Switch to coal to cost $200 million

Niagara Mohawk has announced that it will begin preliminary work to convert its 400,000-kilowatt steam-electric generating plant on Rt. 9W in Glenmont to again burn coal — as it was built to do in the early 1950's. The station currently operates on either oil or natural gas.

An environmental impact statement for the $200 million project has been filed with the state Department of Environmental Conservation, according to Richard H. Kukuk, vice president-regional operations. Niagara Mohawk officials met recently with Bethlehem town officials to acquaint them with the project, but the town will defer to the state's lead in assessing the impact statement, Supervisor Tom Corrigan said last week.

Niagara Mohawk is the town's largest taxpayer.

Engineering design work will be conducted by the Fluor Power Services Corp., and the project is scheduled for completion in 1986, said Kukuk.

"Much of the work will involve reconstruction of coal-handling and environmental air quality facilities," Kukuk said, "although a substantial amount of coal equipment remaining in the plant can be used with some modifications."

The station, located on the Hudson River south of Albany, burned coal to produce electric power until 1971 when it was converted to oil to meet air quality standards and reduce fuel costs. Last year, it was modified to burn either oil or natural gas, and the use of natural gas is expected to result in a cost savings for consumers of some $6 million through the end of this month, the utility says.

"It's an interesting commentary on the times when you realize the plant was built 30 years ago at a cost of some $60 million. Now it will cost more than three times that for conversion alone, and which involves just a portion of the process of producing energy in the station," Kukuk said.

He said the conversion program, as planned, "will use a combination of low sulphur coal and highly efficient air pollution control equipment, resulting in stack emissions well within prescribed air quality limits."

The ability to burn multiple fuels will enable the utility to take advantage of price benefits that might occur in the future, Kukuk said.

Local roads get boost from state

In a time of sharply reduced aid from the state and federal governments, local municipalities are seeing one exception to the rule.

It's called CHIPS, (for Consolidated local street and Highway Improvement Program), and it means $73,000 for Bethlehem this year, $41,000 for New Scotland and $13,000 for Voorheesville, according to state officials. Contrast that to the estimated $9,603 Bethlehem received last year for highway aid, or the $5,740 that came to New Scotland, or the zero dollars that came to Voorheesville.

As its name implies, CHIPS is a consolidation of various forms of state aid, notably the old Donovan plan and the distribution of fuel tax receipts and motor vehicle registration fees. The increase is a result of concern in the legislature over the deterioration of New York State's "infrastructure" — its roads and highways.

Under the new rules, 75 percent of a municipality's CHIPS funding must be for capital construction, projects having a life of 10 years or more. "It's not difficult to come up with projects like that," said Bethlehem Supervisor Tom Corrigan Friday. The town will use its first-year allocation for such projects as the new sidewalks on Kenwood Ave. east of the water line, the straightening of Blessing Rd. and some paving projects, Corrigan said.

A race you can't sleep through

"The little carnivals we've always had haven't been doing so well, and some of the older guys in the department said that the younger ones should take over and come up with something. So I had this brainstorm about the bed races — Bolton Landing's go over so well every year."

So, explained Kurt Uhl of the Delmar Volunteer Fire Dept., Delmar will see its "First Annual Field Day and Moto-Cross Bed Races" on Aug. 14, in the Bethlehem Town Hall parking lot.

"The entries will race individually and be electronically timed," Uhl said. "And it won't be a straight course. There'll be a hairpin turn and a water hazard, if we can do it. We really want everyone to get into this."

Ads for the event state that there will be two classes for the race: stock and modified. "A stock bed is just a plain old bed with wheels. A modified is — well, anything goes."

Race teams will consist of five people — four pushers and one rider. All entrants must wear helmets and knee and elbow protection. "But we won't be that strict with the rules," Uhl said, "we'll bend them a little to help people compete," adding that safety is the only real criterion.

The department has guaranteed a minimum first prize of $65, but it could go as high as $100 or even $150, "depending on how many entrants we get," Uhl said. "The more entrants, the higher the prize." Second place will earn $35 and third will garner $20. There will be other prizes for the best appearing bed, the most original design and the "rider with most crowd appeal."

Registration fee is $8 and registration forms will be available at the fire house at Adams St. and Nathaniel Blvd., Delmar.

Three-year-old Kate Doody (left) seems to be a bit suspicious of the free watermelon, but Harold Hasselbrath is more enthusiastic as he heaves a horseshoe (right) during festivities at Bethlehem's Family Day at the Elm Avenue Park Sunday. The day included a tennis tournament (for results, see page 14) and biathlon races (see page 13).

The 'local' race for judge

Albany County Republicans have picked Joshua J. Effron, an Albany attorney who lives in Delmar, to run against County Court Judge John J. Clyne, also a Delmar resident.

In so doing, the county committee set up a rerun of Democrat Clyne's first race for judge in 1972, when he faced then-Town Attorney Harry Rezzemini. Clyne, who was at that time county attorney and considered the most powerful man in county government, easily won the judgeship but lost to Rezzemini in Republican Bethlehem, 9,163 to 3,955.

Effron was an assistant attorney general under Louis Lefkowitz and currently serves at the town's special counsel in acquiring easements for the $7 million sewer extension project. He said recently the last of more than 100 easements have been settled, completing that job on time.

Town Republican Chairman Bernard Kaplowitz said Friday Effron has promised to run a vigorous campaign against Clyne.

In other political developments, New Scotland residents will have a new assemblyman next year, a choice between Richard Connors, the Albany Democrat whose district has been reapportioned to include some of the hill towns, and Guilderland Republican Robert Bain. Larry Lane is again the Republicans' choice for the 102nd District, which still covers Bethlehem, and his opponent reportedly former Siena College basketball coach Bill Kirsch has yet to be named.

Weights lifted

A set of body building equipment was stolen from a house on Herber Ave.

Thursday while the owner was moving, Bethlehem police reported. The equipment was valued at $380.

Library access pact near

Bethlehem Video's main office has approved a tentative agreement with the Bethlehem Public Library to foot the cost of building and equipping a public access studio in the library.

Providing the library's board of directors approves the contract — which is "a version" of the contract originally proposed by the library — the new facility could be completed within 60 to 90 days, according to George Bowen, the cable firm's programming director.

Bethlehem Video, which is owned by Adams Russell and has its headquarters in North Greenbush, had proposed having the library take over public access programming earlier this year during hearings on its request for a rate increase.

Bowen said Bethlehem Video has started two new services — a program guide on channel 9 and CSpan, which broadcasts proceedings in Congress, on channel 7. Also, he said, channel 16, the public access channel, resumed programming this week with all programs originating out of North Greenbush.

Bowen also said the cable company is not responsible for disruptions in service in the Murray Rd. area south of the Delmar Bypass, where construction crews laying sewer lines have several times disturbed the cable.

A sane Fourth

With two exceptions, area police agencies reported a safe, sane and (relatively) quiet Fourth of July weekend this year. There were no serious traffic accidents in Bethlehem or New Scotland and no injuries due to fireworks.

An absent homeowner on West Bayberry Dr., Glenmont, did have a near miss when a smoking rocket ended up on his roof. Luckily, a neighbor saw the missile land and Elsmere Fire Department quickly dispatched it.

On Friday, an early celebrant let loose with eight fire crackers in the middle of Bethlehem's Elm Ave. Park parking lot. A park attendant, seeing the explosions close by two young girls, took the miscreant's name and turned him in to the Bethlehem police.

Cleanup is over

Bethlehem's spring cleanup is over. In fact, it's long past over, but Highway Superintendent Martin Cross says his crews are still coming up against home owners who think they can leave large, unbundled loads to be picked up. For the record, the pickup is only for vegetation that is bagged or bundled, is not over four feet in length and is light enough so that one man can lift it into a truck.

Art show at the fair

This year the Altamont Fair will feature a giant new art show under the direction of Leslie Urbach of Center Galleries in Albany.

The fair show will be a juried show only. Artists from a 52-mile radius are eligible to enter their paintings, graphics, sculpture and photography, competing for $500 first, $250 second and $100 third prizes.

Professor Robert Cartmel, artist and teacher at the State University at Albany, and former Art Editor for the Albany Times Union, will serve as the sole juror of the exhibition.

A maximum of four works will be accepted from each entrant. All entries must be delivered to the Fine Arts Building (Flower Building) Aug. 4 through 8 between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m.

Applications and all rules can be had by phoning 4450-6640 or 462-4775, or call or write The Altamont Fair, Altamont, N.Y. 12009, phone 861-6671.

The 1982 Altamont Fair dates are Aug. 16 through 21.

A tour of Glenmont steam plant

Unfortunately for the visitor to a steam generating plant, most of its operations are hidden from view.

Take the turbines. Inside their steel shells is a huge shaft on which are anchored 550 vanes, or buckets, of highly polished steel. They range in size from one inch to 23 inches in length. They are so precisely shaped, finished and fitted, that the 26-ton assemblage smoothly spins in perfect balance 60 times a second.

Against the beveled surface of a bucket blow tornadoes of steam and under its force the bucket moves sideways, turning the shaft. Baffled, the steam moves on. Another bucket is encountered. Under the charge it, too, side-steps, also turning the shaft. Forward the steam travels, pushing aside rows and rows of buckets that impede its progress. One by one they tame and bleed the tornado of its fury and as it weakens, the buckets grow larger. At the end of a split second 1,000F steam has been lowered to 79F.

A visitor to Niagara Mohawk's Glenmont steam plant would miss much without a trained guide. There are few employees, little noise and the end product is invisible.

Nevertheless, the plant is as orderly as any factory. In fact, there are two factories located in the building. One makes steam and the other makes kilowatts of electricity.

The large brick and steel building is 222 feet wide and 304 feet long, encompassing more square feet than a football field with its end zones. It is 164 feet high and the four stacks are 175 feet above the power house.

If the steam station could be subjected to a giant X-ray, the viewer would see a maze of pipes and tubes more than 13 miles long and weighing 313 tons, within the walls and floors of the building. These are pipe lines of cooper, stainless steel, cast iron, concrete and carbon steel lined with rubber, ranging in size from one eighth to four feet in diameter.

The piping that conveys the steam from the boilers to the turbines alone weighs 159,000 pounds and has to withstand such pressures that it could not be manufactured like ordinary pipe. Some of it had to be produced by boring a hole through solid forging.

The heart of the facility is its boiler. Some nine stories high, this giant teakettle is a rather unique assembly of continuous piping. Through these pipes is circulated water so chemically pure that it would be unpleasant to taste.

The purified water within the pipes is exposed to a blazing inferno that changes it to steam. Steam, gathered in drums at the top of the boiler, is released through the pipes into the turbine at jet-plane speed and temperatures that would instantly ignite a piece of wood.

The turbine is something like a cross between a mammoth windmill and a Paul Bunyan top. Silently, it seems to spin without effort, even though it bears a heavy load. The turbine does not turn alone; it is merely the muscle that drives the giant generator mounted on the same shaft.

Here, something that did not exist is being created. In a narrow air gap that separates rotating coils of magnetized wire and stationary coils of wire, electricity is made.

The steam, with lowered temperature, and having lost its energy after completing its twentieth-of-a-second obstacle race through the turbine, enters a cooling chamber. Here it is converted back to water to be used over again for steam.

River water is the cooling agent. River water is piped through a huge tunnel, equipped with screens to keep out fish and other solid material. From the tunnel the water is diverted into thousands of tubes inside the cooling chamber. The river water in the tubes absorbs the heat left in the steam and carries it to the river by way of another tunnel. By using sixty times more river water than the amount of purified water used in the boilers, the temperature of water returned to the river is raised only a few degrees.

The pressure of electricity when it leaves the generators is 13,800 volts. This is too low for shipping power long distances, so it is sent through a transformer where the pressure is changed to 115,000 volts.

Court ruling shows district differences

By Caroline Terenzini

The recent State Court of Appeals decision on state aid to education formulas surprised many and disappointed some. Locally, reactions from school administrators generally reflect their district's property tax wealth.

"Some child who lives in the poorest part of New York is not getting what he or she is entitled to because of the accident of where they're living," said Werner Berglas, superintendent of the Voorheesville School District. "I feel that isn't right."

But even Bethlehem Central and Ravena-Coeymans-Selkirk officials, who say the ruling works to their districts' advantage, have problems with the court's ruling.

In a 6-1 ruling, the Court of Appeals found that although "significant inequalities" exist in the amount of funding for public school districts in the state, the inequalities do not violate the state or federal constitutions. The ruling was made in a suit brought in 1974 by the Levittown School District in Nassau County and 26 other school districts charging that the state's formulas for allocating aid to education failed to compensate for disparities in the tax base from district to district, and hence violated the equal protection clauses in both the state and federal constitutions.

But the Appeals Court found that a "basic education" satisfies the constitutional requirements.

The state currently supplies an average of 39 percent of the cost of public primary and secondary education; the remainder must come from property taxes. Voorheesville's tax base provides per-pupil wealth of about $61,000, while in Bethlehem, wealth per pupil is about $107,000. The statewide average is $73,000.

The disparity is the crux of the court case.

For Voorheesville, Berglas said, the implications of the June 23 ruling "long term are very severe."

Next door in Bethlehem Superintendent Lawrence A. Zinn said the decision "is positive as far as Bethlehem is concerned. The district will continue to receive a moderate level of state aid. State aid is very important to every school district and we, of course, don't want to lose what little we have."

Zinn stressed, however, that he favors equality in state aid funding, as long as it does not mean less money for districts like Bethlehem Central. He said a June 24 story in the Albany Times Union failed to include his comments on the ruling itself.

"Philosophically," said Zinn, "I never did disagree with what (the Levittown suit) was trying to do."

Milton Chodack, superintendent of the Ravena-Coeymans-Selkirk School District, said, "We do better with the decision being turned over. There's a very good tax base here. We have Atlantic Cement, Owens-Corning, Callanan Industries . . .

"I'd prefer the property tax not be used, but there's no better solution at the moment," Chodack said.

The Rubin Commission, appointed by Gov. Carey in 1978, this spring had offered several proposals for equalizing school funding, but none had gained legislative support.

"The rug has been pulled out from under equalization legislation," Berglas said. "Now the legislators have to respond Bernard Hungerford of the state Education Department presented the Bethlehem Middle School with a banner and certificate recognizing it as a Demonstration Center School for physical fitness for 1981-82. to their conscience, not a court decision."

The New York State School Boards Association, based in Albany, said the decision "presents the state legislature with a brand-new challenge for overhauling" state education financing.

The New York Educators Association, also in Albany, called the ruling "an abdication of responsibility" and "a raw deal for . . . thousands of the state's children."

An appeal may be made to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Middle School cited

The Bethlehem Middle was recently cited for its physical education program by the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports. Principal Frederick Burdick received a letter from George Allen, chairman of the council, stating the award "signifies that you have a truly outstanding program which is considered a model for other schools to emulate."

The school was named a Demonstration Center School for 1981-82 and received a certificate and banner from the state Education Department.

Jazz for Catholic Charities

The world-renowned Preservation Hall Jazz Band from New Orleans will be featured at the Fourth Annual Catholic Charities Benefit to be held at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Monday, Aug. 2. Damage to be repaid

Four juveniles, or their parents will foot the cost of cleaning up the Slingerlands Elementary School, sprayed with black paint June 24. The four, whose names were withheld because of their ages, admitted in the presence of their parents their participation in the act under questioning from Bethlehem police Friday.

School Principal David Murphy agreed to accept restitution rather than press charges, according to a report filed by Det. Fred Holligan.

McKaig evidence challenged

New Scotland Town Justice Kenneth Connolly last week gave the Albany County District Attorney's office until July 15 to respond to motions challenging the driving while intoxicated arrest of Clarksville school bus driver Donald McKaig.

McKaig's lawyer, Michael Garry, served notice that he intends to challenge the two major pieces of evidence for the May 26 arrest of the Bethlehem Central driver — the observations of the arresting officers and the breathalyzer test results. Garry said he will also challenge the 21 counts of reckless endangerment — one for each passenger on the bus — on the grounds that the charge does not apply to a DWI arrest.

Once Connolly rules on the motions the case could go before a town court jury. The arrest of the long-time school bus driver has stirred intense feelings in the community, and BC union officials have vowed to fight his dismissal.

Garry said he is challenging the breathalyzer test results on the grounds that sheriff's deputies who made the arrest failed to preserve the ampoule that is used to test the machine's accuracy. That ampoule, he said, "has in the past been used for independent verification." But the sheriff's department claims they destroyed the ampoule "as a matter of course," he said.

If the breathalyzer test results were overturned proof would rest on the shoulders of the arresting officer, and Garry said he is also seeking permission to have the jury ride the route McKaig normally drove — one of the most difficult school bus routes in the area, he said.

Special meeting

The Bethlehem Town Board held a special meeting last Wednesday to approve the purchase of a new mowing machine for the town Highway Department. The $2,900 purchase was considered an emergency because the department's old machine had broken down, according to Supervisor Tom Corrigan.

Places you can get help

The Bethlehem Youth Advisory Council on Substance Abuse has taken a summer break, but those seeking information or referral for drug-related problems still have many avenues open to them. The Town of Bethlehem Parks and Recreation Office, at 439-4360 and 439-4131, will refer callers to appropriate agencies during the summer. Or help can be obtained at the following:

Project Equinox (434-6135) still has a satellite office in Delmar. Interviews are strictly confidential, and the program stresses individual, family and group counseling. Project Equinox also provides development and placement, advocacy and assistance and referral services.

Refer Switchboard (434-1200) is a component of Project Equinox, a 24-hour-a-day hotline and walk-in crisis center at 70 Central Ave., Albany. It provides crisis intervention, referral and information in all situations, including drug abuse.

Albany County Youthful Drug Abuse Clinic (445-7888) is located at 175 Green St., Albany. This program provides outpatient treatment, individual, couple and family counseling. It also provides assessment for residential placement that includes psychiatric and physical examinations.

Edward F. Kennell Substance Abuse Center (462-4320) is at 70 North Swan St., Albany. It provides individual and family counseling and a mini-lab satellite of the Adult Learning Center covers basic education and high school equivalency preparation.

Hope House (465-2441) at 261 North Pearl St., Albany, and Hospitality House (434-6468) are both residential treatment centers serving substance abusers between the ages of 16 and 25. Both feature individual, group and family counseling. Hope House has a high school equivalency program, and Hospitality House offers vocational training.

A spokesman for Project Equinox said that every one of these programs is professional and strictly confidential, and that, though payment is on a sliding scale, none of them will refuse treatment because of inability to pay.

Workshop summer

Heldeberg Workshop's "adventure in learning" program this summer will offer 11 summer evening courses for adults and high school pupils ranging in length from one to 10 sessions.

The courses will be offered between July 19 and Aug. 13 at the Workshop land on Picard Rd., New Salem.

Basket Weaving, designed for beginners, will teach the fundamentals of starting, shaping and border construction with each student completing a woven basket of round reed. Felt Making will treat uses and natural dyeing techniques. Two courses in basic Wreath Construction will utilize wild grapevines or corn husks to create decorations that can be used year around. A unique soft basket will be created using homespun wool spun with a drop spindle in Basket Twining and Spinning. Instructor David Formanek will prove that brightly colored Paper Balloons are fun to make and even more fun to fly.

A field course in Advanced Ecology will explore habitat and species diversity, and patterns of predators and prey. A one-evening New Games Workshop designed to develop techniques for fostering cooperation and communication through non-competitive games should be of special interest to parents, teachers and youth leaders.

Advanced Archery, Preserving Nature and Apprentice to Washington Park will also be offered. The latter will provide an opportunity to work with the Washington Park theater company at the corner of Grand St. and Madison Ave. in all aspects of producing a show. Their production of "Happy Birthday Wanda June" begins July 19 and "R.U.R." begins Aug. 2.

For a complete listing of courses, dates and registration fees, write to Heldeberg Workshop, Voorheesville 12186, or call 765-2880 evenings.

The swimming pool game

A new and rather unpleasant game seems to be making the rounds in Elsmere swimming pool trashing. Bethlehem police reported three incidents last week, two Tuesday on Lavery and Clermont Drives and one Wednesday on Haddington La., in which pool owners awoke to find lawn chairs, picnic tables, benches and the like uncerimoniously dumped into their pools.

Board wants hearings on Salem Hills rates

The Voorheesville Village Board has decided to ask the Salem Hills Sewerage Corp. for a 90-day extension so that it can hold hearings on the company's request for an increase in the monthly sewer fee from $20 to $69.26.

Without the extension, the board's time limit for acting on the request is the end of this month. But according to Mayor Milton Bates, there is little danger that the company will insist that timetable be met.

"They'll cooperate," he said after a telephone conversation with Gerald Rosen, a partner in Rosen-Michaels Inc., which owns the sewerage corporation.

"He said 90 days may be a bit much, perhaps 60 days is more reasonable," said Bates of his conversation with Rosen. "But he wants to see this thing settled in a gentlemanly fashion."

Salem Hills sewer rate negotiations have been called other things besides gentlemanly in the last four years. The latest move by Rosen-Michaels, which developed the Salem Hills subdivision, comes after the board granted a $6 increase in sewer fees last year, rejecting the company's request for a much greater increase and advising residents not to pay a $210 retroactive surcharge imposed by the company.

The latest request is for an increase to $46.92 in the monthly rate, plus a surcharge of $22.34 a month for one year. Rosen-Michaels says it has been operating the system, which serves some 276 houses in the subdivision, at a loss, and that improvements mandated by state and county health authorities have compounded the problem.

At its meeting Tuesday, the board agreed to hire Jeffrey Stockholm, an Albany attorney formerly on the legal staff of the state Public Service Commission, as its legal advisor for the hearings. By law, the board is required to sit as the rate-making body.

NEW SCOTLAND

A birthday for old and young

As the days dwindle down to the big celebration organizers of the New Scotland Sesquicentennial continue search for the town's oldest living resident.

This noble New Scotlander, who will be feted at Sesquicentennial Day on July 24, must fit the qualifications of having been born in the town and lived there all his or her life. Residents who have achieved a well-matured status, or those who know of other long-time residents, are being urged by the celebration's cochairman, Fran Vunch and Walter Miller, to call either Mrs. Vunch at 439-5721 or Miller at 765-3356. Deadline for entries is next Monday.

At the other end of the age spectrum, residents from the high school classes of 1982 through 1985 may vie for the crowns of New Scotland Lad and Lassie to be crowned also on Sesquicentennial Day at Voorheesville High School. Potential contestants should contact Mrs. Claire Applebee of Clarksville, at 768-2324. Judging is July 15.

The day's events begin at the New Salem Fire Department's Punkintown Fair Grounds, where a parade featuring historical themes of the area's past will begin at 10 a.m., and then march on to the high school. Parade participants are asked by organizers to meet at the fair grounds at 9 a.m.

The award is based on accomplishments in courses and future scholarly promise.

Bethlehem police and Delmar and Slingerlands rescue squad members had a graduation exercise of their own last week — a mock accident behind Bethlehem Town Hall. The officers got a chance to apply their first aid training to the "victims" and the rescue squad members used their "Jaws of Life" to free the driver. Spotlight

When the breadwinner returns

Astronauts train for years in preparation for that one critical moment of re-entry into earth's atmosphere. We simple working folk are never trained, much less prepared, for our daily re-entry into the atmosphere of the family homestead, and we have to execute that very delicate maneuver without the benefits of expensive hardware to guide us or a protective heat shield to absorb the occasionally tremendous friction.

At approximately 5:30 p.m. in every time zone around the globe, a majority of households suffer at least 5.5 on the Richter Scale. (Blessed are the afternoon and night shifts, for they shall inherit the earth.) Every unresolved conflict from the night before, each festering problem spawned during early morning rush hour and suppressed for the entire day, and every stress and pressure encountered through the work and school hours are dragged into the door of the family abode, ready to be triggered into an explosion by an unsuspecting sibling or spouse caught off guard because it's the first chance they've had to let down after a hard day.

Re-entry accentuates the patterns of family relationships.

• Lesson Number One: Don't let down during re-entry. Until every family member has had a chance to take the edge off any tension they may be harboring, letting down your guard when you hit the front door is tantamount to playing hockey without a helmet. The moments of re-entering that place where we hang our hats is not unlike the moments when an eyepatch is removed, fraught with anxious anticipations, high hopes and gingerly movements.

Re-entry requires some method for testing the water temperature before taking the plunge. It is a time for extreme sensitivity and forceful influence. It holds power to set the tone for the remainder of the evening. It is such a highly charged time that whichever colors are brushed onto the family canvas by each individual's mood, the resulting portrait can reflect flashes of heavenly light or black holes of gloom. The effects are contagious and, repeated over time, can become fused into a longlasting family experience for better or for worse.

Family Matters

Norman G. Cohen

• Lesson Number Two: Call home before leaving work. Telephoning home, assuming someone is there to answer, helps you tap into the atmosphere already shaping up or down. This simple act can provide you with early warning signals to help guide your mental preparedness exercises on the way home. On the other hand, beware that it can also provide you with many excuses to prolong your way home. However, with luck and the skill of a Hotline counselor, you might be able to solve some problem over the phone, thus clearing the atmosphere for an uneventful re-entry.

Re-entry accentuates the patterns of family relationships. Close-knit families tend to draw together upon re-entry, sharing the day's events with one another, whereas loosely-knit families disperse, each member going his or her own way. Helpers hover around work areas, rivals square off in isolated sections of the house or yard, loners seclude themselves in rooms or in front of TV or stereo sets. Frequently, adults confine themselves with adults and children with children.

My wife and I, for example, use a portion of re-entry time to debrief from our workday.

With many families the most exasperating part of re-entry is that in the midst of all the pressing issues of everyone's day and the demands of the hour, our digestive tracts are supposedly preparing for ingestion of the main meal. Nothing like a little tension to whet the palate. No wonder the pre-dinner cocktail is so popular. It acts as a soothing agent for those who have not developed other means for effectively handling re-entry shock.

Every unresolved conflict, each festering problem are ready to be triggered into an explosion . . .

• Lesson Number Three: Everyone can help the Little Red Hen. In the children's story none of the barnyard animals chipped in to help the Little Red Hen bake bread. When the bread was made, they all wanted a slice, but were denied a share. In families, everyone can chip in to help prepare the dinner, even if only to set the table. Such chores help to set the tone for the dinner hour as a mutually shared time for all to partake and enjoy. It also links responsibilities with rewards, not the easiest of life's lessons to teach our youngsters.

For all the tugs and pulls on us during re-entry into our homes and families, it offers us the daily opportunity to reaffirm home as a safe harbor, an oasis, a place to lick wounds and revitalize our energies. However, if all else fails on any given day, then heed Lesson Number Four: In the face of insurmountable re-entry pressure, take the family out to dinner.

Right of way notices

Bethlehem Highway Superintendent Martin Cross is taking the first steps to enforcing the town's new ordinance requiring property owners to remove obstructions on town rights-of-way.

The ordinance is designed to eliminate hazardous conditions for vehicles or pedestrians and to make it easier for highway crews to maintain streets and berms. The first step in the ordinance is a note to the property owner asking him or her to remove the obstruction. If there is no action within 30 days after the notice is delivered, Cross is allowed to have the obstruction removed and bill the owner.

What a person gives away indicates how generous and compassionate he or she is. When Philip Guedalla, the British biographer, was writing about the life of the Duke of Wellington, famed military hero of the English nation, he had access to the warrior's old cheque books and examined them to see how he spent his money. They told the story — the duke was liberal. He got a kick out of giving money away.

So did William Allen White, the famous American newspaperman. He gave the city of Emporia, Ill., a public park of 50 acres as a memorial to his daughter with the stipulation that it was not to bear the family name. When he handed the deed to the mayor, he said with a great smile, "This is the last kick in a fistful of dollars that I am getting rid of today. I have always tried to teach that there are three kicks in every dollar. One when you make it. The second is when you have it. The third comes when you give it away. The big kick is in the last one."

In today's inflationary times, only the very wealthy can give the great big gifts for this or that worthy cause. But everybody can give something — a dollar, or more — and the children can give their pennies, nickels and dimes. In our church the "small fry" saved up their change in Lent and contributed the sum of $14.67 to what is called "The Anglican Appeal", when they sent the money to head office, they marked it — "for the needy kids in the Canadian North and overseas." You should have seen the smiles on the faces of our children as they handed in their boxes filled with their savings. (The amount would have been more but our Sunday School membership is very small in downtown Montreal).

I read somewhere that there are two kinds of money — one is "dead" and the other is "alive." My information stated that the "dead" is what you keep for yourself and the "alive" is what you give away. The message seemed to be a footnote to what St. Paul said to the elders of Ephesus, "I have shown you in all things that by working hard in this way we must help the weak, remembering the words of the Lord Jesus himself, 'There is more happiness in giving than in receiving.'"

With living costs what they are today, finding the extra to give away may be difficult. Give it cheerfully and you will know the happiness St. Paul referred to.

Poole, Peterson top biathlon race

Many area athletes chose to celebrate their Fourth of July with sweat and stamina by competing in the Elm Avenue Park's road races and biathlon sponsored by the town's Park and Recreation Department.

Some 30 youngsters came out to survive the 1.2-mile road race that saw champions crowned in a 9 to 11 and 12 to 14 year old division. Crossing the finish line first for the younger girls was Jean Cunningham, with Katie Fish and Meg Connolly second and third. Tom Nyilis, continuing the family line of running excellence, clinched the boys' 9 to 11 age group title, with Steve Stasiuk placing and Patrick Shcholes in for the show. Tanya Stasiuk, the lone competitor in the 12 to 14 age group, stood alone in first, while Joe Louderback had to fend off competition to win his title in the same division. John McAllister and Mark Louderback went two and three respectively.

The biathlon tested the prowess of athletes in the water and on land, with the first leg's four mile run separated from the half-mile swim by a short three-minute breather. In the 15 to 19 age group, Bethlehem Central junior Colleen Nyilis finished first, edging sophomore Jenny Warren and senior Meg Manion for the honors. College-bound Jay Hanahan claimed the men's title, with juniors John Briggs and Dave Young completing the course second and third.

Debbie Peterson was the first woman to cross the finish line as well as the first in the open, 20 to 29 age group with the best overall women's time of 45:46. Tammy Lynk and Beth Miller were second and third place finishers in the open division.

Girls in the 15 to 19 age group pace themselves during the four mile run in the first leg of the biathlon at Bethlehem's Family Day at the Elm Avenue Park last Sunday. From left are Meg Manion, Vicki Manion, Beth Laub, Jennifer Grierson, Colleen Nyilis in the lead, and Jennifer Warren. Nyilis went on to win.

Life guard Steve Steele defeated fellow lifeguard Mike Nyilis for the honors in the men's open, with Bob Coll finishing third.

The 30 to 39 years old mens' division saw the best overall men's time turned in by Jim Poole with a 34:28 clocking. Dave Keenan and Bob Smith were sub-masters runners-up, while lone female competitor Carolyn Riley walked off with first in the age group.

Pat Ellis won the ladies masters division in the same way, while John LaPointe, George McIntosh, and Ron Tweedie competed hard to go first, second and third in the 40-and-up division.

A chance for the big time

By Linda Burtis

It is a dream of dreams. For the 130 capital area women playing in the Michelob Light League, reaching the nationals in September at Flushing Meadows (the new "Forest Hills") is, at once, a marvelous fantasy and a real possibility.

The league's team tennis format is designed to allow singles and doubles players of equal ability to go as far as their talent takes them. And, if the level of play in this area remains high, and one of the teams survives the playoffs in Port Chester and Stratton Mountain, Vt., 12 local women will walk on to the same courts that Martina and Tracy and Chris played on during the U.S. Open. Suddenly, patients in intensive care, office obligations or changing a wet toddler at 3 a.m. are worlds away. Instead, drop shots are run down and lobbed into the corners of the court and baseliners grit their teeth and stay with the point until an error is forced.

Nancy Nicolson, a local player who frequents the Delmar courts, is responsible for organizing the Michelob Light League in this area. Actually, it is the ETA/USTA Michelob Light League. That is, the eastern section of the U.S. Tennis Association shares sponsorship of the program.

Now in its third year, the league includes five teams rated at a 3.5 level of skill and six 4.5 teams. More about the rating system in a moment. The town of Bethlehem fields three teams, one at a 4.5 and 2 at 3.5 levels. Each team plays two singles matches and three doubles matches weekly, for five weeks, against teams rated at the same level. The team with the greatest number of match victories moves on to the district playoffs in their category, the sectionals, the regionals and finally the prestigious nationals at Flushing Meadows.

Last year, the Schenectady team, advanced to the sectionals, losing an opportunity to go onto the regionals by one match. Two years ago, it was the Delmar 4.5 team at the sectionals. Elaine Viebran, ETA chairman for this league, feels a capital area team has an excellent chance of reaching the North Atlantic regionals at Stratton this year.

Clearly, the average player, Bud Collins, "weekend hacker," is no longer restricted to a pickup match at the park courts. Once big money began to bankroll the Wimbledons of the international circuit, sponsors such as Michelob emerged to encourage competition at the grass roots level. League tennis brings competition beyond the domain of world class level players and high school and college students playing for their school teams. Another real breakthrough in the sport, the rating system, offers competitive play to all levels of players.

The rating system categorizes tennis skills on a scale of 1.0 (beginner) to 7.00 (nationally ranked player). A 3.5 player would likely be considered a low level intermediate player, while the 4.5 rating applies to a solid intermediate player. By playing against an opponent ranked on the same level, the rating system evens out the competition, giving everyone a chance to win. Under this format, matches are rarely lopsided; rather they become tensely touch and go.

A recent league match at the Bethlehem Middle School courts illustrates this point. The Delmar team was playing the Schenectady team. The most exciting match of the evening saw Nancy Nicolson of Delmar going 3 sets against Gail Diffley. With both players rated at a 4.5 level, their similar abilities made for a match which could have gone either way. They exhibited an almost even mixture of steadiness, glamorous shotmaking and simple, unforced errors.

Nancy dominated the first set, going for and making more winners. Gail, patiently turned the tempo in her favor with excellent retrieving to keep the ball in play, taking the second set. By the third set, Nancy's attempts to go for winners failed her and she lost the match.

The Capital District teams continue to grow in numbers, strength and sophistication. Since the league is for adults, all the women are over 21 years old, with several "grandmothers" playing a strong game of tennis. Some of the teams conduct weekly practice sessions, coached by local pros.

It is an extraordinary sight to see women ranging in age from their early 20's on up to early 60's drilling backhands ("arm in tight to your body"), volleys or service returns, with the strident voice of their coach in the background. Sports for the most of these women are on the high school and college level was either nonexistent or suffered second class citizenship to the boys' sports. Perhaps the appeal of team tennis for women lies here. It is an unexpected second chance to see how far their talent can take them.

The competitive nature of the league is surely not its only appeal. The league matches are "mostly fun," according to Ann Treadway, a local doubles player on the Delmar team. The team members cross geographic lines, playing with friends, not necessarily for their own communities. And, as most of the players can attest, the pizza and beer following the matches is as much a part of the evening as the tennis.

There you have all the ingredients for a fine break from nighttime chores, family obligations or tube watching: exercise, friendship and a beer for good measure. Of course, there is also the not too remote possibility that one of the teams will go all the way to the nationals at Flushing Meadows!

The writer, an Elsmere resident, plays on the Schenectady 4.5 team. Ed.

Bennett tops league batters

Rick Bennett, Skippy's Music short-stop, finally dethroned fellow teammate Paul Heiser last week to assume the batting title in the Bethlehem Babe Ruth League. Bennett topped Heiser with a weekly batting average of .568, up from .533, thanks to cracking hits 21 times out of 37 official at-bats. Heiser, who has had a virtual monopoly of the title with batting averages near .600, saw his average slip to .561 while being effective "only" 16 of 29 times at-bat. Jim Dering of National Savings Bank completed the hot threesome of batters with a .525 average.

Although well back from the leaders, other outstanding Babe Ruth batsmen last week were Andy Kasius of Blue Cross (.421), teammate catcher Kevin Roohan (.379), Tom Schrempf of National Savings (.355), Pat Tangora of BC-BS (.349), John Allen of General Electric (.323) and Rick Keefe of Main Care (.310).

Basketball camp

The Albany Jewish Community Center will offer this summer a one week intensified basketball camp experience for boys entering grades 6 through 11, August 23 through 27.

Registration is open to members and non-members throughout the Capital District. The camp director will be Paul Lyons.

Tennis families have their day

Father-son, mother-daughter, father-daughter and mother-son were the combinations in the annual parent-child round-robin tennis tournament sponsored by the Bethlehem Tennis Association to celebrate Elm Avenue Park's Family Day on July 4. This year's tournament, organized by the husband-wife team of Joel and Barbara Woodruff, attracted nearly 40 entrants, who had competed for the $10 and $5 gift certificates awarded to the champions and runners-up by the Courtside Tennis Shop in Delmar.

Having won 17 games, Corina Lee and son Stanley walked off with top honors in the novice division, while Douglas Pratt Sr. and son Douglas Jr. claimed the runner-up prize with 16 games to their credit.

The experienced division saw the familiar tennis name of Jones again appear in the winner's column, with father Craig and younger daughter Kristen pulling off a minor upset over mother Eileen and star Jody. The father-daughter team won with 17 games to their credit, while mother and daughter Jones' 15 games tied them with John Nyilis and son Tommy and Maurice Lee and son Eric for the runner-up slot.

Courtside also provided four gift certificates that were given away in a family-draw.

Archers prepare for shoot

Workers are rushing to complete the new club house for the Rakowana Arrows in time for the club's first shoot on July 25.

Rakowana Archers was formed in 1964 and is one of the oldest outdoor clubs in the Capital District. It is ideally located on 25 acres off wooded slopes and fields under the Helderberg escarpment on Picard Rd. in New Scotland. The trails and targets have some exciting views of the Mohawk-Hudson Valley area. A natural practice area is a challenge for the bow hunter or the target archer.

The club is affiliated with the National Field Archers Association and the range itself meets all the codes for state and national safety requirements.

Many Rakowana shooters have been state and national champions, with some becoming proshooters. One club member has just qualified for the junior Olympics on a state level.

The club welcomes men, women, boys and girls of all ages. Visitors are welcome any time. Shooting is every Tuesday evening during the summer. The range is available at all times. Regular meetings are held on the second Tuesday of the month. The members also enjoy picnics, covered dish suppers and travel to other clubs.

Food and refreshments are available at all shoots. For information about the club call Arthur Hatch (765-2254) or the president, Bob Weatherwax (355-1299).

Dolphins fizzle in Firecracker

With some of their big guns on vacation, the Delmar Dolphin swim club had to celebrate the Fourth of July with a minimum of fireworks. With only 25 members of the team competing, the Dolphins were unable to place well in the Firecracker Meet in Clifton Park.

The prestigious two-day meet saw the Dolphins pick up most of their points in the older divisions. Senior girls competitor Becky Friedlander was fourth in the 100 meter fly, while John Demarest freestyled to a third in the 50 meter event. Bethlehem Central sophomore Matt Holland out did both, turning in a second in the 200 individual medley and touching third in the 100 backstroke.

Damon Woo's third in the 50 free came in the 13-14 year old division. Keith Dix finished fourth in the 11-12 boys' group, where Chris Drew was the biggest Dolphin winner of the meet. He touched in first in the 100 backstroke and splashed to second places in both the 50 and 200-meter freestyle races.

Merideth Dix's second in the 10 and under girls' 50 fly made her the Dolphin scoring leader in the younger divisions. Jenny Mosley, Drew Patrick, Mike Miller and Carol Kim were all sixth place finishers.

Although not big winners, Michelle Ryan, Erin Morrissey and Chris Drew received achievement awards marking their early-in-the-season move from the C-class competition to a more competitive B division.

In the C division, Christina Rudofsky led the Dolphin swimming attack with a first, second, and third in the 50 back, fly and breaststroke respectively. Mike Miller almost outachieved her, however, with his first and second awards coming in the 50 back and 100 free. Michelle Ryan touched first in the 100 freestyle, and Jenny Moseley did the same in her age group. Showing in third place were Shawn Flynn in the 100 free and Drew Patrick in the 50 fly.

Valuable relay points were again turned in by a barrage of the older Dolphins, with the 200 meter freestyle relay event proving to be Delmar's bread and butter. Earning third place points in the Dolphin "specialty" were the senior boys' veteran team of Holland, Krajeck, Patrick and Rudofsky, the senior girls' team membered by Ogawa, Ryan, Morrissey and Friedlander, 11-12 year old boys Dix, Drew, Stay and Engstrom, and 100 and under guys Scholes, Patrick, Miller and Flynn. The 10 and under girls team of Rudofsky, Dix, Kim and Flynn broke the monotony by placing second in the event.

Just as the 200 free relay was point scoring territory for the older Delmar swimmers, so the 200 medley relay was for the younger generations. The 10-and-under girls team of Rudofsky, Mosely, Dix and Kim combined talents for a second, while 10 and under boys Scholes, Patrick, Miller and Flynn had to be satisfied with a third.

With the summer swim season now officially open, the Dolphins will suit up for this weekend's important Empire State Qualifying Meet.

What goes best with baseball?

For nearly a quarter of a century the concession stand at the Tri-Village Little League park on Kenwood Ave. near the Delmar Bypass has been an attraction to many people each summer. The stand was started to provide a service to the little leaguers and their spectators, as well as to provide additional funds for park-related projects.

Dick Everleth and Don Graham, who head up the stand, plus a dozen other people, do all of the purchasing, book-keeping and the many other tasks involved with the concession. Mothers of little league members are asked by team managers to volunteer to help sell everything from hot pretzels and hamburgers to bubble gum cards and slush during the games at the park. The mothers are scheduled four at a time to work a two-hour shift and are paid with all the soda they can drink and a wide array of baseball stories. However, their greatest compensation is the appreciation of everyone, especially the league itself as the concession stand netted more than $1,000 last year.

Under current consideration is the recruitment of teenagers to help in the stand. The concession volunteers believe that teens could gain much valuable job experience working alongside the regular workers.

The stand is open for business whenever a little league game is scheduled, so if you ever have an urge to see a baseball game and eat at the park, the Tri-Village Little League has it all.

Spotlight IN RETROSPECT

July 3, 1957

Paul Coty, manager of the Handy Dandy Babe Ruth team, took a group of 13-year-old all-stars to the Little League Park to meet an all-star team of 12-year-olds Saturday morning. The result was a victory for the Babe Ruth All Stars in a 3-0 shutout pitched by Billy Hunter of the Elsmere team. The Little Leaguers, smarting under a defeat by an older and more experienced team, hope to get a return game and revenge later in the season.

William C. Gatgens is the new president of the Bethlehem Lions Club. Carl D. Simmonds is the new vice president.

Parochial views

Editor, The Spotlight:

The following letter was written to Lawrence Zinn, Superintendent of Schools, Bethlehem Central School District:

I was disturbed to read in the Times Union (June 24) your comments on the Court of Appeals decision regarding the state's system of financing public education. This court decision lets stand a system of state aid to schools that has resulted in wide disparities in financial support to schools and in varying degrees of educational opportunity across the state. You were quoted as saying: "I'm delighted. If they want to improve the conditions for the youngsters who happen to live in a low-wealth district, the state can give them more money. Don't take money away from us and force us to reduce the effectiveness of our program."

In an age when "looking out for Number One" has become a guide for personal and professional conduct, it is not surprising that someone should hold the views you express. It is, however, disturbing. I am unaware of any religious or ethical codes which suggest that the public good is served when the fortunate few act in a manner to maintain their position relative to those less fortunate.

Decisions such as that rendered by the Court of Appeals only make more difficult the provision of a quality education to the state's public school children. Isn't it about time that you and other educational leaders throughout the state occasionally put aside parochial views in which right and wrong is consistently determined by how your own school system is affected? In the short run, parochial views may maintain the advantages which the Bethlehem school system enjoys relative to many other school districts. But if such actions further contribute to the disaffection with public education in the state, will Bethlehem be well served in the long run? I think not.

Let me suggest to you that children educated in public schools of the state (including Bethlehem's) would be better served if prominent individuals like yourself spent less time protecting the backsides of their own school systems and more time working to achieve excellence in public schools across the state.

Invitation to R-C-S voters

Editor, The Spotlight:

In light of the recent budget defeat, the Board of Education has expressed an interest in meeting with district residents to discuss the concerns of the voters. More specifically, the Board of Education would like to hear from its constituents any ideas they have regarding school district finances and their effect on school programs.

An informational meeting to accomplish this goal has been scheduled for Thursday, July 8, at 7:30 p.m. in the Senior High School auditorium. Please make a concerted effort to attend and encourage other members of your family as well as neighbors and friends to come too.

Remember the future of our most precious resource, our children, is at stake.
