Open discussion about net neutrality

BCHS club hosts net neutrality conversation with FCC Commish, U.S. Rep. Paul Tonko

By ALI HIBBS
hibbsa@spotlightnews.com

BETHLEHEM — Despite a series of technical difficulties, Bethlehem Central High School's Students for Peace and Survival (SPAS) Club held an informative conversation with Federal Communications Commissioner Jessica Rosenworcel and U.S. Congressman Paul Tonko to discuss the recent repeal of net neutrality rules by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) and its impact on internet customers.

Last December, Rosenworcel was one of only two commissioners on the five-member FCC to vote against rescinding net neutrality regulations, implemented in 2015 under Democratic FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler. The net neutrality rules essentially classified internet providers as telecom providers, giving the FCC broad powers to regulate providers on everything from prices to privacy practices. Rosenworcel agreed to speak to the students after SPAS club members reached out to the FCC with their concerns about the decision would impact students and other internet users.

The 3-2 decision was split along party lines. Both Democratic FCC Commissioners — Rosenworcel and Mignon Clyburn — voted against repealing the regulations, while all three Republicans voted to repeal, including Chairman Ajit Pai. (Pai released a video the night before, featuring himself dressed as Santa clutching a fidget spinner, brandishing a lightsaber and Instagramming his food to mock widespread criticism against the contentious move.)

During the net conferenced discussion via Google Hangouts, curious students wanted to know what, exactly, net neutrality is. SPAS President Connor Chung, a junior at BCHS, negotiated the conversation on behalf of Bethlehem, relaying questions from students to Rosenworcel and Tonko during the half-hour discussion. When the internet connection failed on more than one occasion, both students in Delmar and Rosenworcel's and Tonko's staffs in Washington, D.C. joked about how the failures were apropos to a conversation about internet reliability.

"Net neutrality means you can go where you want and do what you want online without your broadband provider getting in the way or making choices for you," explained Rosenworcel. "Without it, your broadband provider has the right to block websites, to throttle online content and engage in pay-for-play prioritization schemes.

Essentially, providers will now be permitted to block or favor certain websites, affecting how quickly they download compared to other sites. Opponents of the decision believe it will result in unfair competitive advantages, especially for larger companies, and could negatively impact freedom of speech on the internet.

"Net neutrality, for me," said Tonko, "is about freedom: Freedom of speech, of opportunity, of being able to interact with the world."

"The future of the internet is the future of everything," said Rosenworcel. "It's where we connect, it's where we create, it's where you're going to share ideas, build community and, in time, probably build businesses. I think it's important that we make sure that that platform is as open to as many ideas and services as possible, and has as few gatekeepers as possible."

Asked what happens next in the fight for net neutrality, Rosenworcel said she sees several things that could impact her agency's decision, including: legal challenges to the FCC vote; legislation at the state level that would supersede the federal decision; efforts in Congress, like a bill sponsored by Tonko that could roll back the decision; or other long-term legislative solutions.

Tonko, who represents the school district in the U.S. House of Representatives, is co-sponsoring a bill that he hopes will ensure net neutrality. The Capital Region, he said, is a mecca of innovation. "Greater Albany," he said, "was cited as the third best in the country for innovation job growth." According to Tonko, innovation businesses and start-ups of all kinds are dependent on an open internet for their success.

He also thanked SPAS for the invitation to speak and commended the club for its tenacity in seeking out information about the FCC decision to end net neutrality. Tonko said he is concerned that a lack of open internet access could present roadblocks for students who rely on connectivity for homework and to complete college applications.

Thanking the students "for caring so much," Tonko said, "This is how our democracy grows. This is how our community strengthens."

SPAS is focused on raising student awareness of social issues through a guest speaker series (last year, its members hosted state gubernatorial candidate Zephyr Teachout, whose running mate, Tim Wu, coined the term 'net neutrality') and by helping both local and global communities. The club's various fundraisers also collect funds for charities that fight poverty and hunger.

A new town board for Bethlehem starts business at its first meeting of 2018 on Wednesday, Jan. 10.

Brand new year, new Town Board

Bethlehem board gets down to business in first meeting of 2018; appoints, organizes, appreciates

By ALI HIBBS
hibbsa@spotlightnews.com

BETHLEHEM — At the town board's organizational meeting on Wednesday, Jan. 10, Supervisor David VanLuven's first order of business was to appoint Giles Wagoner to serve a one-year term on the board seat he vacated after he was elected supervisor last fall.

Wagoner was sworn in by Town Clerk Nanci Moquin on a Bible held by Councilwoman Joyce Becker, after VanLuven explained that he was chosen from a field of 22 candidates for his experience and familiarity with town issues.

Becker was later named Deputy Supervisor by VanLuven, a position that does not come with additional pay. Item 4 on the agenda set the salaries of the elected officials: Supervisor - $118,017, Town Board Members (each) - $15,571, Town Clerk - $76,926, Receiver of Taxes - $55,604, Superintendent of Highways - $103,996, and Town Justice (each) - $51,466.

In a little more than half an hour, the board approved more than 60 housekeeping items such as re-appointing certain board members, department staff and town counsel, setting salaries and fees, adoption of the town purchasing and investment policies, and authorization of elected officials to handle town funds, among other things.

VanLuven made a series of announcements, commending the town's Department of Public Works for fixing the six water main breaks that have already occurred in 2018 and thanking residents for coming out to celebrate First Night in frigid temperatures, as well as the sponsors that made the event possible.

He also noted that the town's Receiver of Taxes, Alicia Roney, received $3 million in 2018 property taxes, in just two days, from residents who chose to file before federal changes could take effect, and thanked them for their patience.

"Normally, tax payments come in in a steady stream over several weeks," said VanLuven. "But, this year, because of changes to the tax code, thousands and thousands of residents submitted their payments in two days. Alicia and others are working hard to process all of the payments that they've received, but so many came in so quickly that it overwhelmed our usual capacity."

The new supervisor also recognized town employees for working to ensure that three residents, displaced from their homes due to severe water damage that caused part of their senior living development to be evacuated, had somewhere to go.

"Jack Brennan, the director of the Emergency Management Office, worked with our police department and the Good Samaritan Village senior community to find safe places for them to stay," said VanLuven. "This is one of those small things for most of us, but it has a real impact and I think it shows the character of our town employees and our dedication to taking care of our residents."

The board will meet next on Wednesday, Jan 24, at 6 p.m. at Bethlehem Town Hall.

Joyce elected as chairman of legislature

Choice indicates changes in body's leadership style could be forthcoming

By ALI HIBBS

hibbsa@spotlightnews.com

ALBANY COUNTY — Long established Democratic leadership took a hit earlier this week during the Albany County Legislature's first meeting of the year on Monday, Jan. 8, when independently minded majority member Andrew Joyce (D-9) was unanimously elected chairman of the legislature.

The organizational meeting began with the swearing in of Vicky Plotsky, the new Democrat representing the county's 38th district in New Scotland and Bethlehem. Plotsky, the eighth woman to join this 39-member legislature, represented the deciding vote to support Joyce in the 29-member Democratic caucus. The 14 members who opposed his election were all in favor of re-electing Sean Ward (D-16), the most recent chairman and the favored candidate of long-time Majority Leader Frank Commisso, Sr. (D-11).

"A number of members have expressed frustration with the leadership not engaging with our members," said Joe O'Brien (D-25), one of the legislators who approached Joyce about running for the position a month ago. "Some of them have talents in different fields, and they just seemed to be not tapping into that. Andrew, on the other hand, is a young individual who wants to engage all members."

"I don't want to impugn Sean at all but, in terms of his leadership style, the membership didn't see a whole lot of daylight between him and the majority leader," said Joyce. "And I think leadership of the body should be about the members, every single one of them. It's about listening."

Two years ago, reform-minded members of the majority party tried unsuccessfully to unseat Commisso — who has led the party since 1993 — and get their own chairperson, Alison McLean Lane (D-14), elected to lead the legislature. Entrenched party leadership prevailed in both cases and Ward was elected to succeed outgoing Chairman Shawn Morse, the now-embattled mayor of Cohoes. (Incidentally, Joyce, who was a member of the reform coalition, ultimately voted for Ward in 2016, along with three other coalition members.)

In 2016, the reform coalition was also disappointed when four Republican legislators chose to support Ward and, by extension, Commisso. The resulting division within the GOP caucus ultimately ended in the unexpected choice of Frank Mauriello (R-27) as minority leader, after presumptive leader Peter Crouse (R-24) voted for Ward. That division, according to minority member Mark Grimm (R-29), has persisted within the 10-member GOP conference. Six members, including Grimm and Mauriello, once again voted with the reformist agenda, which they believe will give a greater voice to minority members, both in committee leadership positions and on the legislative floor.

"Andrew and his supporters really have a lot in common with our conference," said Mauriello, "in that we're looking to reform Albany County government and want it to be more open." He said there have been times when legislation not supported by the majority leadership has simply languished in committee, without being given a chance in a floor vote. He also said independent redistricting, something supported by Joyce, is a priority of the minority conference.

"It was time for a change," Mauriello said, adding that Joyce and other Democrat reformists assured their Republican counterparts that they would be given a bigger role in legislative committee assignments. "You will be seeing Republicans chairing some of these committees as well," he said.

"There are four factions, really," said Grimm, noting that the four Republicans who voted to support Ward have a history of voting "mostly with Commisso. We don't talk much publicly about it, but it's the reality and people ought to know what the score is. The Democrats are split, and the Republicans are too."

This year, however, both parties resolved in caucus to vote with one voice to elect Joyce.

"It was a tight race for chairman," said Grimm. "Let's not pretend it wasn't. [The majority] chose to elect [Joyce] unanimously as a courtesy, after they realized they didn't have enough Republican votes to elect Ward."

Touting Joyce's military service and record of passing bipartisan legislation, Legislator Gary Domalewicz (D-10), chairman of the Audit and Finance Committee, nominated Joyce for the position and was seconded by Sam Fein (D-6), a young, first-term legislator representing the newest minority-majority district in downtown Albany.

"Andrew has the tenacity and drive to lead the legislature, and I am glad to work closely with him to support his vision," said Domalewicz. "I look forward to working with him on launching new ideas and initiatives to improve Albany County."

Joe O'Brien suggested that Joyce was able to secure not only the support of Fein, who voted for Ward two years ago, but that of Wanda Willingham (D-3) as well, due to a perception that legislative leadership has been unresponsive to minorities in Albany County. Willingham, who was a successful complainant in two lawsuits accusing the county of violating minority rights during redistricting, walked Joyce to his new seat at the front of the legislative chamber, along with his brother, Legislator Raymond Joyce (D-13).

Both Joyces are the sons of Harold L. Joyce, who formerly served as chairman of the Albany County Legislature and chairman of the Albany County Democratic Committee, and for whom the county office building on State Street in Albany is named.

"I am glad to support Andrew and am excited to work closely with him," said Willingham. "Andrew brings a fresh perspective to the role and this next chapter of the legislature is going to produce positive and tangible results that we will all be part of and proud of."

"My number one agenda priority is to figure out what each member's top three priorities are," said Joyce, "and figuring out how to utilize the staff to make those things happen." He also said he wants to bring county government into the current century, and has plans to implement a modernization committee, headed by both parties, to look at ways to make that happen. One immediate change he's looking at is the reduction of paper waste through improving electronic access to lengthy agendas. Another thing he said he wants to do is improve outreach to county residents.

Commisso congratulated Joyce on his election in a press release, saying, "We recognize that it's a new era of leadership for the legislature, and we wish Andrew Joyce much success. I look forward to working with the new chairman."

"We have a person that's coming in to change," Commisso said later. "We've had lots of changes in the Democratic party over the years, and I've been

The cast and crew of 140 students have been busy preparing for the upcoming presentation of the musical, which is based on the classic children's novel by J.M. Barrie. Its lead characters will literally take flight into the magical world of Neverland, suspended from harnesses and flying across the stage, during each performance.

Key members of the cast and crew were instructed on aerography® by "Flying By Foy." School officials contracted the professional flight instruction service to ensure the highest standards of safety and performance for BCMS students.

Flying by Foy has coordinated aerography® for a host of professional theater companies and high profile performers in film and television, ballet and opera, theme parks, cruise ships and not-for-profits, according to its website.

"We knew going in, Peter Pan Jr. would be an extremely challenging yet absolutely rewarding show for BCMS," said Director Lyndsay Dashew. Francie Johnson, an eighth grader, was chosen out of nearly 200 students who tried out to star in the role of Peter Pan.

SPOTLIGHT ON FINANCE

Assessing your financial wellness can help you meet your financial resolutions

By RUTH MAHONEY,
President, Capital Region,
KeyBank

For most, the will to overcome a lifetime of bad habits and stick to meeting their New Year resolutions weakens with each passing day. They get stuck eyeing the destination instead of mapping the journey that makes reaching the destination possible.

For those making financial resolutions, and one in four do, the destination is most commonly rooted in improving financial wellness, whether it is to save more, pay down debt or spend less. The problem with these well-intentioned goals, which undoubtedly will help people improve their financial wellness, is they are not actionable plans. They do not map the journey.

Financial wellness is a journey

According to MagnifyMoney, shoppers bagged an average of $1,054 in debt this holiday season. More than half of those surveyed didn't plan to charge so much. An equal amount said it will take at least three months to pay off the expenses. That's why most financial resolutions are like vowing to diet after overeating on Thanksgiving. We're dissatisfied with our immediate actions and want to change our behaviors.

The question to answer is this: are the changes warranted and if so, are we committed to making the right ones?

Most resolutions fail because they are too vague, too unrealistic or a lesser combination of both. Don't make that mistake. Take a financial inventory and assess your financial wellness so you can really dial in on how you can better manage your finances.

Many banks, including KeyBank, offer tools like HelloWallet that can help you:

- Get a full picture of your financial wellness and track improvements over time;
- Build a simple spending plan that is realistic for your situation;
- Prepare for a more financially secure future with forecasting tools and savings recommendations; and

- Connect to your bank so you can see real-time balances and transactions.

Even if you do not have access to such a tool, visit your local bank branch, meet with your financial advisor or talk with your accountant. To get where you want to go, you first need to understand from where you are starting.

Are you financially well?

Financial wellness means different things to different people. But people who consider themselves financially well typically have emergency savings, pay off their credit cards each month, make a habit of saving money, have a debt-to-income ratio less than 30 percent, budget well or spend wisely and understand—and plan to meet—their retirement goals and kids' educational needs.

More concretely, four good measures of financial wellness are:

- Your credit score. You can get a free credit report from each of the credit bureaus through annualcreditreport.com, and there are a number of credit card providers who offer credit scores for free.
- Your retirement savings rate. The key word here is rate. This is not tied to a dollar amount, but rather what percentage of your salary you are investing into your retirement. The ideal rate to shoot for, according to most experts, is 15 percent.
- Your emergency savings fund. Ask yourself: how many months could you survive without income and still meet your expense needs through savings? 6 months is good. A year is better.

• Your net worth. This is the amount by which your assets exceed your liabilities—or the difference between what you have and what you owe.

Understanding these measurable can help provide a more comprehensive financial picture. Assess where you are today, financially, and then reassess your financial resolutions. Do your resolutions address the problem areas you've diagnosed? Do your resolutions help you long-term?

Take action, change behaviors

Remember, financial wellness is about action and behaviors. This should reframe the way you think about common financial resolutions.

Do you want to save more? Your resolution should be to develop a plan that will help you spend less and facilitate regular deposits into your savings and/or investment accounts.

Do you want to pay down debt? Your resolution should be to identify why you are accruing debt in the first place. Evaluating your budget is a good place to start.

Do you want to spend less? Your resolution should be about differentiating between needs and wants and detailing your income and expenses so you can build a budget.

At KeyBank, we talk about financial wellness in five steps.

1. Understand where you are today.
2. Take action.
3. Build healthy financial habits.
4. Monitor regularly.
5. Celebrate each success.

Most New Year resolutions focus on steps three and four, which is why they fail. If you want to get to step five, celebrating success, you cannot skip steps one and two. Understanding your starting point and taking the necessary steps to act financially responsible and build good habits are the bedrocks of meeting any big financial goals you set for yourself—for 2018 and beyond.

About the author: Ruth Mahoney is regional retail leader and president of KeyBank's Capital Region. She may be reached at either 518-257-8619 or ruth.mahoney@keybank.com.

Six financial goals

If financial wellness is the journey then what is the destination?

Similar to the resolution to eat better and exercise more, the outcome of focusing on improving your financial wellness is excellent overall financial health. LearnVe$t offers goal-oriented outcomes in their article, "Six telltale signs you're in great financial health."

1. You're a two-income household—but can live off just one.
2. Your net worth exceeds your annual income—and keeps growing.
3. You can name what's in your investment portfolio.

4. You neither owe nor get a refund at tax time.

5. Less than a third of your income goes toward debt.

6. You're done with car payments.

These are great goals—celebratory goals. They can only be achieved through successfully completing a series of steps. Save a little more. Check your balance a little more often. And finally, spend less time focusing on the destination and more time taking actions and building healthy financial habits. The progress you make will feel great. LOOKING BACK

A stroll down Memory Lane

Reader's letter takes us on a historic walk down Delaware Avenue

This is a "once upon a time" story because, though true, it seems like a fairy tale now. I was a blushing bride when I moved to Delmar in 1941, and we didn't even have a key for the little house we rented because nobody locked their doors.

After all, Dave Main, the only policeman in town, patrolled the street on foot and all was well.

With a pocketful of change, I could dash to the store and buy a menu to please a new husband. Bread was a nickel a loaf, but man cannot live on bread alone, as the saying goes. Two lamb cutlets were just 35 cents and Dempf Pastry Shop was right on Delaware Avenue and specialized in apple squares at just five cents a piece and very delicious.

Waltermire's drug store was across the street and had a soda fountain with just three flavors available, vanilla, chocolate and strawberry. For a bit of refreshment, you might treat yourself to an ice cream cone for another five pennies. (The last cone I had was at Toll Gate for $2.50.

Of course it was a triple-decker and made with an exotic rum flavoring.)

On special days, we patronized Libby's Restaurant a few doors away and enjoyed a full-course dinner for 75 cents. This included a mid-meal dish of sherbet to "enhance the palate" before the main course. Adams Hardware was a big asset. Earl had stockpiled things you couldn't buy elsewhere. It was a treasure trove.

We lived on a cul-de-sac so all our neighbors became close friends. Frequently one of them churned a bucket of ice cream, and all gathered for the treat and then harmonized around the piano, just as you see in old movies on television.

There was no TV, so entertainment was mainly homemade. There was a tiny theater

"The Pit," which catered mostly to the young set for cowboy pictures on Saturdays.

In the space of four years, several of us who were already neighbors, moved to larger houses near each other and stayed friends for many, many years.

Later, when we all had children, Dooley's gas station on Delaware Avenue and Oakwood Place became a haven for them. It was not just the penny candy he sold that was the attraction, but Mr. Dooley would repair their bikes or fill their tires and not charge anything.

At that time the Fireman's Fair was a big event in the town, a fund-raiser for those loyal volunteers. I still treasure a glass wrote and directed.

It fostered a great feeling of togetherness with hopes for peace in the near future because war had been declared and made a difference in our lives.

My husband was drafted but was sent back home because an erratic heart beat. Meanwhile, as a member of the Motor Corps, I drove a Red Cross truck during the war, delivering medical materials to all the churches where they folded bandages to be sent abroad. One night, I had to meet a troop train in Rensselaer to dispense boxes of lunches that I had picked up at headquarters.

A whole train of soldiers was heading for New York City to go overseas, and this would be their last meal until they boarded the ships. All lights were off, and they made a quick stop to pick up our food.

Since the candles of my birthday cake could now heat up a room, I have moved to the sunny climes of Florida to be near my son Walter McDowell, who attended kindergarten through graduation in Bethlehem Central schools.

My mind goes back to those thoughts of earlier years. We all look up at the same stars and pray that wars will cease and terrorism ends, and that we may return to that peaceful realm of a small town we once knew those many years ago.

BETHLEHEM — The changing of the calendar to a new year turns many of us pensive and causes us to think back on auld lang syne. Such was the case for Ruth McDowell, a former longtime resident of Delmar, who was reflecting back on her days as a "blushing bride" in upstate New York in 1941 when she wrote her old hometown newspaper, The Spotlight.

"It's winter in Delmar and a new year," she wrote in January 2005, when she was living in Miami, Fla., after her husband, Authur, had passed away. "It's time to sit in front of burning logs and let their glow take you back to past years."

The former educator and freelance writer continued to pen a "once upon a time" story intended to walk readers down the proverbial Memory Lane, to which only former neighbors would recognize and recent residents could make out the ghosts through today's townscape. As Delaware Avenue, Delmar's Main Street, is reconstructed to recapture its glory as the community's center of commerce, McDowell's letter seems all the more appropriate to share today.

The following is the rest of her letter.

pitcher my son finally won after tossing away so many nickels that he used up his whole allowance, but he knew I collected pitchers, and he wanted to surprise me.

The present site of Bethlehem Central Middle School was the senior high and the annual Christmas festival, later called White Christmas, was held there. It brought the whole town together with 500 people appearing on stage during the evening. There was a Delmar Men's Orchestra, school choirs, a pageant and Home Scene, which I often McDowell would see the change of one more calendar before joining her husband in eternal slumber. The ode to her hometown could be adopted by many communities throughout the Capital District; just replace the names.

We're thankful Ms. McDowell did not forget her old acquaintances.

FROM THE EDITOR'S DESK

Know the right-of-way

The prospect of gaining a crosswalk in the front of our offices through the Delaware Avenue Street Enhancement left us rather excited when it was proposed last year.

Residents who find themselves needing to cross our town's main street are too familiar with the challenges of navigating through the steady stream of vehicular traffic during rush hour. It's a dangerous situation. From our windows, we often see drivers driving above the speed limit and carelessly ignoring the right of way of pedestrians and on-coming traffic, alike.

It was only two years ago when we witnessed a pedestrian-vehicle accident in front of our office. In that case, the pedestrian came off the bus and was crossing the street before being struck by an oncoming car. But, authorities found that no one was at fault. There was no crosswalk, so pedestrians had to cross the street at their own risk.

Since the crosswalk was installed in front of our office, we've noticed it has done little good for pedestrians. Though it has been New York state law for well over 20 years, most drivers do not yield to people attempting to walk across the street in a crosswalk. One could argue that drivers still have to familiarize themselves to the new street markers, but let's be honest about that for a second. There's a crosswalk in front of the Delmar Post Office, and has been there for decades, and many drivers still ignore it and the people trying to use it.

People need to understand the definition of the "right of way." May we suggest looking of the "New York State Department of Motor Vehicles Driver's Manual." It's online in PDF format, which means you can do a keyword search. You'll find in particular "drivers must yield to pedestrians who legally use marked or unmarked crosswalks. This means you slow down or stop if necessary." Yeah, we took that directly from the book.

While we're on the subject, we can talk about those of you leaving the Bethlehem Central Middle School parking lot at the beginning and conclusion of each school day.

"A vehicle that enters a roadway from a driveway, private road or another put that is not a roadway, must stop and yield the right-of-way to traffic on the roadway and to pedestrians."

That would mean that if you are leaving a parking lot, you are not in traffic. Any other car on the road, however, is and therefore has the right-of-way. In this case, it means they go before you. Nowhere does it state any provisions for cars with more horsepower or those assessed at a high market value. It simply states that if you're not in traffic, and someone else is, you stay.

On the flip side, there's a peculiar behavior we've noticed with residents who decide to walk and jog around town. In Bethlehem, we're fortunate to live in a town with an exceptional network of sidewalks, but a lot of us choose to walk on the road. As we pose the argument to motorists that they recognize and follow the right-of-way, pedestrians need to exercise more common sense. Walk on the sidewalk, pay attention to oncoming traffic and, even if you're using a well-marked crosswalk, don't walk into traffic until you're confident motorists see you.

Though we make reference to our highly coveted crosswalk outside our offices, this message is not entirely self-serving. As your local newspaper, we often find ourselves at a variety of accidents, many of which would have been prevented if someone slowed down, exercised a little common sense, and drove down our streets the right way.

LIBRARIES AND SENIORS

Research options expand

Get the answers and the information you need with the online research materials offered on the library's website at www.bethlehempubliibrary.org. Whether you are a student tackling a specific topic or a lifelong learner looking for accurate and well-sourced information, chances are, we have a database that will help. Below are some of the additions and changes the new year brings to these online research tools, where a wealth of information is only a click away.

In addition to Scholastic Go! which was featured in last week's column, we've added ValueLine, a reliable source for investors looking for accurate data and expert stock market analysis. We've also replaced our former auto repair database with Chilton's Auto Repair, a trusted name among amateur and professional mechanics.

Other changes include a rebranding of Atomic Databases to Hoonuit. The online software and career training portal can help you develop new skills through step-by-step video workshops.

Finally, Novelist, the popular reader's advisory resource, has been upgraded to include nonfiction titles, and we are now offering the Literary Reference Center, which replaces the Literary Resource Center.

All of these research tools and more can be found at www.bethlehempubliibrary.org by clicking on the "Research" tab. Some require a Bethlehem library card to be accessed off site, but anyone can use them inside the library.

Tech tools at the library

There are a number of in-house tech tools available at the library that can help you create, collaborate and conserve in this digital age.

Two public meeting rooms are equipped with Smart boards that allow for remote interviews and meetings, as well as all kinds of digital presentations. The Tech Room features a 3D scanner and printer, a VHS-to-DVD conversion deck, and a flatbed scanner. Located on a dedicated tech table near the public computers, you'll find a large-format scanner and a computer equipped with Adobe Photoshop Elements and Premiere.

There's no need to make a pricey investment in technology or software you are going to only use once or twice when you can use those tools for free at the library.

Study hall

The library has set aside dedicated group study space for Regents test prep through Wednesday, Jan. 24. Students and their tutors are welcome to drop in and stay as long as needed during scheduled hours. Joyce elected as chairman part of that change. I was one of the people that called for change at various times on different issues.

"I don't think it's a referendum on past years of leadership," he said. "I think we've had very good leadership. But from time to time, people may decide that they want to advance themselves and it's a democratic process."

While there are rumblings that a democratic member may challenge Comisso for leadership of the party in coming weeks, Comisso says he is not concerned. "I have two more years remaining in my seat," he said. "I run with the term of the Legislature."

Other members have pointed out that the county charter is unclear on the topic of party leadership and are not ruling out the possibility of a challenge in the wake of the recent reform victory.

"I think this is a watershed moment for our Legislature and for Albany County government," said O'Brien.

"I am thrilled by the vote of confidence by a bipartisan group of my peers in the Legislature and pledge to bring my vision of collaborative and positive change to the Legislature's activities," Joyce said. "I am grateful for this support and look forward to an era of progress that will utilize the skills and talents of all of my colleagues. I also want to thank Sean Ward for his dedicated years of leadership to the Legislature and look forward to working closely with him in my new role."

Legislators earn $23,084 a year; the annual pay for chair is $38,477.

Joyce's personal and legislative profile, as well as a statement released by the minority party, identifying specific shared priorities, can be found in the story at our website at spotlightnews.com.

SCHENECTADY — What's in a name change?

When the Schenectady-based, not-for-profit, collaborative workspace Electric City Innovation Center changed its name to Urban Co-Works last month, it signified that the brand's focus was broadening.

Urban Co-Works CEO Jeff Goronkin said the old name no longer suited his plans for the shared work environment he took over last year. The homage to the Schenectady nickname was fitting for the office space located directly across State Street from Proctors. But, he said, it didn't aptly describe what happens there.

A marvel of science and imagination

Troupe of magicians plans to amaze and surprise Proctors crowd this weekend

By MICHAEL HALLISEY

halliseym@spotlightnews.com

SCHENECTADY — Magician Kevin James goes by the moniker "The Inventor" for good reason.

Before any good act sees time on the stage, James said it starts as an idea flushed out on pen and paper. The performance of a magician involves just as much science as it does entertainment.

"Magicians have a lot of tools in their arsenal," said James. The physics behind the slight of hand action help define the logistics of the act, but "lots of psychology elements" help create the wow factor that turns an experiment into magic. "Scientists are the easiest people to fool, because they already think they know everything. You can just gently suggest something and they're going to jump to the conclusion, but you're taking a back door. Kids are the hardest to fool, in fact, because their minds aren't closed with these assumptions. They think out of the box. They don't really have a box."

James is known for his innovative illusions. The award-winning magician has not only wowed audiences, but has also earned the respect of his peers within the magician fraternity with his inventions. He has created unique effects used in shows of famous magicians including Doug Henning and Mark Wilson. His "Floating Rose" trick is performed by David Copperfield.

Next weekend, James joins a cast of fellow magicians for the touring magic show The Illusionists — Live from Broadway at Proctors on Friday, Jan. 26, at 8 p.m., and Saturday, Jan. 27, at 2 and 8 p.m.

"We can't wait to bring this electrifying show to Schenectady for a truly entertaining experience for the whole family," said Simon Painter, the show's creative producer. "The Illusionists is the most non-stop and powerful mix of outrageous and astonishing acts ever to be seen on the live stage."

James joins four other stars, each with distinctly different talents that warrant nicknames, some of which nefarious enough they wouldn't be welcomed in other professions.

There's "The Trickster," Jeff Hobson, who is the epitome of glamour and showmanship. Don't be fooled by his innocent appearance; Jeff has audiences laughing long after the curtain goes down. "The Deductionist," Colin Cloud, is one of the greatest thought-readers of all time. He is a psychic savant known as a real-life Sherlock Holmes. An Ha Lim is known as "The Manipulator." He was the first place winner at Korea's 2006 Busan International Magic Competition. There is a near five-minute online video on YouTube that shows Lim drawing several decks worth of cards from nowhere. And, "The Daredevil," Jonathan Goodwin, is widely considered one of the most creative, skilled and frankly crazy stunt performers in the world. He is an accomplished knife thrower, archer, escape artist, marksman, martial artist, free diver, and free climber. Unlike the other performers in the show, Jonathan is not a magician or illusionist. However, he will leave the audience breathless with his death-defying stunts.

"It's the five top magicians in the world doing their best material," said James. "They all have different styles, vibes and flavors, and we're all at the top of our game, right now."

Tickets range in price from $20 to $75 and are available through Proctors, either by box office, by phone at (518) 346-6204 or online at tickets.proctors.org.

PICK OF THE WEEK

The girls are back

By MICHAEL HALLISEY
halliseym@spotlightnews.com

TROY — Bob Dylan’s scathing words to an unnamed friend in “Positively 4th Street” contrast in nature to the friendships made in the Troy bar that once shared the song’s name.

Unlike the Greenwich Village sycophants Dylan described in his 1965 hit, these friends return.

Kim Buckley, Christine Baze, Niki Lee and Jennifer Tefft — billed as the Original Ladies of Positively 4th — reunite for one night at O’Brien’s Public House in Troy on Saturday, Jan. 20, at 6 p.m.

Lee said she earned her chops playing at Positively 4th Street in the 1990s. Now playing with Bleak Little World, the Troy native said the four were recently online musing over the time they spent playing at the bar.

“I was new to playing music,” said Lee. “Just hanging out and seeing these women, who at the time I thought were more established than me, I was inspired by them, and loving their music. In a lot of ways, they helped motivate me.”

Tefft’s initial experience with Troy was from that of an outsider. The Boston resident recalled one of her first shows at Positively 4th Street falling on a Sunday night. She said she expected the crowd to be small, if non-existent. And, if anyone did appear for the gig it would be for a short time on what was a school night.

“You know, Sunday nights aren’t necessarily the greatest nights for music. So, I was prepared for kind of a low-key night,” said Tefft. “[But], there were a bunch of people who came out to hear new music. I mean, the place was jammed. They were all into it. They were out until one o’clock in the morning, two o’clock. I was kind of knocked over. I don’t think I’ve experienced that here in Boston, or in any other city I’ve been to.

We had an amazing show,” said Tefft, “and [afterwards] we made ourselves back there a number of times while we were on tour.”

Tefft returns to play a full acoustic set from her collection of alternative rock music. Buckley, of Kim Buckley and Soul Funktion, is expected to take the stage with a funky indie jazz sound. Baze, too, will be coming from the Boston area to play. And, Lee will have Bleak Little World with her on stage, as well.

Tefft said it certainly won’t be a drag to see her old friends and play in front of a Troy crowd, again.

“It’s going to be a very diverse and eclectic collection of music,” said Tefft. “We’re all very different from one another. So, it should be a very cool night.”

How to avoid muscle soreness

Four easy tips to avoid fatigue

Muscle soreness can affect people from all walks of life. While exercise enthusiasts who work out several times per week may feel like they should be immune to muscle soreness, this potentially painful condition that can adversely affect quality of life can fall even the most ardent fitness fanatic.

Those who find themselves routinely battling muscle soreness can employ the following tactics to feel better and enjoy the fruits of their labors in the gym.

- Listen to your body. Daily exercise can greatly benefit long-term health, but it's important that men and women listen to their bodies, paying attention to any signs that it might be time for a break. Each person is different, but exercise aficionados who recognize any abnormal signs such as unexplained fatigue or cramps may need to take a day off. Bodies need time to recover after a workout.

- Get adequate sleep. Getting enough sleep provides recovery time. The National Sleep Foundation recommends that adults between the ages of 18 and 64 years of age get between seven and nine hours of sleep per night. The NSF recommends adults 65 and older get between seven and eight hours of sleep per night.

- Don't overdo it. Pushing a body too hard increases a person's risk of injury or illness. Muscles that are overtaxed will very likely begin to feel a type of pain known as delayed onset muscle soreness, or DOMS. The American College of Sports Medicine notes that any type of activity that places unaccustomed loads on muscle may lead to DOMS, but activities such as strength training exercises, walking down hills, jogging, step aerobics, and jumping are known examples of contributors to DOMS. Such activities should not necessarily be avoided, but it's important that men and women not push themselves to the point of overexertion when performing them.

- Stay hydrated. Muscle soreness may appear if men and women are not drinking enough water before, during or after their workouts. A dehydrated body's muscles do not have enough electrolytes, and that can be contributing to the feelings of soreness some exercise enthusiasts feel. Drink lots of water throughout the day, and don't forget to bring a water bottle along to the gym when working out.

Muscle soreness can be painful and difficult to deal with. But the solution to address such soreness is oftentimes very simple.

Blackened Shrimp and Corn Chowder

Fresh dill, finely chopped

When winter arrives, colder temperatures typically arrive as well. Staying warm on cold winter days can sometimes be challenging, but food can be just the thing to make you feel warm on a chilly day.

Chowder is a robust dish that can stick to the ribs while warming people up. Just about anything, including beer, can be added to chowder, making it a uniquely flavorful dish. Ideal for cold days, the following recipe for “Blackened Shrimp and Corn Chowder” from John Holl’s “The American Craft Beer Cookbook” (Storey) can be just what you need to warm up.

Ingredients: Serves eight to ten

- 2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
- 1 medium Spanish onion, finely chopped
- 2 celery stalks, finely chopped
- 2 medium banana peppers, finely chopped
- 1/2 cup red or amber ale
- Salt and freshly ground black pepper
- 1 pound fresh shrimp, peeled and deveined
- 2 teaspoons chili powder
- 2 teaspoons smoked paprika
- 1 1/2 cups fresh or frozen corn
- 4 cups fish broth
- 1 large sweet potato, baked and mashed

Instructions:

Heat 1 tablespoon of the olive oil in a soup pot over medium heat. Add the onion, celery and banana peppers, and cook, stirring occasionally, until the onions are translucent, 5 to 7 minutes. Add the ale and salt and pepper to taste. Reduce the heat to medium-low and continue cooking and stirring until the beer’s foam subsides and the liquid reduces by half, about 5 minutes. Rinse the shrimp under cold water and pat dry with a paper towel. Toss the shrimp, chili powder and paprika together in a bowl, coating thoroughly. Heat the remaining 1 tablespoon olive oil in a cast iron skillet. Add the shrimp and cook, stirring once, until nicely seared, about 2 minutes. Immediately transfer the shrimp to the soup pot, and then stir in the corn and broth. Bring the mixture to a light boil over medium-high heat and add the mashed sweet potato. Reduce the heat to low, and cook, stirring occasionally, for 20 minutes longer. Divide the soup among bowls and top with the fresh dill before serving.

Pairing:

La Crema ‘Sonoma’ Chardonnay
La Crema Winery — Sonoma Coast, Calif.
This dish would call for a chardonnay. This one from La Crema Winery in California offers floral, lemon, green apple, subtle oak and spice aromas, with plum and honeydew melon flavors. It pairs well with both the chowder and shrimp.

The Back40 Band rocks Vapor Night Club for a 20th anniversary show

By AMY MODESTI
news@spotlightnews.com

SARATOGA SPRINGS — Although it was a frigid Friday evening, it didn't stop local country fans from driving to Vapor Night Club on Jan. 5 to line dance their way into the start of 2018 to celebrate the return of The Back40 Band.

The band — featuring original and newer members alike — brought its country music to the dance floor in celebration of its 20th Anniversary as an ensemble.

Since 1998, The Back40 Band has been one of the top local country acts in the Capital District. Voted as one of the Northeast CMA Entertainers of the Year and Best of the Capital Region by Metroland, the band has opened and shared the entertainment stage for over 60 top country acts including Sheryl Crow, Miranda Lambert, Luke Bryan, and Trisha Yearwood.

The Back40 Band has performed at various events including the WGNA Country Fest and the benefit event, "We Band Together a Tribute to Sue Bogucki", held in Vapor last December in memory of the local country music fan.

Lead vocalist Mark Pierre and company started off the evening with a cover of Toby Keith's classic hit, "Shoulda Been A Cowboy," followed by Garth Brooks' "Much Too Young (To Feel This Damn Old)," and Luke Bryan's "Drink a Beer," which was sung in memory of those that had passed away tragically.

A fan favorite within the first set was the band's cover of the Old Crow Medicine Show's tune (and Darius Rucker Cover), "Wagon Wheel."

Line dancers were parading and stepping their way throughout the dance floor as patrons happily danced and swayed along to the music. As a tribute to American soldiers, the band concluded its first set with Toby Keith's "American Soldier" and "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue."

The Back40 Band continued to bring on the heat into their performance during their second and final set of their anniversary concert. Warmed up from the cold and from the music, the audience was in full swing dancing and singing along to more country hit songs; Brooks' "Papa Loves Mama," Johnny Cash's "Folsom Prison" and Steve Earle's "Copperhead Road" — a favorite line dancing song dedicated to the line dancers that danced all night long.

A stand out moment from the band was the dedication of Merle Haggard's "Silver Wings" that Mark Pierre and the band dedicated Bogucki, who had recently passed away last November 2017. The harmonies of each of the singers as they paid homage to Bogucki were sung beautifully from start to end.

Dwight Yoakam's "Fast as you" brought the crowd out dancing, along with some great guitar chemistry and solos being performed by Doug Doyle and Ed Legenbauer throughout the song's bridge and finale.

With the concert coming to a close, the band closed out with back to back Brooks hits, "The Dance" and "Friends in Low Places," which Pierre stepped off the stage, meshing with a crowd of people that had circled around him on the dance floor, arm and arm, and sung the final song with such prowess and cheer to a happy audience and band.

With great vocals, harmonies, and chemistry amongst the band members, a great evening was had by all as The Back40 Band made their return and debut to the stage. 2018 looks like to be a promising, great year for the band now that they are back and dedicated to bringing country back to the Capital District.

"The more people that come in, it's creating this interesting dynamic. You have businesses who are here, who have their own culture. Then, it slams right into the culture of our space, and we get to help mold the cultures of those companies."

— Jeff Goronkin,
CEO of
Urban Co-Works

So legit, it fits

"Because, nobody knows what that is," he said.

Shared workspace

In 2018, the shared space concept can no longer be considered a trend. It is, in fact, a full-fledged industry patronized predominately by start-ups looking to curb costs while still maintaining a professional environment for clients.

Bonnie Liebers is one of 1.2 million professionals worldwide who are estimated to have worked in a shared office space in 2017. The owner and CEO of Genetic Counseling Services moved into Urban Co-Works late last year.

Liebers' story is a familiar one. Her company, too, is a start-up; one she created after working 30 years in the genetic counseling field. Much of that time was spent in offices provided by local hospitals. She acts as an intermediary between her clients and medical professionals, and helps them with assessing needs for genetic testing.

With hospitals, Liebers said she often found herself on the wrong end of budget cuts. But, with the demand for genetic testing on the rise — 10 million people have sought a genetic test, roughly 2 million through Ancestry.com on Black Friday, alone — it's enabling Liebers to branch out on her own. Just doing so from home with the dog barking during phone calls, was not the solution.

Through a membership fee less than the monthly rent of a two-bedroom apartment, Liebers and a handful of college interns she employs have access to WiFi, electricity, a conference room and an individual office. Perhaps the biggest draw for such shared environments is the collaboration of ideas and solutions, sometimes with people of different companies and industries.

"It's been very nice," said Liebers, who looks to strengthen her company's presence on the internet. Some of her fellow office residents include Beekman 1802, Buzz Media Solutions and Magic Digital Media. "I have enjoyed the camaraderie of a group of people who have a better understanding of doing business in the online world."

Expanding world

That type of interaction has attracted larger corporations looking to not only capitalize on commonplace brainstorming but also to trim office space expenses, and coworking spaces are taking note.

Goronkin said he's looking to expand the Urban Co-Works brand to other locations outside of Schenectady, and he's not alone. Deskmag.com reported last year that two-thirds of coworking spaces aim to expand, with nearly 40 percent looking to open a new location entirely.

The industry perceives a growth in demand in the coming years. Intuitively, with the increasing demand for residential property within the nation's metropolitan areas, more people seek to work, sleep and play downtown. Some of those working professionals would look towards a shared work space.

There is, also, demand from larger corporations stepping in to utilize shared environments in a way not originally anticipated. WeWork, which has more than 130 shared environments, struck a deal with IBM last April that allowed the business computer giant to move approximately 600 employees to its 70,000 square-foot office space at 88 University Place in New York City. It's a move industry pundits see as advantageous for big businesses, not only for cutting building maintenance costs, but to free larger corporations from long-term leases, too.

"The more people that come in, it's creating this interesting dynamic," said Goronkin. "You have businesses who are here, who have their own culture. Then, it slams right into the culture of our space, and we get to help mold the cultures of those companies.”

It’s a potentially successful formula that has more than 80 percent of coworking spaces anticipating growth in the upcoming year according to Deskmag.com.

Goronkin said the trick for a successful coworking space is location. Companies are looking for the internal amenities, the networking potential and the proximity to restaurants, coffee shops, airports and train stations. In the end, it offers something for businesses big and small.

For start-ups and freelancers like Liebers, it takes her out of her house and into something clients expect to see.

“Now, to be able to say ‘come up to my office’ adds more legitimacy to the business I’m trying to do here.”

The Egg – Wednesday, Jan. 24

ALBANY — Greensky Bluegrass will perform at The Egg on Wednesday, Jan. 24, at 7 p.m.

The show will start with Billy Strings, the fastest rising bluegrass star.
