Guinn: life in the big league

By Dennis Sullivan

In the minds of many sports enthusiasts, Jeff Guinn, backfielder for the Albany Capitals Soccer Club is one of the lucky ones in life. He's not only doing what he wants to do and getting paid for it, he's doing what he's wanted to do since he was seven or eight — play professional soccer.

Bethlehem soccer fans, who remember Guinn's sterling performances while a student at Bethlehem Central at the beginning of this decade, will be pleased to know that the thereafter academic All-American at North Carolina State is recently married and mostly settled in Guilderland. Those with a broader interest in soccer already know Guinn can be seen booting a soccer ball on many Saturday nights at Bleecker Stadium from mid April to early August as the Capitals face opponents in the newly-formed American Soccer League (ASL).

But what most soccer fans do not know, regardless of their degree of interest in the sport, is that for Guinn and most of his colleagues, love of soccer is the name of the game — by necessity. It's certainly not money, status or security that drives the 23-year-old Guinn and, by all odds, never will.

In terms of salary, Guinn says, most players on the Caps get paid between $150. and $400. a game, which means top salaries in the 20—game schedule range between $7,000. and $8,000. Salaries of this size require all players to find additional sources of work to supplement what they earn from soccer. Some play indoor soccer; some do clinics and camps and some take on a full-time job in addition to their soccer career.

Ref-Fuel burn plant hits snag

By Mark Stuart

The proposed waste-to-energy burn plant at the Port of Albany has run into a snag because Niagara Mohawk says it doesn't want to buy the energy.

American Ref-Fuel has asked the New York State Public Service Commission to force Niagara Mohawk Power Corporation to show cause why it should be allowed to refuse to negotiate a power contract for American Ref-Fuel's proposed 1500-ton per day waste-to-energy facility in the Town of Bethlehem.

According to the petition, negotiations for a power purchase were initiated in May 1988 and continued until January 10 when Niagara-Mohawk refused to offer

American Ref-Fuel a contract that included capacity payments, or payments for electricity produced by a business other than the utility itself.

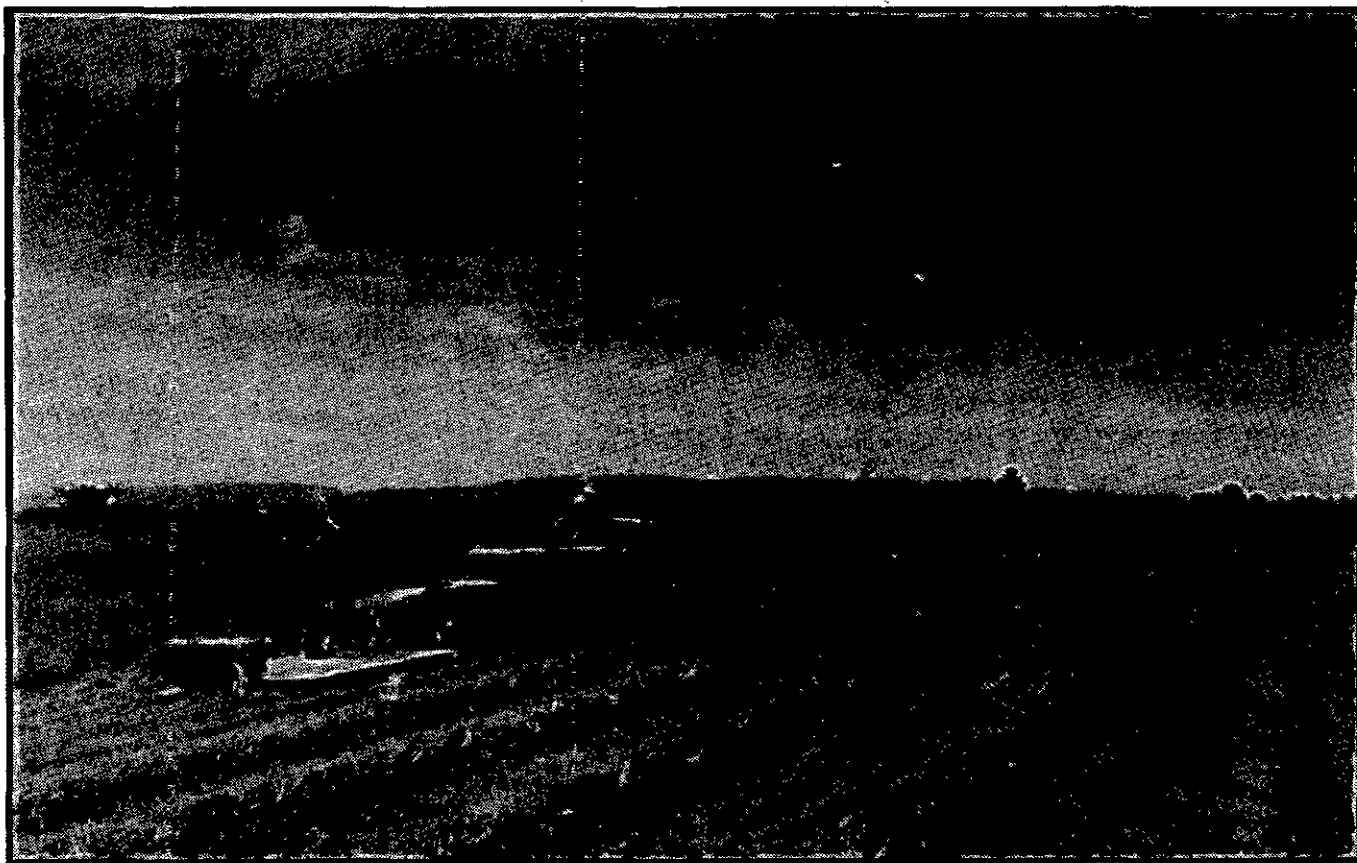

The negotiations began under the Public Service Commission's Interim Policy which gave NiMo the ability to negotiate contracts with developers, in this case American Ref-Fuel.

The PSC, however, issued a suspension order of the Interim Policy in January. The suspension order provided that "the utility may be permitted to suspend the requirements of the Interim Policy regarding negotiations." The order did not order NiMo to cease negotiations, but simply offered the option, American Ref-Fuel contends.

The waste-to-energy plant would produce 40-megawatts of electricity and would be located on Cabbage Island, a small parcel of land adjacent to the Port of Albany in the Town of Bethlehem in a Heavy Industrial zone owned by Cibro Petroleum. American Ref-Fuel has an option to purchase the land and is paying Cibro over $10,000 a month to maintain that option. Since January, American Ref-Fuel has spent over $650,000 on development of the plant, according to the petition.

The $200 million American Ref-Fuel project has enjoyed a victory of sorts in that a bill to establish an ANSWERS solid

Typhoid strikes in Voorheesville

By Dennis Sullivan

A victim of the recent typhoid outbreak at the Pines Hotel, a resort in the Catskills, Voorheesville Fire Chief Richard Berger remains hospitalized from a ruptured intestine and subsequent ileostomy performed to facilitate healing of the intestinal walls.

Berger was among a group of fire chiefs and their wives from New Salem, Voorheesville and Onesquethaw who attended the New York State Fire Chiefs Convention at the Pines on June 11, 12, 13, during the five-day period when the outbreak was said to occur.

Albert "Buddy" Deschenes, second assistant chief in Voorheesville, and Fred Spaulding, chief of the Onesquethaw Fire Company, who also attended the convention, showed symptoms of high fever and headache about two weeks after the convention at the Pines and were tested by the Albany County Health Department. Both are awaiting the results of the tests. To date, no other members of the group have exhibited symptoms of typhoid.

After suffering from flu-like symptoms and diarrhea for several days, Richard Berger was rushed to the hospital on July 8, after feeling an acute pain in the abdomen. Doctors operated on Berger at first thinking the problem might be related to the gall bladder or a ruptured appendix. Only after a number of tests were taken was the presence of typhoid confirmed. Originally doctors thought the cause of the inflammation might be the Cocksackie flu.

Orchard Park owner wins court judgment

By Bob Hagyard

A State Supreme Court jury awarded $40,000 plus costs last Wednesday to an Orchard Park homeowner claiming structural defects in his home.

The suite by Joseph Cotazino Jr. of 5 Robin Drive, Voorheesville, went to trial July 6; the jury took less than one half hour to reach its verdict. Cotazino alleged that Basal Development Corp. and owners Peter and Donna Baltis personally were guilty of breach of contract, breach of warranty, and negligence.

In all, 17 Orchard Park homeowners have filed negligence suits against the builder in State Supreme Court. Basal and the Baltises are also respondents in a suit filed by the Orchard Park Neighborhood Association.

"He (Baltis) will have to face the same case a number of times," said Thomas Daley, attorney for Cotazino.

Cotazino's home, like many others sold in Orchard Park, carried a one-year warranty against structural defects. The suit alleged that the builder was notified of major structural problems and code violations within that period, that the builders contributed personally to the problem, and failed to resolve them.

The verdict was filed Friday; Basal Development and the Baltises have 30 days to file an appeal. Neither Peter nor Donna Baltis could be reached for comment, nor their attorney, Marshall Richer.

Perhaps as significant as the verdict was Judge Daniel H. Prior Jr.'s statement that day that he will stay on the case. As the trial began, the judge "broke the corporate veil," as Cotazino put it, ruling that the plaintiff could properly seek damages from the Baltises personally as well as from Basal Development.

Paul Wein, attorney for the neighborhood association in its separate action, could not be reached for comment.

Cotazino was the lead witness in yet another related action, the ongoing state Department of State administrative law hearing in which Roberts Realty, seller of the Orchard Park homes, is the respondent. The hearing, last convened two weeks ago, is scheduled to resume Aug. 10 at New Scotland Town Hall.

Bethlehem sues to keep waste out

By Mark Stuart

The Town of Bethlehem has requested a declaratory judgment from the New York State Supreme Court in Albany as to whether an Albany waste hauler violated town law by bringing out-of-town waste to South Bethlehem.

Court summonses have been issued to three defendants in the case: Harlan Metz of Glenmont, the owner of the landfill, and Waste Management of Greater Albany, Menands; and Waste Management Inc., the company headquarters in New York City. The papers were filed by assistant town attorney Michael Smith of the law firm of Roemer and Featherstonhaugh.

In addition to a restraining order preventing any further landfilling of out-of-town waste, the town is seeking a judgment as to whether the town's law is valid against a state-issued permit allowing Metz to landfill construction and demolition debris at his Spawn Hollow Road site. The state Department of Environmental Conservation had issued a landfill permit to Metz and does not restrict Metz from accepting out-of-town waste. The town also issued a landfill permit, but the town prohibits the landfilling of waste from outside of the town under Section 97-11(a) of the town code, which reads: "Only solid waste generated and collected within the town of Bethlehem and which are not otherwise prohibited will be accepted any a (sic) solid waste facility within the town."

In the court filing, the town argues that neither Waste Management of Greater Albany nor Waste Management of New York, Inc. has obtained a permit from DEC for use of the landfill for construction and demolition debris.

The town contends that by allowing Metz to continue importing out-of-town waste, Section 97-11(a) will become a meaningless law. "The conduct of the defendants... will impair the ability of the town to exercise its police power in order to protect its environment, and its citizens, and will render moot and meaningless Section 97-11(a) of the town code of the Town of Bethlehem."

At stake is the validity of the town code to prevent not only the import of construction and demolition debris to Metz' landfill, but also whether the law would prevent American Ref-Fuel from moving ahead with plans for a 1500-ton per day waste-to-energy plant on Cabbage Island. The burn plant would import waste from four Capital District counties according to American Ref-Fuel officials.

Entered into evidence in the Metz case is a deposition from Building Inspector John Flanigan giving an account of his visit to the Spawn Hollow Road facility on May 22 and 23.

Flanigan stated that at about 8:30 a.m. on May 22, he visited the site after following two trucks from Waste Management of Amsterdam. He said he approached the two drivers who said their loads came from a Schenectady location.

On May 23, Flanigan went back to the site and approached the driver of another truck. After Flanigan identified himself as the building inspector, the driver refused to disclose the origin of his load saying that information was confidential. The driver suggested that Flanigan contact the Menands office for information.

Typhoid strikes

While Berger expects to return home some time this week, he may not be able to return to work for as many as nine months. Berger's wife, Terri, says it will be some time before doctors know when they will be able to operate on husband again. All the members of the Berger family have been tested for typhoid and await test results from the county Health Department.

Onesquethaw's Spaulding says when he began to show a fever of 103 to 104 degrees in the last week of June he went to his family doctor. At first he was treated with antibiotics but, when that failed to produce positive results, his physician prescribed another antibiotic. But that too was ineffective. Only after Spaulding was sent for tests did the health department suspect the presence of typhoid.

Because typhoid is generally thought to be a disease limited to Third World countries and is relatively rare in the United States, doctors can easily confuse the symptoms with other more common flu-like ailments.

Spaulding says he is still weak from a slight fever and, because of his weakened condition, has been out of work since the first of July.

After he came down with a fever on Friday, July 7, Deschenes says, "I thought I had the flu." After suffering for several days, Deschenes said on Monday he was called by the Albany County Health Department and told to report for tests.

Typhoid is caused by a bacterium known as Salmonella typhosa and is acquired from food or water that has become contaminated with human waste containing the microbes. The most common sources of the bacterium are dairy products and uncooked meats.

Symptoms, which usually include a dull headache, lethargy and sometimes either constipation or diarrhea, generally occur gradually. Fever can reach a peak of 105° and remain there sometimes for weeks.

Because the disease is highly transmissible, Albany County Health Department officials ordered those with symptoms who handled food or worked at child and health care jobs to stay home from work.

New spending draws GOP ire

Airport, civic center projects

By Patricia Dumas

Denouncing "government by crisis," Republican members of the Albany County Legislature are calling for long-term solutions to county problems.

They want legislative committees to meet more often, monitor needs and plan ahead instead of coming up with emergency measures that must be hastily approved.

The Republicans voiced their complaints and suggestions at the legislature's meeting June 10 when they were faced with voting on a $6 million bond issue to clear up a long-standing environmental hazard at the county airport, and on a $553,000 spending increase for the Knickerbocker Arena because officials have decided the arena ice rink should be enlarged to meet Olympic specifications.

After two and a half hours of wrangling between minority party members and their Democrat colleagues, the Democrat-controlled legislature authorized the expenditures.

The $6 million bond issue is needed to finance redesign of the drainage system at the airport so that airplane de-icing fluids won't seep into drinking water in some parts of Colonie.

The ice rink enlargement will make it possible for the arena to be used as home to USA Hockey, the parent organization of the United States Olympic hockey teams.

According to the authorizing resolution, "the location of USA Hockey at the Knickerbocker Arena would bring international recognition and prestige to the Knickerbocker Arena and Albany County, as well as a substantial financial return."

The prestige and financial return were discounted by Republican legislators, who said the resolution also commits Albany County to "appropriating any of the estimated $553,000 cost not available in contingency funds."

The county intends to meet that commitment if necessary, through bonding or by taking money from its general fund. Harold L. Joyce, the legislature's majority leader and head of its civic center committee, made that clear last month when the committee recommended the expenditure.

Bethlehem Republican legislators James C. Ross and Robert W. Hoffmeister and Colonie Republicans Robert G. Prentiss and Kenneth S. MacAffer Jr. pursued the commitment aspect.

Ross said the project is "a footnote on hindsight which has guided the civic center project since its inception."

Hoffmeister reminded the legislators: "We've had maximum gross price and controlled budget. They both mean the same thing, and that is nothing. We can give all the rationale we want for why this has gone from a medium-priced project to an over-priced project but we keep on adding items like tinker toys while there are other things the county government should be doing. It's not just bad planning. It's totally unbelievable action."

Prentiss said the additional funding may jeopardize a six and a half million contribution pledged by the state's Urban Development Corporation but not yet made available for the civic center project. However, the state has since approved the funds, which it had pledged on original civic center projected costs. The state will not up that pledge despite the escalated costs of the center since it was initially proposed.

Prentiss said, "The county's taxpayers can't afford to underwrite this project" and claimed that "the majority party continues to transact the people's business in an arrogant manner."

MacAffer warned that "the vague wording of the resolution itself would warrant a no vote." He said:

"We are building a mausoleum at great expense and if we're short of money, we're just taking it out of the taxpayers' barrel."

With one Republican and two Democrats of the 39-member legislature absent, the arena expenditure was approved on a 24-12 party line vote.

Only one Republican — MacAffer — voted against the bond issue that will finance the airport drainage system. But minority members pointed to the emergency status of the legislation as being another example of "mis-management and government by crisis."

Hoffmeister said chairmen of the legislature's standing committees should regularly schedule monthly meetings with the provision that the meetings could be cancelled if action was not needed. That way, he said, the legislature could keep in touch with developing problems, assess needs, and work toward long-term solutions. He criticized the legislative chairpersons for failing to provide members with advance notice and data on recommended expenditures.

"We should not be faced with a situation of being told: Here's the problem. Thumbs up or thumbs down," Hoffmeister said.

Police nab mailbox thieves

Bethlehem police arrested two Albany men Monday, July 10, in Slingerlands in connection with a rash of mailbox thefts in the area the past two months.

Arrested were James Willie Brown, 30, of 270 North Pearl St. and Matthew P. Davis Jr. of 75B Lark Dr. They were arraigned that afternoon before Town Justice Peter Wenger and the case was to be heard Tuesday night in Bethlehem Town Court.

Police say that at about 3 p.m. that day, two officers patrolling the Slingerlands area saw Brown remove several items from a mailbox on New Scotland Ave. while Davis sat in the driver's seat of a car parked in front. Brown was then seen to enter the car, which drove away.

Stopped less than a block away, both denied any knowledge of the event, according to police. When a small stack of mail was seen lying face up on the back seat, bearing the New Scotland Ave. address, Brown allegedly claimed the mail had fallen out of the box.

Camp services set

Services on Sunday, July 22 through Friday, July 29 at Camp Pinnacle in Voorheesville, will feature former pastor and missionary, Dr. Ed. Morrell as Bible teacher.

Morrell, the founder and Director Emeritus of Committee on Missionary Evangelism, will lead services that will begin with a dinner on July 22, with the theme "Pinnacle Through the Years."

Call 872-1053 for more information and reservations.

Both men were then arrested for criminal possession of stolen property, fifth degree, and the vehicle was searched, police said. Along with seven outgoing letters from the New Scotland Ave. mailbox, police said they found three employee identification cards from an area nursing home, a set of six blank checks from another address, a box of blank checks from another, and two checks missing from another set of 194. Police said all the items had been stolen.

After arraignment before Wenger, Brown was released on his own recognizance while Davis was taken to Albany County Jail in lieu of $7,500 bail.

Bethlehem police said an investigation into other mailbox thefts in the area is continuing.

Need for senior housing

Bethlehem is finally getting in line.

A private developer, working with the Good Samaritan Nursing Home and the town's Senior Citizen Housing Committee has obtained state funding to develop 36 low cost apartments for seniors. That is a matter for congratulations, and some frustration.

Congratulations because the work involved in obtaining state funding for the project is substantial. Frustration because the need is so great.

A series of grants announced recently by the state's Low Income Turnkey/Enhanced Housing Trust Fund to provide affordable housing for senior citizens includes $2.5 million for the Good Samaritan project, being developed with Seiden and Sons, Inc. This is the first grant ever obtained for low income senior housing in Bethlehem.

The Senior Citizen Housing Committee's work on this has been indispensable. The committee has surveyed Bethlehem's seniors to determine need — which is substantial — and has been active on a number of other fronts, including the proposed Eddy-Guardian Society geriatric "campus" on Krumkill Rd. But it's clear that affordable housing is the most pressing concern.

Like many "affluent" suburban towns, Bethlehem finds it has many pockets of need it cannot meet on its own. Surely one of the most pressing is that of the elderly who cannot afford a decent place to live in their own communities.

Government-subsidized housing, despite its "public housing" connotations, is not a burden that should fall only to the cities. All municipalities have an obligation to take care of their own.

Terra incognita, for sure

The aliens from Outer Space who lurk among us must be chuckling within their saucers about the to-do that we Earthlings are making of this twentieth anniversary of mankind's few moments on another planet.

E.T. and his compatriots and successors have been riveted, for their own part, by what's been going on here on terra firma during these two brief decades. They wonder at our ability to assimilate, in stride, the manifold surprises that life is perpetually springing on us. So they watch our TV recollections of the moon shot and the "one one giant step" on which we pride ourselves — but they are really thinking of:

Terrorism, junk bonds, hostile takeovers, crack, AIDS, cable, PCs, VCRs, FAX, gay rights, abortion rights, right-to-life, computerization, asbestos, solid waste, transistors, yuppies.

We either knew nothing, or gave no thought to, any of those large and critical subjects in 1969. We had no idea that Japan was preparing to take over the U.S., that our wonderful telephone system would be fractured into millions of incomprehensible shards, that Nicaragua would emerge as the successor to Viet Nam in imperiling our freedoms, that dentists would be wearing rubber gloves, that people couldn't smoke wherever they damn well please, that plastic would replace greenbacks, that commonplace ideals such as the Flag and the Pledge would be rendered controversial, that the two largest lands would erupt in revolution or evolve in dissolution, that menace would be found in people we grew up knowing as Persians, that centuries-old barriers would begin to crumble in Europe, that where you discarded your bottles and newspapers would become frightening concerns, that Australians, Brits, and others would begin to dominate our media, that Savings & Loans, of all things, could be scandalous.

Out in the open

The optimists forecast local tomatoes next week in those pungent corridors where time stands still, the farmers' markets.

The season is all too short as it is, from late June to mid-autumn, for the part-time gardeners and craftspeople to bring their wares to the variety of occasional locations... an afternoon here, a morning there, a mid-day elsewhere. The proprietors are practical, hardy and hearty folks from nearby and thereabout. Their appetites are good and they know what the rest of us are hungering for, whether food or beauty.

It's still a bit early in the season, but you'll find a wealth of green beans, squash, rhubarb, currants, herbs, cherries and last week the first corn appeared. This is to say nothing of the honey, dressings, the syrup, the brownies, the pies, specialties such as a pear-orange preserve, and every variety of bread. Or the cut flowers, the hanging plants and the begonias everywhere. And the potholders, the knitted ware, the curios that the 5-and-10s used to call "notions," the carved and contrived wooden items, all painstakingly hand-crafted.

The farmers' markets are a grand part of the summer scene, with a special color (and fragrance) that's all their own. As well as, friendliness and a humor that develops after a certain number of seasons of too little rain, too much moisture, too many chewing insects, too many plantings that somehow just didn't work out. But there's faith that it'll all come together next year. And faith in people, even in the most unlikely of us: "Don't have the change? Well, catch us next time."

This unnatural trust is enough to put a city dweller on guard. Something must be wrong here! But the allure brings them back, as it does all of us who hunger for something different, fresher, better.

Faith? Confidence? Fred Tubbs of "The Good Times Store" is already taking orders for fresh-cut blossoms from his garden — delivery next spring.

Academic goals, results are urged

Editor, The Spotlight:

Recent Spotlight articles indicate termination of one Bethlehem elementary teacher and transfer of another was based on subjective evaluation. As a personnel matter the administration invokes a cloak of secrecy. The rumors and the reading between the lines suggest more to this story. Putting that aside can we look more objectively...

The Stanford test scores (grades 3-8) can provide an insight into the academic growth from class to class and school to school. It would be interesting to have the administration make available the past test scores in reading and math showing academic classroom growth for the two teachers and compare this growth to other similar classes in Bethlehem.

What is the percentage of students that should repeat a grade under these teachers, compared to other classes? Would a more objective evaluation make any difference in the evaluation of these teachers?

Interestingly, the December 1988 comprehensive assessment report by the Bethlehem school administration to the school board did not include, as in other years, SAT scores, Stanford test results, or achievement test results.

Will academic student growth in our schools ever again be of the same concern to the community and parents as busing, seat belts, and overcrowding?

The school administration should establish academic goals and objectives and then provide a measure as to whether such goals are being met.

'The Big Train' comes to town

Probably you've noticed, among the endless recountings of the travail of Pete Rose, that on one recent occasion he detoured between games from the Midwest to Atlantic City and back.

The purpose was to present his right hand at one of those semi-freak shows in Trumpland where baseball trading cards are bought and sold. A sideline has developed among high-priced athletes to sell their signatures (on almost anything except negotiable paper) for whatever the going rate may bring — say, 10 or 15 bucks.

Pete Rose was there among the casinos to sell his signature for $15 to anyone in search of a curio or a thrill. It's a bit more expensive, this strange syndrome, than visiting the fat lady's tent or the sword swallower's, but the value per dollar is roughly comparable.

The New York Times saw fit, a couple of weeks ago, to publish a mother's complaint about her small son's experience in seeking out a Mets rookie, Gregg Jefferies, at one of these events. Jefferies was his hero, and he hoped for the honor of maybe shaking the great man's hand. But, the mother complained, Jefferies was so preoccupied in signing slips of paper that he never even looked up when the kid's turn in line came up. The lad came away clutching his autographed chit but with a miserable feeling of disillusionment, not to say disappointment.

So much for the practice of merchandising athletes' penmanship. In this boy's case, he could have gone to a couple of games to witness his hero in action, for the $10 that his little lesson cost him. In the case of Pete Rose's autograph, its purchasers may at least be able to compare it with his signature on one of his affidavits to the effect that, whatever it was, he never done it.

What he brought was irresistible to a young baseball fan

At this point, let me recall a decades-old experience of my own that's still fresh in my memory — one that contrasts nicely with such practices.

One of the greatest pitchers of all time, Walter Perry Johnson, had retired from active play and was now the manager of his old team, the Washington Senators. He was a big man, a rawboned Kansan whose person always seemed at least a cut above usual standards for attitude and deportment.

It was a November day, not long after a very youthful birthday of mine, so I was relatively flush. Word had gone out that the great Walter Johnson was to be in my home city. The purpose was to introduce something new — "Walter Johnson's Baseball Game."

Nothing could have kept me from Rosenbaum's toy store that day, nor did it. For some ridiculous amount, like $2, I bought the game, contained within a colorful green and orange cardboard box that had, on the lid, a large photo of "The Big Train" in his pitching motion. Then came the big opportunity.

Walter Johnson, in neat business suit, was perched on the edge of a display table. Gravely, he took out a large, old-fashioned fountain pen and signed his name across his picture. Gravely, he put the pen away and took my paw. We shook hands. I was too dumbfounded to think of anything to say or ask, but he offered a smile and a few words. There wasn't much demand for the game; things were quiet, and I hung around for as long as I could, close to the awesome presence.

I'd read that before the Washington Senators' opening games, with the president on hand, the team's immortal star always got to shake hands at the presidential box. Now I had shaken the hand of a man who shook the hand of Presidents! I wasn't ever going to wash my right hand, and for several days didn't.

Walter Johnson's Baseball Game consisted mostly of a small top that you spun to produce alleged action — strikes, fly balls, homers, etc. There were counters to move around the bases when the imaginary players were engaged in theoretical activity. It wasn't much fun, but I kept it around for many years, and I guess it finally wore out and fell apart. I got my two dollars' worth, and a lot more.

CBS, science/medicine; Phil Jones, CBS, general assignment; Charles Kuralt, CBS, specialty; David Brinkley, ABC, "best all-around." No one received a majority in the categories of defense and economics/ business.

CBS was the top winner, with six who placed, even without Rather; ABC had four, including Brinkley in what sounds sort of like a consolation gold watch (this was a first-time award for the category). NBC had only a pair, counting Brokaw's tie.

Now, as to what puzzled me about the anchor vote. Note that there were nine "judges." The rules stated that to be the winner a newperson "required a majority voting." (This apparently worked out in the case of defense and economics, as noted).

TV Guide's report, however, said that the Brokaw-Jennings tie was over Rather "by a half-vote." A majority of nine is five. Granted that one or more judges would be entitled to split their ballot — there's still no earthly way that I can see in which Brokaw and Jennings could tie (with a majority!), much less do so only a half-vote ahead of Rather. It doesn't seem to fit, and so to my mind there's a bit of a question of credibility in the magazine's report. If anyone can figure this out, I'd like to hear how!

(Dan Rather, by the way, would have had my vote. I have little quarrel with the rest of the winners, though I know nothing about John McWethy, ABC's diplomatic specialist. And I'd vote twice for Kuralt and Brinkley.)

Note that only performers on the network evening news were rated; the morning shows were not included, much less the late-evening news, such as it is. (So how does David Brinkley, with his Sunday program, get rated here?)

As for the identity of the judges, you wouldn't recognize any of them (professors, local stations' personnel, a cartoonist!) except for Linda Ellerbee, the coffee vendor.

That same issue has a short piece by Isaac Asimov, on the not-to-be-taken-too-seriously subject of "If They Turned Me Loose on the Moon." He would "play the tourist," see the sights, hoping to see "things one can only see from the moon" and "the rarest and most beautiful sights the moon affords." Forget the moon's surface — the astronauts have seen everything there is to observe. "We must turn to the sky, then," which is in many ways identical to Earth's. Except that the moon itself is missing, replaced by Earth.

We would appear about four times as wide (from the moon) as the moon appears to us on Earth. And Earth shines about 70 times as brightly on the moon as the moon does on Earth. Dr. Asimov wants to be on the moon during a

Just another misconception

Mr. Ross is a member of the Albany County Legislature. His home is in Elsmere.

By James C. Ross

"RESOLVE, that the Albany County Legislature authorizes the expansion of the ice rink at the Knickerbocker Arena to Olympic dimensions and commits to appropriating any of the estimated $553,000.00 cost not available in contingency funds."

Point of View

These five words — not available in contingency funds — in the resolution approved by the Albany County Legislature this month will have a profound effect on the future funding of the Albany County civic center. Simply stated, by approving this resolution, the Legislature has signed a blank check.

Although the significance of this resolution was not revealed to the Legislature, its impact will become quite apparent in the months and years ahead. We don't, however, have to wait to see what will be done by Mr. Coyne and company to finesse the financing of the civic center. Past practices enable us to identify the major fiscal components that will be either avoided or employed to create another misconception.

CONSTRUCTION BUDGET: The construction budget will be abandoned to avoid a third failure. The first budget ploy promised a Guarantee Maximum Price. This was scuttled when the initial $35 million bond was not sufficient because of substantial cost overruns. The second ruse was to adopt a Controlled Budget as the basis for authorizing an additional bond of $16.4 million dollars. In less than a year the Control Budget is out of control. Now another means of financing must be found.

If you hear about a cash flow problem in the county, the check has bounced

BONDS: A third bond to finance future construction will not be considered. To do so would be embarrassing to the Democrats. The Democratic majority would also not be able to muster enough votes to meet the required two-thirds margin required by the county charter for bonding resolutions. They would lose two votes from suburban Democrats who will not forget that one of their former colleagues was defeated due to his vote in support of the second civic center bonding resolution.

Last and most important, Albany County has run out of revenue sources to pay the principal and interest on another civic center bond. Payment of the first bond is to be financed through a 30-year triple tax: a base tax, a bed tax, and a head tax. The base tax will be the annual county appropriation of $1.5 million to pay debt service and $150,000 to provide parking for state employees who lost parking when the county acquired the civic center site. The bed tax is the extra two percent levy on room rentals. The head tax is the one dollar to be added to the ticket price. Collectively, these three 30-year taxes exceed $109 million for debt service on the first bond resolution.

The second bond, approved less than a year ago, will be financed through rental income from commercial space and corporate suites. Add another $37 million in debt service for the second bond resolution. Since these two bonds soak up almost $150 million dollars, it will be difficult indeed to find new revenues to finance a third bond. When we add construction costs of more than $70 million, we are approaching a total cost of a quarter of a billion dollars.

UDC: The New York State Urban Development Corporation has called it quits in Albany County. Two days after the County Legislature passed its blank check resolution, the UDC agreed to pay its $6.5 million share of the civic center construction cost. This timing is not coincidental; it's clearly cause and effect. Albany County breaks the second budget agreement in order to build an Olympic size ice rink. With all hope lost for fiscal constraints, UDC is resigned to the inevitable. It, therefore, pays its bill and leaves the county to its own devices.

COUNTY BUDGET: The Albany County budget now becomes the final funding source, the subterfuge of last resort. Since we have taken over $6 million from this source to date, it will be used to draw additional funds through annual appropriations to enable construction to continue as costs escalate each year.

Next we will be told Albany County has a cash flow problem. When you hear this explanation you will know that the blank check, signed this month has bounced.

lunar eclipse for a rare sight: "a circle of red-orange light all around Earth — a sunset everywhere."

Nat's baseball column good for extra bases

Editor, The Spotlight:

I have received a copy of Nat Boynton's June 14 column on baseball titled "The Watertown Story."

It certainly captured the flavor of the Watertown Indians' eight-month long battle. Our season has been going great guns. In our tenth game, we exceeded the attendance that the former ownership had drawn for the entire 1988 season.

We are second only to Pittsfield in attendance in the league.

Residents are real victims

Editor, The Spotlight:

Your June 28 issue included a letter from Hugh Roberts, president of Roberts Real Estate, complaining about "damaging public accusations" made by Orchard Park residents.

I would like to point out that the charges that have been levied in this case were not made by Orchard Park residents. Rather, these charges have been filed by the State of New York Department of State which acted on complaints filed by residents in the Orchard Park area. The Department of State, which is responsible for issuing realtors' licenses and monitoring their actions, conducted an investigation of the marketing of homes in this area.

As a result of that investigation, the Department of State charged Roberts Real Estate agents and management with failing to disclose information regarding contaminated wells in the development and mismanagement.

Mr. Roberts and his firm complain of being made "victims." I believe the real victims are the men, women and children whose health and safety are in question and whose life savings are at risk.

Apprise: To give notice to; tell, inform. Note that it's very distinct from "appraise," (to evaluate), with which it sometimes is confused, especially in speech.

Constraint: The state of being checked, restricted, or compelled to avoid (or perform) some action. Also, the constraining agency, condition, or force. Or, a repression of one's own feelings or behavior.

Town board debates moratorium proposal

By Mark Stuart

The Bethlehem Town Board last Wednesday tabled a proposal for an 18-month townwide development moratorium from Councilman Sue Ann Ritchko.

The board discussed the proposal at length bringing up several issues including the rate of new building permits in the town and the possibility of zoning unzoned areas in South Bethlehem and Selkirk.

Building Inspector John Flanagan presented figures to the board showing that as of June, there has been only a slight increase (five units) for new building permits of single family homes this year compared to last year.

Town Supervisor J. Robert Hendrick said he was concerned about such a moratorium, both in terms of its length and the revenue that the town could stand to lose over the 18-month period.

Ritchko said after the meeting she was pleased that her proposal initiated some discussion by the board, particularly while the Land Use Management Advisory Committee is involved in the master plan process. "It's something we have to face," she said, "I'm glad that there has been at least some sort of dialogue on a moratorium, it's a beginning and that's important."

Ritchko's proposal would limit residential subdivisions over five lots and commercial development of over 7,260 square feet.

The Planning Board recently tabled a proposal from Planning Board Chairman Kenneth Ringler calling for a 12-month moratorium on all residential subdivisions of 25 lots or larger. Both proposals are designed to afford time to the town's Land Use Management Assessment Committee during the master plan development process.

No one spoke for or against a proposed water extension at Wildwood Lane at a public hearing.

The board set a fee of $75 per copy for the Town of Bethlehem Code Book, the recently completed compilation of all town ordinances. Copies of the town code will be donated to the Bethlehem Library next week at no cost, according to Bethlehem Town Clerk Carolyn Lyons.

A bid was awarded to Envirex, Inc. of Waukesha, Wis., for replacements parts for a sludge air flotation thickener for the town's Cedar Hill Waste Water Treatment Plant. Envirex' bid was $7,675.

The board approved Democratic and Republican election inspectors and poll clerks for this November.

The next regular meeting of the town board will be July 26 at 7:30 p.m. in the Bethlehem Town Hall.

There will be a special meeting of the town board July 19 at 7:30 p.m. in the town hall for a public hearing on the proposed Rt. 9W Corridor Overlay Zoning law.

waste authority stalled in the state Senate Rules Committee before the legislature adjourned in early July. The bill did, however, pass through the Assembly rather quickly.

The ANSWERS Solid Waste Authority bill proposes the formation of an authority consisting of representatives from the current 14 ANSWERS participants. Under the bill, once approved the municipipalities have until March 31 of the following calendar year to decide whether they want in or not. Considering the recent budget battles of the legislature, a vote on the authority may not come until after budget negotiations, pushing approval past March 31, 1990. Under the state's Solid Waste Management Act of 1988, municipalities must have a solid waste management program in place by 1992.

If approved, the ANSWERS authority would eliminate a large portion of the anticipated solid waste market for American Ref-Fuel's plant.

Meanwhile, American Ref-Fuel has been busily local officials and businessmen from around the Capital District to their Hempstead, Long Island facility.

Bethlehem Councilman Sue Ann Ritchko travelled to the plant on July 10. She said later that she was not convinced that what she was shown indicated that the plants were safe. "I am still not sure that they have addressed all of the long-term health issues," she said.

Ritchko, who is a candidate for town supervisor in the September Republican primary, said that when she asked to see where the ash from the plant was transferred to the trucks, she was not allowed near the area because of construction. She said that she also noticed tires in the holding bin where refuse for burning is stored. Tires are required to be separated. When Ritchko asked for figures on the plant's emissions, she said was handed a book on state and federal limits on emissions.

Ritchko asked what would happen if Niagara Mohawk did not purchase the power and was told that the cost would be passed on the municipalities through tipping fees. The tipping fees for the Bethlehem plant are expected to be between $60 and $70 a ton with a power sale agreement. The Hempstead plant gets around $30 a ton.

LUMAC meetings set

Five community meetings of the Town of Bethlehem's Land Use Management Advisory Committee have been announced for the months of July and August by Town Planner Jeff Lipnicky.

All meetings will begin at 7:30 p.m. The five meetings will be held:

Monday, July 17 at the Slingerlands Elementary School.

Meeting scheduled

Sue Ann Speaks Out. Don't Burn It! Reduce & Recycle

To emphasize my stand on important environmental issues in my campaign for Town Supervisor, I am printing literature on recycled paper whenever possible.

Yes, it costs more than virgin paper but the ecological, environmental and societal benefits of recycled paper make it a bargain by comparison.

Every resident of our community must be made aware of the solid waste crisis we are facing and how they can help. One of the solutions to this problem, I believe, is to reduce the amount of waste that we, as individuals, generate. For example, we can take fewer plastic bags for our vegetables at the food market. Leave grass clippings on the lawn. Replace styrofoam cups with reusable containers.

What we cannot eliminate from our waste stream should be recycled. I support the expansion of the current newspaper recycling program to also include glass, plastic and metals.

In order to complete the "cycle" of recycling, we must also utilize recycled products as much as possible. If elected Supervisor, I will advocate that Town Hall take the lead by purchasing recycled paper as well as recycling paper after its use.

The Bethlehem Solid Waste Task Force, comprised of community volunteers, will present a recycling plan to the Town Board on for Supervisor

July 26. Led by Town Councilman, Dennis Corrigan, this dedicated group spends countless hours addressing our solid waste problem.

This is another example of how the citizens of Bethlehem can be our greatest resource. When given the chance, they have the skills and energy to help tackle even the toughest issues facing our future.

I propose that this Task Force be appointed by the Town Board as a Standing Committee so they can continue to help in an official advisory capacity.

Reducing and recycling is a healthy and ecologically sound solution to our solid waste problem.

However, if we do not have strong leadership on this issue, Bethlehem may be forced to be the site of a regional burn plant. As Supervisor, I will lead the fight for what is environmentally sound for the generations that follow, and not simply look at cost factors. Public health and safety must be our number one concern. We must "think globally and act locally!"

Town wins point in Slingerlands tree case

By Mark Stuart

A state Supreme Court judge has issued a preliminary injunction against AFV Enterprises to prevent the further removal of trees from the lands of Anthony Pizzitola in Slingerlands.

The injunction was requested by Bethlehem Planning Board Chairman Kenneth Ringler and Bethlehem Building Inspector John Flanigan and comes in the wake of a April 29 incident when approximately 15 to 20 trees were cut down in violation of State Environmental Quality Review Act (SEQRA) law.

In the court summary dated July 6, Supreme Court Justice William F. McDermott said, "It appears that (the) defendants were willing to ignore provisions of (SEQRA)."

Under SEQRA law, the removal of vegetation is prohibited if an application is under review for environmental impact. If there was no application before the planning board, the trees could have been removed by the landowner without town intervention.

AFV Enterprises argued that SEQRA does not apply and that the removal was an emergency action authorized by SEQRA.

In the court finding, the court said "AFV's argument that there is no application misconstrues the nature of the process. An applicant subject to SEQRA is defined as one who makes 'application or other request' to a local board for approval which is any discretionary decision to issue a permit or authorize a project. An applicant cannot avoid the purpose of SEQRA simply by failing to file a formal application."

The court found that AFV Enterprises failed to provide sufficient evidence that removing the trees was an emergency action exempt from the SEQRA process: "An emergency action is one which is immediately necessary to protect life, health, property or natural resources and should be designed to cause the least change possible. AFV has presented no evidence of an immediate risk to persons or property. No proof has been provided concerning a tree allegedly on the property falling on adjacent property nor has AFV demonstrated the diseased or dead condition of any tree. The court is not persuaded of the existence of an emergency."

Also named as defendants in the action were Frederick Biernacki and Sons, Inc., and Frederick Biernacki. Biernacki's firm was the firm that Pizzitola contracted to remove the trees on April 29.

In November 1988, plans were presented to the Bethlehem Planning Board to construct a commercial building, including a post office, on land at the intersection of Kenwood Avenue and New Scotland Road in Slingerlands owned by Pizzitola, one of the principals in AFV Enterprises. The planning board requested that an analysis of traffic and existing vegetation be made. The study was forwarded to the board at a regular meeting in March. According to court records, "other materials were requested and forwarded to the board in the interim" between March and April.

In addition to traffic and vegetation studies, the board expressed concern over the proximity of the new building to the Slingerland family cemetery and the effect of construction equipment used near the site.

The April 29 incident evoked similar neighborhood response to the demolition of the former Charlie Sanders' Victorian home by Pizzitola.

Cooperstown trip set

The Travel Committee of the Women's Council of the Albany Institute of History and Art is sponsoring a day trip to "Celebrate History in Cooperstown" on Monday July 31. In the morning the tour will visit the National Baseball Hall of Fame whose seven million dollar addition opened on June 12 in honor of its 50th anniversary.

Buffet lunch is at the Otesaga Hotel. In the afternoon visit the Farmers' Museum, a living historical farm with craft demonstrations and colorful exhibits. Round off the day with a visit to Fenmore House, the home of James Fenmore Cooper.

Driving course slated

The E and E Defensive Driving Associates, a public training agency of the National Safety Council, will hold a defensive driving course on Saturday, July 22, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The course will be held at the Women's HealthCare Plus, 2093 Western Ave., Guelderland, and will entitle students to a four point reduction from their license and a 10 percent reduction on automobile collision and liability insurance premiums for three years.

To register, call 459-9048.

Senior housing progress cited

The Bethlehem Senior Housing Committee presented its interim report to the town board recently outlining its activities and priorities for this year.

The group is continuing its efforts to provide housing options for the elderly and the disabled so they can remain as members of the community.

So far the committee has held discussions with several developers or "packagers" who have worked on moderate income senior housing. "Based upon this information, several developers have expressed interest in pursuing a project in the town," the report said. These types of projects would require federal or state funding, which is already in demand from other communities. Land acquisition is also a potential obstacle since it must be obtained at a reasonable cost and be located near service areas.

The committee said it contacted several not-for-profit organizations who might be able to provide a suitable site. The hope is that the public will become more aware of the need for more building sites.

One of the groups priorities this year has been to assist non-profit groups with projects. The committee report said it has achieved its goal in that there is now a proposal by the Eddy/Guardian Society for a geriatric campus for the town.

The committee also helped plan the Beverwyck campus proposal for North Bethlehem and has given guidance and support to Seiden and Sons Inc. and Good Samaritan Nursing Home Inc. in procuring a $2.5 million grant for a two-story independent living complex in Elsmere.

A draft on a long-range plan for the Senior Services Department is expected to be reviewed by the committee later this month.

In addition, the committee helped to form the Bethlehem Senior Projects, Inc., a non-profit corporation that is eligible to receive funds to benefit senior programs in the town. One of the primary goals of the project is to seek corporate and private funds to purchase a second handicapped accessible vehicle for transportation of the elderly.

Two new members have joined the committee. Charles Tobin III and Eric Yaffe have agreed to serve. Tobin is an attorney with the law firm of Tobin and Dempf. Yaffe is an architect with the firm of Einhorn Yaffe and Prescott.

Engine 4068 to ride the rails again

Nestled on a flat plain stretching between the Hudson River and the glacial ridge where the Albany Rural Cemetery and Loudonville lie, the skeletal remains of a once great railroad still stand as a reminder of the important transportation system of the 19th and early 20th century.

A fine line divides the City of Watervliet from these railway yards that span the length of the city. When you cross the city line of Watervliet you are in the Town of Colonie and here the Delaware and Hudson had its yards and repair service buildings for the vast system that stretched from the coal fields of Pennsylvania to Montreal. The Colonie shops were built before 1905 and only a small part of them are in use at this time. Once several hundred men labored here round the clock to maintain the engines and cars of the Delaware and Hudson Railroad. Today it is the only place in the area where a railway aficionado could place an engine or a railway car to repair or restore it, and that is just what is being done by a local group of railway buffs including a Town of Bethlehem police lieutenant.

Times Remembered

Allison Bennett

Richard Vanderbilt and his partner, Mike Fox of California, bought a New York Central diesel locomotive and are restoring it in these shops. They rent the space from the railroad, and the building is a huge and shadowy place with a roof that leaks as much rain inside as outside during a storm. Cold in winter and hot in summer, dirty and blackened with the soot and oil of countless engines, one has to love this work to stick with it at all.

Five other men are also working on the venture: Rob Mangles of Troy, Mike Kohler of Long Island, Dave Francis of Pennsylvania and Harold Crouch, a retired New York Central mechanical engineer from Newark, N.J., as well as one other local fan, Tim Truscott of Albany. These men give many hours each week to the project and the out of town men come on weekends and vacations to work on the restoration. The men say their hobby of fixing up the old engine is similar to that of people who work on old houses — it's a restoration project.

One might wonder just how anyone obtains engines or railway cars to restore. Of course, there are many railroad fan clubs around the nation, as well as the Railroad Historical Society, and through those channels it is possible to find out what is for sale. Vanderbilt and his partner found their diesel locomotive at the New Jersey Department of Transportation in Raritan, where it was stored at the railroad yard. It was brought to Colonie by Conrail — hauled dead on its wheels.

However, this is not just any diesel engine, but a special one, #4068, built by General Motors at LaGrange, Ill., in 1953. It has special significance because it is the last engine that pulled in to the Union Station in Albany before it was shut down, never to function as a railway terminus again. That is partly why the men wanted to have this engine.

Seeing it sitting over the pit now, a skeleton of its once powerful self, it takes a big dream to envision it as it will look in another year when it has been repainted, refitted and put in tip-top operating condition to run the rails again. The original coat of paint was pretty well gone when the men acquired the engine. To remove what was left, it was necessary to use an air tool to get rid of some of the paint and rust. It was also sand blasted and piles of sand are on the floor around the engine. With the body stripped down it will need filling, welding and a new coat of paint. The engine has now been sanded and primed. The huge side panels of the locomotive have been removed because they were beyond saving. New panels of 1/8-inch steel plate, fiberglass, or plywood-metal material will be put on as one of the last steps in the restoration. All of the glass must be replaced because it was smashed when the engine stood in mothballs in the New Jersey yard. The seats for the engineer and fireman and the doorways must also be replaced.

The average person, who looks at a locomotive, sees only the smooth side panels, not the working body of the train beneath those panels. With the sides removed, it is easy to see the engine's crankcase and the many valves and doors that hold the mighty engines and the electrical system that helps to power the train. Housed within the engine body are two 12-cylinder General Motors diesel engines. One failed the other could still operate and keep the train moving. A complicated electrical system is also housed within the engine framework. The fireman can walk completely around the engine between the panels and the diesels while the train is in motion and check out the system en route. Of course, it is a very noisy place and not the most comfortable to be in when the swift rolling wheels of the train are turning at about 90 miles an hour.

When the grimy and exhausting work is done, the men have grand plans for the behemoth they are working on. They hope to run a main line excursion service on a regularly operating railroad. These excursions will not just be day trips, but excursions of 50 to 200 miles or even as much as 800 or 900 miles. Of course, they will have to hire train crewmen from the railroads to operate the train. These men have only their restored engine, so they will work with other rail fans who own their own restored railway passenger cars. There are over 50 original New York Central cars located east of the Mississippi, some operable, some being restored. They would coordinate with the owners of these cars to recreate an authentic New York Central train. Many of these cars ran on the 20th Century limited and included dining, sleeping, and pullman cars. On a lengthy excursion, there would need to be retired porters, dining car staff and others recruited to serve the passengers.

Vanderbilt and his friends cannot say exactly how they got bitten by the railroad bug, but they all admit when it hit them they began by starting out green repairing and tinkering with passenger rail cars and then progressed to locomotives. It was a self-taught skill, with the assistance of some railroad men who gave what advice they could. They would be happy to have anyone don overalls and come up to the Colonie Diesel Shop and help on this project. These men are helping to preserve parts of the railway history of the country. The steam locomotive was the first great engine and served for years as the archetype — many people believe that it would go on forever. However, the diesel took over and put the steam locomotive out of business. Now electricity is threatening the diesel, which in itself is on borrowed time as the electrical engine is moving forward. This group of men are doing a lot of backbreaking work to insure that some vestige of the diesel era will still be around for their children to visualize.

Drivers surveyed on traffic measures

Officials at the state Department of Motor Vehicles recently surveyed 1,000 drivers by telephone to determine levels of support for the seat belt law, 21-year-old alcohol purchase age, drunk driving laws, the 55 m.p.h. speed limit and other measures. The key findings were:

Almost all (98 percent) of the drivers surveyed feel that drinking and driving was the most serious traffic safety problem. Speeding is regarded as the second most serious problem by 76 percent of the respondents.

A majority (56 percent) believe that the 21-year-old purchase age is effective in reducing alcohol-related deaths and injuries. In addition, 54 percent say tougher penalties would be the best deterrent to drinking and driving.

A majority (60 percent) believe that New York's 55 m.p.h. speed limit should not be increased.

For students, 88 percent of the drivers surveyed support buckling up in school buses, up from 80 percent in 1986.

While 73 percent favor a bicycle helmet law for children and 60 percent support a similar law for adults, only 11 percent of the bicyclists in the group surveyed wear helmets.

Guinn realizes dream

Last year, on the off-season, Guinn returned to North Carolina State to become an assistant coach in the university's soccer program. This year he has taken a full-time "day job" during the season at the Schenectady Boys Club situated in the Hamilton Hill area of that city. During the week he spends his days working with kids at the Boys Club's summer camp on top of the mountain in Altamont. This schedule allows him to make the team's three evening practices each week at Nott Road in Guilderland and play league games on the weekend.

But with being married, holding down a full-time day job, having to travel on many weekends with the team, working clinics sponsored by the team and making public appearances, Guinn says the hardest part about being a professional soccer player is "fitting it into everything else in your life."

For most people in the workforce, as they approach the top of their career ladders, the amount of security or at least stability in their lives usually increases. Guinn says such is not the case in soccer. Uncertainty can rule so hard at times that many players are forced to live defensively in the present. "It's never really guaranteed when you're doing things like that; it's week-to-week. That's really the way the life is for almost everybody I know in the league."

"It's funny because you get used to it," Guinn adds. "You talk to players about what they're going to do and they say, 'It's four weeks away, why should I worry about it now?' The fact that there have been five or six leagues in the past six or seven years in the U.S. doesn't help matters, last year's Capitals MVP says.

Guinn has developed a philosophical attitude toward life that takes uncertainty as a starting point. This attitude, he says, emerged early on.

For example, he recalls when he was first noticed by national staff coaches. At that time he imagined playing before large crowds in the NASL, but by the end of his first year of college, the NASL had folded. Instead he found himself playing professional soccer before a less than enthusiastic crowd of 500 at Blecker Stadium. He describes this as "a little disappointing but it wasn't a shock. It's just a little disappointing to think that's where you're headed and then, when you get to that level, it's not there any more."

And despite how high and fast a player might move up in professional soccer, the backfielder says the drop down is quicker. "I don't have any misconceptions about where I'm at," he says. "It's a long fall and players fall quickly. Once a player reaches the end of the road, they fall a lot more quickly than even their rise to the top. A lot of players are in the first division one year and playing just nothing two years later."

While one of Guinn's goals remains playing for the National team in World Cup competition. "It's really not up to me. I'm playing as hard as I can. They just call you. If it happens, it happens. If it doesn't, it's not because I haven't tried."

Because Guinn feels at home in the university, he says part of his future plans also includes coaching soccer on the college level. He sees the quality of college soccer improving each year. Therefore the ASL all-star is optimistic about the United States' chances in international competition improving with each year.

Guinn points out that the under-21 U. S. youth team beat England this past year, that the under-19 U. S. team beat East Germany and that before being defeated by Australia, the under-16 U. S. team beat Brazil, no small accomplishments. The same under-19 U. S. team placed fourth in the Youth World Cup.

But Guinn is quick to respond to remarks that the United States still lags far behind European countries in soccer abilities. "For now, it's as good as it's going to get. You can't rise above yourself that far."

Despite the wisdom of that axiom, it appears the Guinn has a hard time accepting its implied limitations. As he sprints across the field at Blecker trying to protect the Capitals goalie from a New Jersey team last Saturday night, Guinn seems to be vying with himself to rise above his present abilities at each moment, mediocrity the worst sin of all for the Delmar native.

Guinn's stamina has enabled him to maintain such a standard. During his high school play at Bethlehem Central, he missed only a single game; at North Carolina State he also missed only one game and for the past two years with the Capitals, he missed a game just once, that for three yellow cards in 20 games, a league rule that catches up to nearly every backfielder.

With less than a month to go in the 1989 ASL season, Jeff Guinn says he plans to be back with Albany next year. Asked if he feels settled, he makes mention of the still unpacked boxes at his Guilderland digs, then asks his wife, "Are we settled yet, honey?" A moment later Guinn responds,

"Yes, we're settled."

For Jeff Guinn this is an accomplishment of no small account. This will be the first time in the last seven years that he'll have lived in the same place for an entire year. He says it already feels good.

And as far as playing soccer for a living goes, Guinn sums it up: "Making $7,000, or $8,000, for playing soccer is really not that bad, particularly when you think of how many people are doing work they really don't like to do."

Furhman elected president of RCS board

The Ravena-Coeymans-Selkirk Board of Education elected Wayne Furhman as its president and Dr. Maurice Satin as vice president at its organizational meeting last week.

Other appointments made by the board were Rodger Lewis, district clerk; Nancy Caswell, district treasurer; Rose Stalker, district tax collector; Frank Stolz, insurance adviser; Elizabeth Constanza, central treasurer; Ira LeFevre, school physician; and the firm of Stulmaker, Roach, Dorfman & Co., district auditing firm.

The board also decided to keep the official meeting dates as the first and third Mondays of each month, changing the starting time to 7:30 p.m. from 8 p.m. Some of the members also suggested setting an ending time for the meetings, but the idea was dismissed after the reminder that motions to adjourn could be made anytime.

It was announced that applicants are being sought for appointment to the board to fill the position left vacant by Konrad Raup who recently resigned.

Satin made a motion to drop the opening prayer from the meeting agenda, as he felt it was a violation of a U.S. Supreme Court Case which ruled that opening prayers cannot be used in a classroom. He suggested changing the prayer to a moment of silence, but his motion was not seconded.

In other business, the board:

- Received the resignation of Thomas Tucker, senior high teacher and Josephine Weisheit, cafeteria worker.

- Appointed Ronnie Mitchell to a one-year term as a third grade teacher, taking a one-year absence from her current position as a music teacher.

- Granted a probationary position as a full-time speech teacher to Marcia Dynko, currently a part time teacher.

- Approved a 10 cent increase in the cost of lunches. This, the first increase in two years, will raise the prices to $1 for kindergarten-fifth grade, and $1.10 for grades 6-12.

- Entered a contract with the After School Activities Program. The program will start at 7:30 a.m. and remain open after school until 5:30 p.m. It will also operate on superintendent conference days and staff development days.

- Learned the school calendar includes 184 days of instruction. Superintendent conference days will be Nov. 7 for all students, Nov. 1 and June 20 for kindergarten-grade 5, and Jan. 29 and April 27 for the senior high.

The next meeting of the board will be Aug. 7.

Rowboat taken

Bethlehem police are investigating the theft of a 12-foot metal rowboat from a Delmar residence sometime between June 29 and July 3. The boat, which carried a motor hookup in the back, was valued at $500.

Teacher contract gets kudos from both sides

By Renee Hunter

Ravena-Coeymans-Selkirk teachers have a new contract after only nine weeks of negotiations, compared to the 18 months it took to agree on the last contract.

According to Superintendent William Schwartz, the key to the shorter negotiating period for the new three-year contract was the elimination of the "middlemen." This time a group of teachers and administrators did the talking, rather than the usual district-hired attorney and representative of the New York State United Teachers.

"We found we wanted to go face-to-face," said Schwartz. "Any time you can meet face-to-face and iron out problems, you'll be successful. Open and honest communication is the key."

Gerald VanAlstine, head negotiator for the teachers, said the teachers are very satisfied with the contract. "The numbers speak for themselves," he said. The teachers voted to ratify the contract 131-4 and the board of education approved it 7-0 at a recent meeting.

The contract calls for salary increases of 8 per cent yearly for the next three years. There are also provisions allowing the teachers more opportunity to be involved in decision-making processes and to provide a more professional environment.

New Scotland to start on revaluation

By Bob Hagyard

Revaluing all properties in the Town of New Scotland may go out to bid two weeks from today.

Representatives of two firms who specialize in reassessing property for towns and cities — Finnegan Associates of Newburgh and CLT Associates of Albany — outlined the costs, pitfalls and long-term benefits to town officials last week.

For a town New Scotland's size, the cost will be steep. Finnegan would want about $155,000. CLT, offering a different package, estimates the job at roughly $168,000 — about 20 percent of a typical annual town budget in either case, though roughly one-sixth of that is reimbursable through the state Division of Equalization and Assessment. Viewed another way: The town had 3,538 parcels of land at last count, according to Assessor William Bailey, so the town is talking pretty close to $50 per parcel. "About $35 of that is data collection," said Bruce Nagel of CLT. "Other towns may pay $60 to $70 where there is no activity in neighboring jurisdictions.

"In any case, it isn't going to be cheaper later," Nagel went on. "And there's always the threat of doing it under more hurried circumstances."

And what would New Scotland gain? Equitable assessments, mainly. In towns that have not reassessed lately, "anyone who has bought a home in the past 10, 11 years feels taken," said Nagel. "And now with the 'welcome, stranger' court decisions, they just may go to court."

Finally, Nagel said, "it is the law." The state, he added, "says you must have a real property inventory in place by 1990. It's illogical, if you have the inventory, not to use it" to maintain a full-value assessment roll.

All five Town Board members — Supervisor Herbert Reilly and Councilmen H. Allyn Moak, Wyman Osterhout, John Sgarlata and Craig Shufelt — appear to support reassessment in principle.

Right now, only one Albany County township, Guiderland, assesses property at full value. Guiderland was sued over a decade ago by 28 property owners who alleged the previous system discriminated against newcomers. In 1978 a State Supreme Court order forced full-value assessment.

Then, shortly after the "welcome, stranger" decisions early this year, three of the hilltowns — Berne, Knox and Westerlo — hired CLT to revalue all properties in time for the 1990-91 assessment rolls.

At present, Equalization and Assessment reimburses municipalities $8 per reassessed parcel. Chances that that funding will be available in 1990 and 1991 are "pretty good," Nagel told the town board. "But don't spend it."

The board's next regular meeting is set for 8 p.m., Wednesday, Aug. 2.

Library board organizes

By Lyn Stapf

The Board of Trustees of the Voorheesville Public Library recently held its 1989-90 fiscal year organizational meeting.

Newly elected trustee Diane Connolly was sworn in by her husband Judge Kenneth Connolly who serves as both town and village justice.

As part of the reorganization process, new board officers were also elected. They include: Sally Ten Eyck, president; J. Fredericks Volkwein, vice president; Gail Sacco, clerk and Rose Symula, treasurer.

The board also discussed the upcoming fall dedication and the 75th anniversary of the library, which will be in January of 1990. Board members Jane Blessing and Connolly volunteered to consult the newly formed Friends of the Library for assistance with both events.

A report was given on the continuing progress of the building. It was mentioned that with much of the outside work done the flag recently presented to the library by Congressman Michael McNulty is now flying daily. The flag which was ceremoniously flown over the Capitol was presented to Ten Eyck and Director Gail Sacco by McNulty at the Memorial Day Parade. Arrangements were made to obtain the flag by area resident Diane Relyea who served on the committee to move the library.

The board read a letter of thanks from acting Superintendent William Brayden who expressed his appreciation for the library's donation to the school of shelving and other materials from the old building.

The district has also opted to share some of its materials with the library which is housing three computers at the public library this summer while renovation is taking place at both the high school and the grade school. A good amount of software is also being stored at the library which is available for circulation.

Under the current scenario, data collection would begin late in September and be completed by next April. From there, the firm retained by the town would work with the assessor's office to compile new values for the 1991 tentative assessment roll. Taxpayers will feel the effect in their 1991-92 school, town and county real property tax bills.

Merry Christmas in July?

Who thinks about Christmas in July? Members of St. Matthew's Church do because they are working on the parish's annual Christmas Craft Bazaar to be held on Saturday, Nov. 19. With the fundraiser only four months away, projects are in full swing at the church which is celebrating "Christmas in July" to encourage members to sign up to work during those "lazy, hazy days of summer"

Weekly activities have included the decorating of a Christmas tree, as well as a visit from Santa and his elves. The final two weekends will include carolers and a Christmas party.

General chairpersons Tina Stewart and Carol Van Wormer said many booths already have chairpersons while a few are still in need of leaders. Bazaar booths and their chairs include: Lois Parmalee, needlework; Lew Schedlbauer and Ron Michalak, woodenware; Judi Wuttke and Estelle Sullivan, calico corner; Jan Brennan, aprons; Martha and Bonnie Perry, Christmas decorations; Agnes Tucker, kitchen; Betty McCluskey, luncheon; Dan and Cathy Schryver, books; Sue Dougherty and Dolores Pierro, baked goods; Cathy Lawler, live plants; Bob and Lyn Stapf, publicity, and Ernie and Linda Papa, raffle. Chairpersons are still needed to oversee toys, pillows, under a dollar, baby and children's items, and Christmas ornaments. Raffle prizes and items for all individual booths are also needed. To help, sign up at the church or contact Stewart at 765-4316 or Van Wormer at 765-4769.

The transforming choice

In the opinion of many, the Bethlehem Central School District is among the finest school systems in the state. For some of us, the quality of education provided here was one of the major reasons for choosing to live in this community.

We all want the best for our children, and we all recognize the advantage that those with a high-quality education have in life. We should all rightly be pleased, even those of us without school-age children, when through our community we provide such a solid educational foundation. I believe it is one of the best things that we as a community can do for ourselves and for the world.

But what if doing one of the best things we can do also means doing one of the worst things we can do? What if providing a solid foundation for living for some of us means undermining the foundations upon which other lives are being built? A report issued last fall by New York State Education Commissioner Thomas Sobol's Task Force on the Education of Children and Youth at Risk claims that is precisely what we are doing.

The report, which focused on youths at risk of dropping out, found that racism in New York has allowed urban schools to crumble and segregate minority students in less-challenging courses, while in the state's more affluent, predominantly white communities, the public schools are in better shape and students face higher expectations. The report warned that because New York supports two unequal school systems, it may perpetuate "a permanent underclass."

In other words, as good as we are at providing a high-quality education for our children, we may also help perpetuate a system that locks others in an endless cycle of poverty, hopelessness and oppression.

Such a report may be evaluated politically, sociologically or economically. Ultimately, however, it raises profound religious questions. How we respond to those questions reveals much about the heart of our faith and about our own future and that of our community.

We might turn our back to the questions and walk away, pretending that a deep, systemic racism doesn't exist or that we aren't part of it. We might choose that way because we fear confronting a deep, unrecognized or unacknowledged truth about ourselves. We might choose it because we fear the radical changes in our way

Focus On Faith

of life that would be required to correct this injustice.

That is the way that fears involvement and responsibility, that fears change and the unknown, that remains isolated in an egocentric castle of status quo. And it is the way of death, because life is growth and change and the realization of the unknown potential in each individual.

We might confront the issue halfheartedly, using the apparently right words, making the apparently right moves, but not giving our whole selves to the situation, reserving something precious for ourselves. We might strike a blow at the problem, but it would be a glancing blow that alters only the form of racism while leaving its substance unchanged. And we would remain broken, unfulfilled, less than whole.

We might plunge into self examination, studying our community, making certain that minority students in our school system receive the same attention and education that the majority receive. This is a seductive way, because wholeness involves self knowledge and self control. But we would never break the bounds of our isolating White ghetto. We would never enter genuinely into the difficult and often painful relationships with all of our brothers and sisters in which, and only in which, our inner potential can be brought to birth.

Or we might make the transforming choice. We might ascend the mountain and, as Jesus did, enter the dark cloud of communion with God. We might squarely face what is in us and what is in the situation, painful and daunting though it may be. We might peel back the layers of our own will to uncover the will of God that lies buried beneath. And in doing so we may find ourselves transformed, freed from other people's limited perceptions and expectations of us, freed even from our own limiting self expectations. We may discover that our true selves, in all their fullness, in all their wholeness, in all their radiance, have been given birth.

Win moves Bethlehem into first place

A big home field win on Sunday against Bethlehem's Latham Padres kept Bethlehem's nine in first place in the Eastern New York Connie Mack League heading into the final week of the regular season.

Scott Hodge's clutch fifth-inning single was the key blow in Bethlehem's 3-2 comeback win. Dave Sodergren cameback in the top of the seventh. With Latham runners on first and second and one out, Sodergren went deep in the hole at short to knock down a grounder and fired to third to force a surprised Latham lead runner. The home team, down 2-0 after one inning and facing Latham's ace left-hander, Chris Church, rallied behind six superb shutout innings by Jamie Mizener in relief of Alex Hackman. The 3-2 Bethlehem win avenged an earlier Mizener loss to the Padres by an earlier score.

The locals are at 9-2 for the season with three games remaining including one today at 6 p.m. (Wednesday) against tough Twin Town at the Bethlehem High School field. Last week, Bethlehem split two close games, losing 1-0 to Sorensco and beating Saratoga 5-3 in another comeback.

Against Sorensco, Hackman's four hitter and excellent Bethlehem defense wasn't good enough to beat Dennis Walters who fired a one-hit shutout for the home team. On Friday, however, Hackman picked up the victory in relief after a strong 5 and 2/3 inning starting stint by Brian Bethel against the heavy hitting visitors from Saratoga. Bill McFerrin's single driving in Chris Aloisi who had doubled was the decisive blow for Bethlehem.

Bethlehem's Connie Mack team is anchored by a strong core of the players who led the BCHS Eagles to a highly successful 1989 varsity season. The infield features Sean Lynch at first, Sodergren at second, Aloisi at short, and Ryan Flynn at third. Kyle Snyder is the regular catcher. Bill McFerrin, fresh from a highly successful rookie season at Division II Springfield College, is a mainstay in centerfield, flanked by Scott Hodge in left and a platoon of Al Greenhalgh, Bob Bolduc and Hackman in right. Chris Pratt is the designated hitter. Greenhalgh and Craig Weinert provide depth in the infield. Lefties Izener and Hackman, and righthander Bethel from the Burnt Hills varsity squad, have provided all the pitching to date. Bethlehem is managed by John Sodergren, the BCHS varsity football coach, with assistance from Al Greenhalgh Sr.

The victory over Latham all but insures Bethlehem's Connie Mackers of a trip to the New York State Tournament for the second straight year. Three Eastern New York teams will join that competition in Syracuse July 27 through 30. Along with Bethlehem, Latham and Sorensco are the other likely area representatives. Several of the players on Bethlehem's 1989 team are returners from 1988, while a larger contingent played on Bethlehem's Mickey Mantle crew which won last year's New York State championship before bowing out in the Northeast U.S. tourney in Holyoake, Ma.

During its 10 games to date (one victory by forfeit), Bethlehem's regulars have been led by Sodergren (.457), Lynch (.367), Hodge (.361), and Aloisi (.333). Hackman has picked up four victories (including a one hitter and a two hitter) with the lone Sorensco defeat, while Mizener has three wins and 29 strikeouts in 24 innings against the single Latham lost. Bethel has one victory and has contributed to several others and his team has yet to lose a game he has started.

Donations of funds and in-kind contributions are being accepted to support the trip to Syracuse. For information, contact John Sodergren at 439-6878 or Mary Snyder at 439-7533

Whitehall downs Tri-Village All-Stars

The first round of the double-elimination District 13 Little League Major All-Star Tournament saw the Tri-Village Little League All-Stars outlasted by Whitehall in a close 8-5 game.

Eric Bartoletti pitched a strong game for Tri-Village and was backed by a skilled defense, but Whitehall's power hitters managed four home runs and several other key hits to notch the win.

Nathan Kosoc, leading off for Tri-Village, took the first pitch in the helmet and advanced to second on a bunt single by Matt Winterhoff. Both scored on a double by Josh Willey. Bartoletti singled, and advanced to second as Willey was thrown out at the plate. Jon Gould reached base on an error, scoring Bartoletti, but was put out trying to advance to second for the third out.

Whitehall's leadoff man hit the second pitch out of the park, and their cleanup man also hit a solo home run. Two solo shots plus an unearned run allowed Whitehall to tie the game at 3-3 after a full inning.

Both teams were scoreless in the second, but Tri-Village picked up another run in the third. Kosoc, Winterhoff and Willey led off with three walks. After two strikeouts, Gould walked, forcing Kosoc in. The final out came before another Tri-Village player could cross the plate.

Tri-Village held on to their 4-3 lead as their defense game Whitehall another shutout inning. However, Tri-Village was kept scoreless in the top of the fourth, again leaving three runner stranded.

The bottom of the fourth is where Whitehall came alive. A two-run double and a three-run homer piled up a substantial 8-4 lead for Whitehall.

Tri-Village left two on base in their scoreless half of the fifth, but held Whitehall in the bottom of the inning.

Kosoc led off the top of the last inning with a base on balls. Winterhoff also drew a walk, but was forced out at second on Willey's fielder's choice. Bartoletti flew out to the first baseman, allowing Kosoc to tag up and score, but Willey was put out trying to advance to second to end the game.

Tri-Village was scheduled for a losers' bracket game against Hudson Valley Little League 1 p.m. Sunday at National Little League, with games in their bracket on Monday, Thursday and next Sunday. The finals for the District 13 Major League All-Star Tournament are scheduled for Tuesday, July 25 at 6 p.m. at Hudson Valley Little League in Ravena.

Tri-Village's 11-year old All-Star team was scheduled for a first-round game at 4 p.m. Sunday at Tawasentha Park against Colonie. The 10-year old All-Star team from Tri-Village was to make its tournament debut Sunday at 6 p.m. at Cook Park in Colonie.

THE HEATING SYSTEM OF TOMORROW CAN BE YOURS TODAY

ELPAN® electric and VANPAN® hot water baseboard heating systems are the most advanced heating systems in the world. They are the only ones that use the unique HEAT-ENCLOSURE® concept.

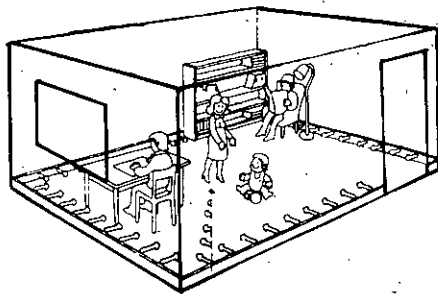

They enclose each room with uniform, homogenized, radiant heat to provide the ULTIMATE in comfort.

HEAT-ENCLOSURE® uses either electric or hot water radiant baseboard heaters only 1" wide by 5" high in place of the customary wooden baseboards on all four walls of a room to surround the room with a uniform low temperature source of radiant heat which results in completely UNIFORM temperature in the living area.

The RADIANT BASEBOARDS were developed in Denmark in the early 1970's and have been used in thousands of homes in Europe for almost twenty years. They have been proven in both laboratory tests and actual use to be the most ATTRACTIVE, COMFORTABLE, HEALTHY, ENERGY SAVING heating systems available for heating homes and buildings.

The HEAT-ENCLOSURE® radiant heat envelops the body in draft free homogenized heat and ensures the same temperature at the feet and head levels for the utmost COMFORT.

The radiant heat, which is light and pleasant, is strongest at floor level and diminishes upwards on the walls. This makes ELPAN® or VANPAN® perfect for rooms with cathedral ceilings since only the living area is heated.

The heat blanket created under the ceiling by other systems is eliminated with HEAT-ENCLOSURE®. Because the room is heated uniformly 30-40% ENERGY SAVINGS can be obtained over other systems.

HEAT-ENCLOSURE® is the greatest breakthrough in heating comfort since central heating.

It gives: "GREATER COMFORT WITH LOWER ENERGY CONSUMPTION"

Installed and tested in thousands of American homes, ELPAN® and VANPAN® are now available for installation in YOUR home.

For information and a free estimate of the cost to install an ELPAN® electric or VANPAN® hot water heating system in your house write or call:

Life in the bullpen

'Seriously, what do they do down there?'

By Nat Boynton

Ever glance at the bullpen during a ball game, see these guys sitting around relaxing while a first-line starting pitcher is mowing the opposition down, and wonder what they're doing? What are they doing? What're they talking about?

Good places to eat? Women? Maybe even baseball?

All those and more. Mostly it's a waiting game, 300 feet from the action. "We don't do much until the sixth or seventh," an A-C Yankee reliever explained to a visitor at Heritage Park last week. "Especially on this team."

The visitor carried, tuning in on the dialogue as the game got underway. It was one of those rare afternoon games, the starting time moved up to 1 o'clock because it was on a getaway day of a three-game series, and both teams had to pack for a 10-hour bus ride to London, Ont. that evening.

This day, that evening the opposition under a bright July sun, and as Scott Kamieniecki, the Yankee starter, went to work in the first inning, the mood in the bullpen was relaxed. Four pitchers and Mitch Lyden, the bullpen catcher, sat on the metal bench, leaning back against the wire fence enclosing the playing area.

Kamieniecki, a righthander leading the league in strikeouts, ran the count to 1-2 on the first hitter, Milt Cuyler, batting from the left side. "They got a lot of lefties in there today," ventured Tim Layana, the Yankees' premier closer.

"How many?" asked Lyden.

"Two lefties, four switches," said Layana. "Only three righties."

Cuyler, an outfielder batting .296, cut at a low fastball for strike three. Pat Austin, the Tigers' second baseman, a righthand hitter, rapped the second pitch on a line to right center for two bases.

"That was a breaking ball," said Layana.

The third hitter got a life when Hensley Meulens misplayed a slow roller at third, but there was no advance. Kamieniecki struck out the No. 4 hitter, batting right, but

Inside the minors

Whom to watch at Heritage Park

Delwyn Young, a switch hitter batting left, sliced a hit to short right. Jason Maas tried a diving catch but missed by inches, and the run scored.

"What was the pitch Young hit?" Layana inquired.

"I think it was a slider, in," said Lyden.

Kamieniecki, struggling in the afternoon heat, worked too carefully on another lefthanded hitter, first baseman John Toale, and walked him, loading the bases. In the bullpen all eyes were on the Yankee pitcher, and no one spoke.

Three on, one in, two out. Phil Clark, a catcher considered one of Detroit's top prospects, stepped in, batting right. Kamieniecki got him on a bouncer to second and the inning was over.

Randy Nosek, a righthanded pitcher who spent several weeks in the American League earlier this season, took his warmup pitches. "He was called up from Double-A," Layana remarked to Jerry Rub, the bullpen's resident lefthander sitting next to him. "How can they (the Tigers) send him back to Double-A?"

No one had an answer. Nosek may have furnished one by walking the A-C leadoff, Bernie Williams, on four pitches and went 3-0 on Andy Stankiewicz before throwing a strike. The next pitch was low, and there were two on.

Ricky Torres, a middle reliever from Puerto Rico, came from the clubhouse with a fistful of bubble gum, and tossed a few pellets to the bullpen brigade. Nosek continued to struggle, running the count to 3-0 on Oscar Azocar. Ball four, three on, nobody out, and a London conference on the mound.

"He pitched in the big leagues?" asked the visitor.

Jim Leyritz, the Yankees' leading hitter, stepped in as the DH. Nosek found a semblance of control, slipped in two called strikes, and fanned Leyritz swinging.

Maas, a lefthanded hitter, woke up the crowd by stroking a 1-0 pitch over Young's head in left. The wrong-field double emptied the bases. Nosek fanned the next two hitters, ending the inning with three walks, a three-run double and three strikeouts.

The game unfolded methodically for three innings. It was still 3-1 Yanks when John Green, a well traveled middle reliever, came out to the pen and passed a cup of Diet Pepsi to the occupants. Several took a few sips, welcome with the sun still high.

From the runway behind the bullpen a swarm of youngsters, matching uniform numbers with the scorecard, persisted in begging the players to throw them baseballs to keep. The players declined, but the clamor continued.

"Mister Torres? Throw us a ball?"

Torres ignored the plea. The youngsters shifted to Pedro DeLeon, who was idly flipping a baseball while watching the game.

"Mister DeLeon?" Timidly at first, then bolder. "Pedro?"

Green, a 6-foot-3 righthander, turned to the kids and said, "He doesn't speak English. I'm his translator. No ball." (DeLeon, a Hispanic, is fluent in English.)

The kids persisted. Layana turned to look at them, then pointed to the London bullpen on the far side of the field. "Hey, they're giving balls away in the other pen. Better get over there."

The tallest of the youngsters didn't buy that. "You're just trying to get rid of us."

More begging. "Mister DeLeon? Please?"

Green again. "Maybe after the game. Now, vamoose."

A foul ball from the batter soared over the rightfield stands and disappeared in the parking lot.

"Hey, Chris," Rub called to Chris Howard, another righthander who was busy rubbing saddle-soap into his glove at the end of the bench. "I think I heard your car window go."

"I didn't park there," Howard answered.

In the fourth, Kamieniecki had some brief moments of insecurity. With one out, Cuyler tripled to the right field corner. Austin delivered him with a scoring fly to deep center. The score was now 3-2, and there was a brief stir among the bullpen occupants. With the London lineup loaded with lefthand hitters, there was speculation whether a righthander or a lefthander would get a call from Buck Showalter, the A-C manager in the dugout.

Green's guess was that Showalter would let Kamieniecki stay "unless he wants to turn 'em around." (Translation: make the switch hitters bat righthanded, from which side they might be less effective.)

Kamieniecki escaped further damage and the relievers relaxed. In the bottom half the Yankees, who had been held to one hit, added two more runs on a walk, a double and a triple, padding the score to 5-2.

The game moved through the sixth in orderly fashion. Rub, who played Class A ball with Oneonta in the New York-Penn League, and Green, who played in the same league with the Geneva Cubs, swapped a few yarns about ballparks and ex-teammates in the lower minors.

"Is it always this quiet out here, or is it because it's a day game after a night doubleheader?" the visitor asked.

"You just picked a quiet game to come out here," said Layana. "We usually don't get much action until the seventh."

"And we usually don't get out of bed 'til one o'clock," added Rub.

Moments later a courier from management in the dugout brought word to Layana to "start stretching." Tim left the bench and began loosening-up exercises. "If Kam gets in trouble, I'll get ready," he explained to the visitor. "Otherwise I'll pitch the eighth and ninth."

Lyden, wearing shinguards, picked up his glove and moved to the warmup pad. Layana was throwing to him when Austin, the London second baseman, rocketed a long double to center. There was only one out, and Monk Meyer, the Yankee pitching coach, came down to tell Green to "play catch with Jerry." Now there were two relievers throwing in the pen, a righty and a lefty.

Meyer, standing near the right field line, turned his back on his two proteges working in the pen, and watched Kamieniecki intently. The inning ended with a soft infield grounder and a swinging strikeout, the 5-2 score intact. Layana and Rub sat down.

The game moved into the eighth and Layana went in to pitch. Young, leading off, pushed a hit through the right side. Layana got Toale on a loft to left, then balked Young to second. That inspired Green to tell the other relievers about a former teammate in the Carolina League who was charged with five balks in one inning.

"When I went in the clubhouse later, he was taking a shower with his uniform on," Green was saying. "He was talking to himself."

In the ninth Dave Kramer, the Yankees' bus driver, came by to assure the pen guys that the bus was ready for the long trip that night. "He used to drive Willie Nelson's bus," Rub informed the visitor.

It was 10 minutes to four when the last Tiger, with two runners aboard, expired on a wild cut at a Layana slider.

As he swung, the bullpen bench emptied. As the players strode toward the clubhouse, the kids swarmed after them. DeLeon tossed a baseball into their midst.

"We'll be there (London) by midnight," said Kramer.

Teaching life's self-learned lessons

By Mark Stuart

It used to be that on any given day in Bethlehem, odds are you'd find her on at least one tennis court in town.

"Have you seen Linda today?"

"Did you check Elm Avenue?"

"Yes."

"The middle school?"

"Not there."

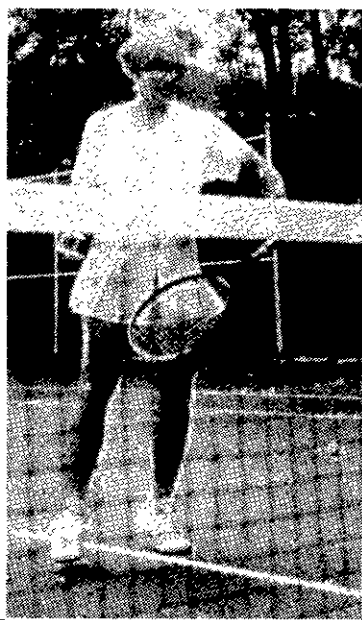

"Maybe the high school."

"Not there."

Back when, if she wasn't on any of those courts - and it's not January - it would be cause for alarm, but not now. Linda Anne Burtis, the director of the Delmar Tennis Academy, has found a new home at the Southwood Tennis Club in Albany as the club's new pro.

She's been a staunch supporter of tennis, particularly youth tennis since she picked up a racket in 1974. Unlike many tennis standouts from Bethlehem, she never played tennis in high school or college. In fact, her tennis beginnings were could be considered rather unique. When she first moved to Delmar, she had somewhat of a limited interest in tennis. Then one weekend, she had heard about the Troy Open tournament and expressed an interest in it. "I went to enter it and some people I knew said I wasn't good enough to enter that tournament. So went to the tournament to watch. It turns out I made some friends at that tournament who were competitive players from the Capital area and they took just took me under their wing and helped me out with my game."

That was all it took to spark the spirit of challenge in Burtis, a spirit that permeates her teaching phi-

Burtis is equally comfortable on the tennis courts whether she is hitting from the net during a lesson or playing competitively.
Mark Stuart

losophy and attitudes towards life. From that point on she mingled in the highly-competitive Schenectady tennis circles and looked for opportunities to compete against better players.

"I decided I would give myself five years, I think I was 25-years-old, and I would see if in five years I could make it," she said.

Since then, she has competed in numerous tournaments throughout the country. She is ranked 33rd in the nation in the women's 40 division. Her last tournament was during the weekend of July 7, when she traveled to the Williams Open in Williamstown, Mass., for a New England sanctioned women's 40s tournament.

to win and you have to accept that. In life, you have to look at what you're doing like it's the most important thing you'll ever do, and you're not always going to win, but you gave it your best and that's the most important thing."

Right now, Burtis is trying to attract youngsters to the world of tennis while bringing more programs to the Southwood Tennis Club.

The club was formed in 1971 when the names of Billie Jean King and Arthur Ashe splashed across the headlines. It was the rebirth of tennis in the United States and a boom time for the club.

Then in the late 1970s, tennis seemed to die down, particularly at the club. But the club is attracting more and more younger players. "That's great because these are the great players of tomorrow."

She is an advocate of positive teaching, stressing the importance of trying to reach your potential. She frowns upon players like John McEnroe and Jimmy Connors for their brat-like displays on the court and smiles at the idea of playing tennis for a lifetime in an enjoyable competitive atmosphere.

Burtis has been teaching tennis for 12 years, four of those years she has conducted children's camps in Delmar. In addition to tennis she has been a freelance writer several area publications, including The Spotlight newspaper, covering environmental issues for eight years.

Area artists paint best on Maine Street

Artist Russ McMahon of Latham offers his students the opportunity to hone their skills while staying in scenic Maine.

By Patricia Dumas

To students of Latham artist Russ McMahon, Kennebunkport is famous not because the president of the United States has a residence there but because it is the site of their on-location summer art classes.

For the past 17 years McMahon has offered students in his oil painting and water color classes the opportunity of applying their talents and techniques in and intensive three-day art course at the popular Maine resort.

This year, 20 students who study under McMahon's direction at his Art Colonie Barn on Old Loudon Road will travel to Kennebunkport. There, armed with easels, paints, brushes, water jugs and the other assorted items of their artistic equipment, they will transfer to paper and canvas, scenes of sea and sky, sailing boats and lobster traps, rocks, reefs and other aspects of the resort village and its surrounding coastal landscape.

Arriving independently on July 19, the students will get settled in various motels or in their own recreational vehicles, meet for dinner, and report the next morning for their instruction. They will meet Thursday, July 20 through Saturday, July 22 for demonstration lessons from their teacher and will work on their sketches, oil and water color paintings each day, from 9 a.m. through 2 p.m. with a break for lunch.

Ranging in age from teenagers to senior citizens, the students will bring friends and relatives to share in their combination of work, hobby, and vacation. Some of McMahon's students return year after year for the on-location experience, and many have sold the paintings they did at Kennebunkport.

McMahon's studio in Latham is reached by a stone-walled driveway that winds picturesquely past the artist's family residence set on a wide lawn. A white gazebo on the lawn and a stone wishing well near the studio entrance add to the artistic setting. The studio is on the second floor of the barn behind the house. The lower level houses a display room of McMahon's art work that is available for sale and a shop where artist supplies may be purchased.

The Latham artist usually paints in his studio each day, beginning at 5:30 a.m. He teaches three classes a day, five days a week to students aged nine to eighty. This summer, he also will be seen on the inside track at Saratoga exhibiting prints of scenes he has painted at the race track. His work currently is on exhibit at the gift shop located in the National Racing Hall of Fame in Saratoga.

McMahon also is recognized as the only artist in the capital district—and possibly in New York State—who has made art instruction in sign language available to mute people. He traces that skill to his boyhood days when he acquired the art of signing in order to communicate with a mute companion.

Before starting his teaching career, McMahon worked with M. Solomon Furs in Albany as its advertising director and fashion illustrator. He studied at the Workshop School of Advertising and Editorial Art, the Arts Students League, and the Fashion Art and Design school, all in New York City. During World War II, he served with the United States Navy in a communications unit stationed in England and France.

The Art Colonie Barn is a family-run business. Russ McMahon's wife, Dorothy, whom he met when they were first grad-

Booklovers' bonanza in trendy Lenox, Mass.

By Susan Graves

If you need a respite from the summer cultural pay-as-you-go scene, you might consider a day trip you don't have to take because you already bought the tickets months ago.

If you'd like an easy laid back day and one that doesn't require any money up front, pack up your summer reading list and head for The Bookstore on 9 Housatonic St. in Lenox, Mass.

But beware, Lenox this time of year is oozing with culture, and most of the shops in town appear to be catering to the Tanglewood set. If you're a shopper, you'll find the very trendiest togs ever made. There's a Talbot's store for the tame and a number of boutiques that can make you fashionably offbeat. And if you want to eat during your visit, be sure to take more than what you think you'll need for an expensive lunch.

A hamburger, the most recognizable thing on at least two menus in town goes for about $6.50. Soup at one establishment was $4. The avocado delights and other healthier type foods abound. And if you're a non-smoker, go to the Candle-

THE YOUTH NETWORK

Guidelines for Teen Parties

The information for this column is from the booklet Making the Right Choices: The Bethlehem Networks Project Substance Abuse Handbook.

When your teen is hosting a party:

1. Review the guest list, which should be kept small enough to manage in the space designated in your home. Set definite starting and ending times, as well as some creative, planned activities. Be sure to provide plenty of food and beverages. Consider making or having the guests make several punches, besides the usual soda, etc.

2. Agree to rules ahead of time and then enforce them. Examples of such rules are: No drugs, including alcohol, no smoking, no leaving the party and then returning (unless under unusual circumstance.) No uninvited guests (gate crashers.) Lights will be left on. Some rooms in your house may be off-limits. If a guest arrives intoxicated, under the influence of a drug(s), or in possession of alcohol or drugs, make it clear that you will always inform that teen's parent(s) and you will make arrangements for the teen to get home safely. As the adult in charge, you will be supervising the party in whatever way you feel is appropriate or necessary.

3. Know your responsibilities. The responsible adult at a teen party is visible and aware. It is illegal to serve drugs, including alcohol, to minors, or even to be aware that this is being served. Furthermore, you are legally responsible for anything that may happen to a minor who has been served drugs or alcohol in your home.

4. Invite another adult over as company for you during a long evening and for assistance if there are problems. If parents are driving teens to your house, you might consider inviting them in to meet you, if only briefly.

5. Sign a Bethlehem Safe-Homes Network Agreement and send a copy to The Bethlehem Networks Project. For an agreement, call 439-7740.

When an adult will not be home:

1. As this is the situation in which many teen parties occur, it is important that you consider ways to reduce the risk of an unsupervised party occurring. In addition to knowing your child's (children's) past behavior and level of maturity, you should make your expectations clear about not having a party, emphasizing the risks to themselves and you, as the parents and homeowners. In addition, you should discuss what the child(ren) should do if others arrive with the intention of having a party. A trusted reliable adult could be called, or even asked to spend the evening.

2. For lengthy absences by parents, such as a week's vacation, it is recommended that youth left home should either stay elsewhere or have a specific person who is acting as the responsible adult.

Portfest '89 sails into Albany

By Patricia Dumas

Tall ships, a craft fair, food, fun, entertainment, and a sense of pride in history will mark this weekend along Albany's waterfront.

Portfest '89 organizers expect at least 8,000 visitors to attend both days of the event at the port of Albany on Saturday, July 22 and Sunday, July 23.

The festival will bring back ships that visited the port during Albany's tricentennial in 1986. Planned as a salute to Albany's maritime history and a reminder of the Hudson River's role in the city's growth, the festival will feature the return of The Rose, a three-masted pre-Revolutionary War tall ship. The original vessel sailed to New York in 1776 as part of a British attacking fleet of 300 ships and played a major role in the war.

A true tall ship with her mainmast soaring to 130 feet, The Rose and other stately but not quite so tall ships will parade past the port Saturday afternoon.

The Rose is scheduled to arrive July 21, and will be open to visitors Saturday and Sunday from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. Other naval, commercial and private vessels will be open for tours during the same hours. The original Rose was built in 1756 in England, was used to clamp down on rum-running. It was sacrificed in 1779 by being sunk in order to block the approach of a French invasion fleet off Savannah, Ga. The restored Rose this year will become U.S. Coast Guard-certified as the largest sailing school vessel in America.

Portfest '89 will offer exhibits hosted by federal, state and city agencies, the New York State National Guard, US Navy and Air Force, and the Customs Service. Outdoor exhibits will include trains, tanks and vehicles. On the water, there will be a rescue demonstration by a state police helicopter and diver and a "tug ballet," featuring tugboats performing maneuvers.

A variety of items will be on sale including porcelain dolls, crystal, pottery, wood-carved objects, and tie-dye clothing. Food will be available at a number of stands, and on Sunday morning a pancake breakfast will be sponsored by area church groups.

Along with the church groups, local charities and service organizations will benefit from funds raised during the event. Profits from a welcoming party for captains and crews of the visiting vessels will go toward the Albany Jaycees' anti-drug Albany Plan. The Albany Boys Club will hold a $25-a-ticket fund-raiser aboard The Rose Saturday night. Proceeds will go to Vietnam veterans organizations. Balloon sales will provide money for American Little League and T-shirt sales will raise money for the Lupus Society.

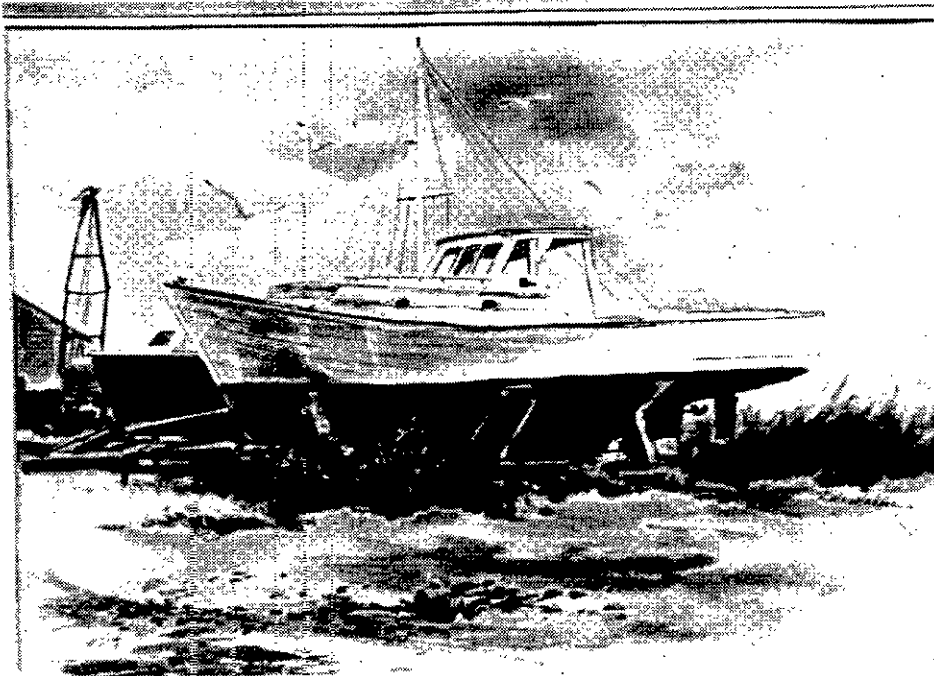

There will be strolling musicians, jugglers, clowns, and pony rides. For entertainment, there will be jazz, dancers, contemporary rock music, and performances by the Air Force Presidential Drill Team and the Albany Police Pipe Band.

Because public parking is not allowed at the port except for a limited number of pre-sold preferred parking spaces, the Capital District Transportation Authority will provide bus service to the port. Buses will travel from the Empire State Plaza, Madison Avenue side and through downtown or from the McCarty Avenue park-and-ride lot in downtown Albany. Preferred parking spaces are being sold through Community Box Office. There will be parking for the handicapped at the port.

Besides the 179-foot long Rose, largest active wooden tall ship in the world, the following vessels will be on view:

USS Adroit, a 173-foot long minesweeper; USCG Cutter Line, a 65-foot search and rescue vessel; Old Friend, a 54-foot schooner; Eleanor, 36-foot long sloop; Selina II, 42-foot long cat; NAGA, 49-foot long ketch; Olde English D, 45-foot long steam launch.

There also will be various tug boats, barges and buoy boats.

ers in Cohoes, assists in the shop. Their daughter, Karen Cruden, teaches art classes at the studio and daughter, Maureen paintings. This summer Maureen also will be teaching an arts and crafts class for children, ages four through eight. Parents who want to enroll children in the classes may reach the artist by calling 785-8220. The McMahons' son Kevin, who is a Colonie police officer, also is an artist and the proprietor of Colonie Property Service, a landscaping firm.

There are five McMahon grandchilddren, Craig and Khalen Cruden, Christopher and Kelly Hayes, and Sean McMahon. Their ages range from two to 11 and the two oldest are enrolled in art classes at the studio.

McMahon tells his students, who are wont to expect instant success, that artists must be patient, honing their talent over the years. But he also remarked, as he put the finishing touches to a demonstration painting during one of his recent water class sessions, "See—if you need a gift in a hurry, you can start a painting in the morning and have it framed by evening."

Fun park reunion slated

The Great Escape in Lake George, America's oldest theme park, is conducting a search for all former employees. Anyone who ever worked at the Great Escape or Storytown, USA over the past 35 years is invited, along with his or her immediate family, to a special 35th birthday party reunion. The party will be held Sunday, Aug. 27 at the park.

"If you ever flipped hamburgers, robbed the Ghost Town Bank, ran the train, dressed up as Chippers or Cinderella or helped keep the park clean, we want to hear from you," said Charles R. Wood, founder and CEO of the Great Escape.

Information should be sent to: The Great Escape Fun Park Reunion, P.O. Box 511, Lake George 12854. For more information, call The Great Escape at 792-6568.

All former employees must provide the following information: name; address; daytime and evening telephone number; dates of employment and position(s) held at The Great Escape or Storytown; and present occupation with company name and current title. Any comments or interesting facts concerning your employment at the park may also be included.

□ Bookstore

But enough, you get the picture. You don't have to eat a full-course meal and there are ordinary grocery stores where you can pick up a snack.

Anyway, this trip is designed to feed the mind, so you can scratch the eateries and go straight to the The Bookstore.

The store, which bills itself on its book-marks as "serving the community since last Tuesday," is a gourmet feast for booklovers who want more than the latest best seller or more than just one copy of an author's most popular work.

Bookstore owner Matthew Tannenbaum says he tries to "offer things we know are good literature. We don't buy just what the publisher offers."

He said the store doesn't censor anything, but they don't stock what they feel isn't good.

Tannenbaum, who bought the store in 1976, said he knows there is a market for his selections for people who are looking for titles and authors who often don't make it to the typical bookstore shelves. "It's tempting sometimes just to get the best-sellers, but we spend the extra time" stocking books that probably will endure for more than a season.

"The important thing for us is that the bad not drive out the good," he said.

The Bookstore also stocks works of local authors, and many hold book-signing events at the shop. "We've been here a long time. We can afford to carry a lot more," than the usual book fare, Tannenbaum said.

"I don't mind being poor," he said.

The Bookstore personnel also don't mind browsers. People can spend as much or as little time as they like ferreting out literary finds.

Jo Baldwin, who works at the store, said, "They're generally not in a hurry when they come here."

Children are welcome and there is even a special play area for them in the front of the store. Tannenbaum said they are expanding the children's section "all the time."

Baldwin and Tannenbaum go out of their way to accommodate their customers, but their efforts don't go unnoticed. They have many faithful patrons from the New York, New England area and even get orders from as far away as Florida.

The store, which is open year-round, is located off Main Street. Coming off the Mass Pike, into Lenox, take a right (on foot) at the Candlelight Inn and a left on Housatonic Street.

Housatonic is a one-way street, so it's easier to park on Walker Street and walk there.

"The town's only about two-blocks long, so you can't miss it," Baldwin said.

The store is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday and from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Sundays during the summer.

The trip from the Albany area takes about 45 minutes taking the I-90 to the Mass. Pike route. Take the first exit off the Pike and follow the signs to Lenox.

Albany Symphony plans new season

The Albany Symphony Orchestra's revamped programs for the 1989-90 season have been announced in an elaborate four-fold handbill, which promises that next year's audiences will "exult in radiant symphonies, unparalleled concertos, sumptuous orchestral pieces, and other supremely melodious works." The adjectives are more frequent than the additional works, since of the 20 composers who are named, 14 were already scheduled in the original programming.

The brochure continues with a declaration that the season will "salute the great composers of the past, the masters of beautiful melodies . . . a new wealth of melodic splendor, a kaleidoscope of vintage symphonic music," though with a "small but thrilling touch of the unabashedly contemporary."

Composers whose work has been added to the schedule are Sibelius, Mendelssohn, Verdi, Wagner, Berlioz and Copland.

Composers whose works have been supplanted in the revised schedule include Paganini, Haydn, Respighi, and Rachmaninoff. In addition, the "world premiere" performances of three new compositions have been cancelled. Four premieres have been retained, including two by the new "music adviser and principal guest conductor," George Lloyd, who will conduct three concerts.

Geoffrey Simon, the former music director, who resigned last month citing "disagreements," will conduct one concert instead of the five previously scheduled. Julius Hegyi, also a former ASO music director and now the conductor laureate, will conduct once. Kate Tamarkin, a Fellow at Tanglewood and Aspen and a protege of Leonard Bernstein, will be a conductor, as previously announced.

New conductors to appear will be Paavo Jarvi, music director of the Empire State Youth Orchestra; and Asher Raboy, assistant conductor of the Hudson Valley Philharmonic. Among the soloists will be David Saunders, principal harpist with the Albany Symphony, and Yosef Yankelev, the orchestra's concertmaster.

The first of the season's eight concert weekends will be on Oct. 6 and 7, and the final on May 4 and 5. No dates of concerts have been changed. The orchestra plays on Friday nights at the Troy Savings Bank Music Hall and on Saturday nights at the Palace Theater, Albany.

Goodman comes alive

In a program dedicated to the late Benny Goodman, veteran players of various Goodman orchestras will perform "The Swinging Years of Benny Goodman, A Big Band Tribute," at the Empire State Plaza on Wednesday, July 26, at 7:30 p.m.

Led by clarinetist Walt Levinsky, the 14 piece big band will play the original arrangements of Goodman's classics, including "Don't Be That Way," "King Porter Stomp," and "Sing, Sing, Sing."

Free parking will be available in the plaza's underground areas.

One Of America's Best Run Companies Gives 95% Of Its Money To Charity.

CARE was recently named the best run, best managed charity in America. We aren't surprised. 95% of every dollar we receive goes to help impoverished people. Only 5% goes to run our organization.

No other company could survive on margins like that. But a lot of starving people can.

CARE We're Helping People Learn To Live Without Us.
