capturing soul through meaningful lyrics and memorable hooks.

"Wide Eyes" comes in the form of three tracks, all of which have the ability to get you on your feet dancing or at least swaying side to side in your chair.

"Effortlessly Elegant" introduces the EP with a fitting title as the opening notes of the track and buttery-smooth saxophone make the listener's need to move around and dance grow stronger by the second.

"By the Fire Tonight" follows next, letting Agresta and the drum kit lead into the second track which appeals largely to the funkier soundscapes of their music.

"Perspective" emphasizes on Heinz' hearty vocals as he sings of relationships, wide eyed girls and the burning question of how they found their soul. Over the course of one year, the EP was recorded in REM Studios in Woodcliff Lake, NJ, collectively and accurately encompassing their sound as a unit thus far.
