Teen's eulogy evokes fragility of life

By Dev Tobin

More than 200 relatives, friends and schoolmates paid their last respects to Erin Cox Monday morning at the Church of St. Thomas the Apostle in Delmar.

The 16-year-old girl, who would have been a junior this fall at Bethlehem Central High School, died Thursday of injuries suffered when she was ejected from the rear of a pickup truck last Wednesday night. The truck was driven by Christopher Arnold, 17, of Delmar, who has been charged with criminally negligent homicide and driving while intoxicated.

In his eulogy, the Rev. James Daley said, "No one intended for us to be here this morning, but here we are."

Erin's death brings "all of us, especially Erin's peers, face to face with how fragile God's great gift of life to us is," Father Daley said.

"I pray for the same spirit in our hearts today," Father Daley added.

The priest used the story of Christ's raising of Jairus' daughter from the dead from the Gospel of St. Mark to draw a parallel.

"We believe Jesus took Erin's hand and said, 'Little girl, arise' ... to life everlasting," he said.

After the service, Erin's classmates, eyes red from crying, consoled each other outside the church.

With school set to start next week, Bethlehem Central Superintendent Leslie Loomis said the BCHS crisis intervention team will be ready to provide support for students troubled by Erin's death.

"We also want to be sensitive and respond to the Cox family and friends should they desire some kind of memorial for Erin," Loomis added.

In an interview with The Spotlight Saturday, Erin's mother, Corinne Cox, said, "Erin was an absolute joy for 16 years. I feel blessed that I had 16 great years with that kid."

Historic characters to attend re-enactment of first town meeting

By Mel Hyman

Picture a gathering of Delmar's most influential citizens. It was quite a different scene on April 10, 1794, when the first town meeting was held in Bethlehem.

If you're curious about some of the characters who attended, then you won't want to miss the historical re-enactment of that meeting next March during kickoff ceremonies for the town's bicentennial celebration.

It's safe to say there won't be a parks and recreation director or a public works superintendent in the play....

and the first clerk was Henry Vanderzee. They will also be in attendance.

Pound masters, if you're not familiar with the term — and it probably hasn't been used in over a hundred years — were in charge of confining stray animals like pigs and cows and returning them to their rightful owners, if possible.

"It was a terrific problem in the early years," explained Floyd Brewer, editor of the official bicentennial history.

Fence viewers were elected officials assigned to resolving border disputes between neighbors. Property borders were pretty loose in those days, he added.

The town's Bicentennial Commission allotted $1200 to produce the play. Several of the actors will be seated in the audience and summoned to the

Cops plan holiday crackdown

Take your time this weekend and be sure to follow all traffic laws, because the Bethlehem Police will be setting up checkpoints for speeding, driving while intoxicated and not wearing a seat belt.

Lt. Richard Vanderbilt announced the Labor Day weekend crackdown and cautioned that officers will also be checking for child restraint devices and proper headgear for motorcyclists.

One passenger car that was stopped over the July Fourth holiday had seven children under the age of four without restraining devices. "It was staggering," he said.

The weekend patrols will be aided by the recent appointment of a full-time officer specifically assigned to traffic safety.

The position is being funded by a matching grant of $20,000 received from the governor's traffic safety commission.

There is no doubt as to the need for a traffic safety officer in the town, Vanderbilt said.

All too often, traffic patrols take a back seat to more important tasks within the department. At the same time, there is a continual clamor from people calling the department with complaints about traffic violators, he said.

The officer who will be assigned to traffic patrol is Jeffrey Vunck, a six-year veteran of the force.

This weekend's checkpoints will begin at 3 p.m. Friday and continue through Monday evening.

Town joins hurricane relief efforts

Members of the community who wish to help victims of Hurricane Andrew in Florida and Louisiana can bring items to the Bethlehem Town Hall auditorium.

All non-perishable food products, including pet food and personal care items such as paper products, soap, toothbrushes, toothpaste and shampoo are desperately needed. Small utensils, such as can openers and new work gloves will also be accepted.

No clothing will be accepted.

Donations should be brought to town hall in plastic or paper bags or cardboard cartons. Items will be accepted on weekdays from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. up to and including Wednesday, Sept. 9.

The relief effort is sponsored by Price Chopper supermarkets, WNYT/Channel 13 and WQBK radio.

Ross blasts county Dems for patronage bloat

Instances of apparently major overstaffing in three Albany County departments were reported Tuesday by the County Legislature's Republican leadership.

James C. Ross of Elsmere, minority leader in the Legislature, said that a comparison of the county's payrolls in the Social Services, Public Works, and Real Property Tax offices and those in selected other Upstate counties showed substantially larger numbers of employees needed here for parallel workloads. "It is a blatantly patronage-laden bureaucracy," he declared. "This is what really made the newest sales tax appear to be necessary."

In Social Services, he said, Albany County pays 42.7 percent more people than Rockland County does, though it has a 30 percent smaller welfare budget to administer and its Medicaid caseload is less than 45 percent of Rockland's.

Compared with Niagara County, whose road system of 287 miles is virtually identical with Albany's, Ross said, the Albany DPW budget is more than twice as large (106 percent) and the work force is 99 percent greater.

Albany County's 38 employees in the Real Property Tax office are almost identical in size with those of five other counties combined — Broome, Niagara, Rockland, Orange, and Oneida. W. Gordon Morris of Delmar, ranking Republican member of the Legislature's finance committee, noted that the office has two additional employees to maintain tax maps but still paid $149,000 to an outside consultant for the work.

"Nowhere is the patronage bloat more evident than in this office. The Albany County Democratic machine's patronage traditions are at the root of the county's fiscal problems. Providing jobs for the party faithful has been the driving theme of county budgets for a number of years," Ross said.

The Republican legislators enumerated more than a dozen recommendations which they said would assist County Executive Michael J. Hoblock in "reducing the work force, eliminating 'perks', privatizing services, and consolidating county services."

Among these were three relating to the departments studied. These recommendations were:

- "Social Services should be downsized by eliminating long-term unqualified employees who hold provisional Civil Service status; a 10 percent reduction in management; and consolidation of general services with other county departments."

- "Federalize utility-grant and home-relief recipients who are eligible for SSI and HEAP, following the pattern established by County Executive Hoblock in transferring veterans on Medicaid to VA nursing home contracts."

- "Reduction of the Public Works budget by 20 percent."

- "Reduction of the Real Property Tax staff by at least 40 percent and making Albany County Computer Services and the Planning Department responsible for maintaining tax maps."

Other recommendations included actions and transfers that would reduce Medicaid costs to the county, and reducing the size of the automobile fleet, with the cars to be plainly marked as public property.

Recycling starts in New Scotland, V'ville

By Dev Tobin

In compliance with a state mandate, New Scotland and Voorheesville begin compulsory curbside recycling programs this week.

Although solid waste collection in both municipalities is contracted out to the Robert Wright Refuse Service of Glenmont, the programs differ in how recyclables should be separated.

In New Scotland, mixed recyclables, including metal, glass and plastic, must be placed in a town-issued 14-gallon plastic bin separate from the rest of a household's trash, which must be in a clear plastic bag.

Newspapers must be placed in a separate plastic bin, and other paper recyclables, including brown grocery bags, cardboard, magazines, junk mail (except envelopes with plastic address windows) and high grade office and computer paper, must be separated and dropped off at one of five sheds throughout the town.

The five sheds are at Town Hall, the New Salem Firehouse, Houghtaling's Market, the Clarksville Church and the Unionville Church.

The town has bought 4,500 of the yellow plastic recycling bins, and sold 1,500 of them for $4 each on Saturday. Bins are still available at Town Hall this week from noon to 8 p.m. and Saturday from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The bins do not have covers, so residents should not put newspapers out on rainy days.

The switch to an outside contractor for solid waste pickup will save the town around $30,000, according to Supervisor Herb Reilly. Two of the three town employees who used to do trash pickup have been laid off, Reilly added.

Enforcement of the mandatory recycling law will be lenient at first, but those who chronically refuse to separate will not have their trash picked up, town officials said.

For information on New Scotland's recycling program, call the highway department at 765-2681.

In Voorheesville, plastic, metal and glass recyclables must be placed in a separate clear plastic bag, and newspapers should be put out in paper bags as before. The rest of the trash must also be in a clear plastic bag.

Other paper recyclables, includ-

Women's club tends to town's future

By Mel Hyman

Just in case you missed it, there was a time in Delmar when there was no home delivery of mail, garbage was buried in the backyard and a public library was nowhere to be found.

But the Delmar Progress Club, formed in 1901, saw to it that all of these conditions were rectified. In fact, the contributions of this all-women organization over the years could probably fill up a small volume, let alone half a page in the newspaper.

The club's 305 members are not sitting on their laurels, however. They are just as active now as they were 90 years ago when meetings were held on someone's porch and you had to bring your own lantern.

The club's top priorities for 1992 include a clean environment, a sound educational system, veterans' benefits and senior citizen services.

Most recently, club members have been volunteering at the Glenmont Job Corps where they've been helping with literacy and equivalency diploma programs.

And political concerns are definitely not out of their realm. "We were very involved with the garbage-burning facility" proposed earlier this year, said club president Mary Tinney. "Anything that pertains to local politics and the environment the ladies are interested in."

This may be suburbia, but that doesn't necessarily translate into apathy as far as the Progress Club goes. "We have a waiting list for new members," Tinney noted.

In addition to the club's civic-oriented activities, there are plenty of occasions when women can gather for edification, enlightenment or a plain old good time.

The Creative Arts Group, for example, learns how to make avant-garde lampshades, tote bags and picture frames.

The Antiques Study Group has upcoming trips planned to the Williams College Museum and the Clark Institute in Williamstown, Mass., as well as the Historic First Church in Albany.

The Drama Group will be performing some scenes from Shakespeare and a one-act play at the Bethlehem Public Library. They also have a trip scheduled to see the legendary Victor Borge at Proctor's Theater in Schenectady.

And that's not all. There's a garden group, a literature group and a travel group, among others.

There are enough Progress Club events for any housewife or single woman to forget there are even men on the planet.

In case you don't remember the days before home mail deliveries, in 1931 the club's Civic Betterment Committee petitioned the town board for this service.

Before the plan could be set in motion, however, every street in the town of Bethlehem had to be named. At that time, it was a random hodgepodge at best.

So the Civic Betterment Committee embarked upon this task — as well as assigning house numbers — and the town was henceforth made eligible for mail delivery.

Other accomplishments around this time included an ordinance to control July Fourth fireworks and an ordinance to prohibit the use of firearms in the community.

The committee also pressured the town board to provide garbage collection so that people could do away with digging holes in their backyards to bury refuse.

Now that's progress.

ing magazines, cardboard, paper bags and junk mail (except envelopes with plastic address windows), should still be separated and brought to the firehouse on Altamont Road.

"We will be lenient for a couple of weeks until people get used to it," noted Village Clerk Phyllis Robillard. "Then people who don't comply with the law will not have their trash picked up."

Robillard emphasized that the village had little say in whether or not it should adopt mandatory recycling.

"We have no option; we have to do this because of the state mandate," she said.

In both New Scotland and Voorheesville, the clear plastic bags containing refuse and/or recyclables may be placed in garbage cans.

Labor Day closings

Retired mailmen leave posts with fond memories

By Susan Graves

Collectively, Bert Campbell and Tom O'Connor have come through in snow, sleet, rain and hail for 60 years.

Both letter carriers for the U.S. Post Office in Delmar have retired, and both have fond memories of their long careers.

O'Connor, a Delmar native who retired on a medical disability after 35 years of service, grew up right across the street from the Delaware Avenue branch.

"When I started, we worked 13, 14-hour days, seven days a week," he said.

O'Connor, who started as a custodian, clerk and carrier, remembers it all, especially the big snow storms in '58 and '69.

A native of Stratton Place in Delmar, Campbell also recalls the storms and said the post office used to provide the carriers with unusual footwear. "I remember we put chains on our feet," he said.

Campbell, 60, is retiring after 25 years of delivering mail on six or seven routes. "It keeps your weight down," he said.

For O'Connor, working Route 8 that covers Fernbank, Wellington and Elsmere avenues, was a joy. "I loved everyone, and they loved me," he said. "When I took sick, I never saw so many cards or got so many calls."

Although Campbell admits he was bitten twice by dogs in '69 or '70, he hasn't seen a recurrence of that problem since he started carrying Mace. There was one incident where he did use it — on a squirrel — but he said he hasn't quite lived that one down yet. "I sprayed a squirrel once and took a lot of ribbing for it."

Both carriers have had their share of more serious happenings over the years.

Once, O'Connor said, he saved a man from being electrocuted. A wire had fallen on the man's car that he used his car and then a post office jeep to deliver the mail.

For O'Connor, the old days were tougher because of the bulky magazines such as Life, Look and the Saturday Evening Post.

But Campbell thinks carriers still bear heavy loads, considering the amount of fourth-class mail they must deliver.

Both men also served in union offices during their careers. Campbell was a shop steward twice, and O'Connor was president, treasurer and sergeant-at-arms before the Delmar postal union workers merged with the Albany union.

O'Connor, 54, said he is hoping to regain his health before making any long-term retirement plans. "I miss the people and the postal department."

Campbell said he will look for a part-time job to keep occupied.

Job search workshop to focus on strategies

The Bethlehem Public Library, 451 Delaware Ave., Delmar, is offering a two-part Job Search Strategies workshop on Saturday, Sept. 12, and Sunday, Sept. 13, from 1 to 4 p.m. each day.

The free program will be led by Barry Schwartzberg and will cover job search methods, self-evaluation, the hidden job market, resumes and interviewing skills.

The program is funded by a grant from the Upper Hudson Library System. For information, call 439-9314.

during a storm, and O'Connor yelled for him to stay in the car until help arrived.

Campbell said he helped rescue a boy who had gotten his toe caught in the chain of his bicycle, taking control of the situation until the ambulance came.

"A lot of things happen," to letter carriers, he said.

Both retirees have witnessed many changes in the postal service in their respective careers. O'Connor, for example, said he started when an airmail stamp was 6 cents and postage for first-class mail was a whopping 3 cents. He also said he initially walked from the Delaware Avenue office to his route and back. It wasn't until later

V'ville heart recipient touched by community support

By Dev Tobin

Christian Scharl is home in Voorheesville after receiving a new heart last month, and he is overwhelmed by the support of the community.

"Chris doesn't know how to thank everybody for their support and encouragement," his mother, Kitty, said Monday. "The community's concern and love for Chris is just wonderful."

A concert in the village park organized by retired Voorheesville music teacher Frank McDermott Aug. 20 raised almost $3,000 from the more than 300 people in attendance.

"The response from the crowd was outstanding, and I was also most impressed that 67 musicians showed up to practice for three days and play the concert," McDermott said.

Besides current students and recent grads, the ad hoc orchestra included several adults including clarinetists Jack Dirrigl and Dr. Clifford Casey, Bethlehem Central music teacher Leonard Tobler (percussionist) and his wife Lydia (flutist), and McDermott's 33-year-old son Tom, a trombonist who came back to his hometown just for the concert.

"It was a really nice tribute to Chris, who played percussion for four years in the band," McDermott said of the 1990 graduate of Clayton A. Bouton High School.

"We all wanted to do something nice for a fine young man."

In an interview Monday, Kitty Scharl said that Chris, 20, is working on regaining his strength so he can return to Syracuse University to begin his junior year in the spring.

"He is undergoing physical and occupational therapy and catching up on eating and sleeping," she explained.

Chris said, "It's great to be home, but I'm still not back to normal."

Chris was afflicted with a cardiomyopathy of unknown origin that was destroying his heart muscle, Kitty Scharl told The Spotlight. "It could be a virus or something hereditary, the doctors just don't know," she added.

Chris received the heart of a 13-year-old Alabama boy in an Aug. 2 operation at Presbyterian University Hospital in Pittsburgh.

His father Karl brought a videotape of the concert to Pittsburgh Aug. 22 on his weekly visit. "It was great; we all just sat there and cried," Kitty said.

Besides the concert video, Chris also received "a stack of mail a foot high," Kitty said.

The money raised by the community goes to help pay for living expenses for Kitty, who stayed in Pittsburgh for the past month, and travel expenses for Karl on weekends. Insurance has so far covered most of the estimated $600,000 cost of the transplant operation, Kitty noted.

Karl and Kitty Scharl said that they want to get involved in encouraging organ donation.

"Chris was really lucky. Some people wait two years for a heart and he only waited a week," Kitty said, adding that, given the seriousness of Chris's disease, he could not have waited much longer.

"They are doing wonderful things with transplants, and one person, whether an infant or a senior citizen, can help so many others with organs, corneas and skin grafts," she said. "We want to let people know that the donor cards on their driver's licenses are really important."

Matters of Opinion

Face the facts on drinking

Beyond the tears and sorrow, the regrets and condolences following last week's dreadful crash that claimed one young life and scarred whole families, there lie some unhappy and uncomfortable facts.

First is that of the ruined lives within a circle even larger than the occupants of the ill-fated pick-up truck. The dreams and promise of the young people involved will always be clouded by a vision of imminent tragedy; their parents' hopes for them put aside by the issue of mere survival. And recognition by all that it was entirely unnecessary and avoidable.

Then there is the matter of a community's conscience and — very possibly — awareness of guilt. Drunken driving is one issue, and the law presumably will exact its toll.

The overriding issue, however, is that of unbridled use of alcohol illegally by young people. The dimensions of the issue were fully sketched out in The Spotlight's two-part series in July for which the headlines read:

"Alcohol, drugs part of growing up in Bethlehem."

"Affluence eases teen access to alcohol."

The Bethlehem community as a whole tolerates illegal, under-age consumption of alcohol by teenagers, and in some instances seemingly abets it. That is an inescapable conclusion to be drawn from our two articles. Some of the pertinent quotes from people on the firing line:

Editorials

"Everyone basically, I would imagine, drinks."

"There are incidents (!) which underscore the point that there is a problem."

"It's my view that in the high school it's less acceptable now than it was a couple of years ago to be a non-drinker."

"It's very easy for kids to get it."

"People are drinking younger."

"Parents need to be more involved with their kids. They should have some idea what's happening in their lives."

"The general motivation for kids who use it is just to have fun . . . They do it because they think it's fun and everyone else is doing it."

Beyond DWI is the use — and abuse — of alcohol, which in fact can impact young bodies and minds even without clash of metal on metal.

A community's failure to get its priorities straight is at the heart of the "problem" and of the "incidents" which follow. Is this community prepared to face facts rather than merely be appalled by the fruits of its failure?

Seeking 'the Connors seat'

The Assembly district that Dick Connors has represented so diligently for the past 16 years, is composed largely of residents of Albany, though geographically four towns are dominant by far. These are two of the "hill towns," Knox, and Berne; Guilderland; and New Scotland.

A native of that town and now a Guilderland resident, Jack Bailey, is the Republican candidate for the vacated seat (which a member of his party held briefly in the Republican renaissance of the late '60s).

But four Democrats are emerging from Albany, each claiming to be the rightful heir to Dick Connors' domain. Only one, incidentally, mentioned the interests of the towns. (All are employees of the State of New York.) Their statements of beliefs and credentials are published today on pages 8 and 9, and to Democrats in their district we offer their views as useful background for informed voting in the Sept. 15 primary.

As is our practice, The Spotlight will publish comparable statements by all candidates of both parties shortly before the Nov. 3 election.

Your cable picture

As Gabriel Heatter might have said, there's good news tonight on the cable TV front for some Bethlehem viewers.

The new agreement reached by the town for a 10-year renewal of Cablevision's franchise doesn't have something for everyone, but altogether it seems a rather decent deal.

In the first place, residents of several areas of the town now can expect to receive cable service fairly soon, and without cost for the extension into their neighborhoods, such as Van Wies Point. Right now, there are 7,153 cable subscribers in town, a number that has been growing only moderately. Inasmuch as Bethlehem now has approximately 9,160 dwellings, this indicates that nearly four out of five Bethlehem homes have cable service.

Though no one will personally benefit, Cablevision has agreed to increase Bethlehem's share of the company's revenues by two-thirds — from 3 to 5 percent. This apparently will enrich the town's treasury by some $36,000 yearly.

Beginning in perhaps less than a year, the number of channels available to local viewers will increase substantially — by 20 or more. Further enlargement of choices is possible in later years.

The entire Cablevision system is to be rebuilt, promising less chance of failures; and, finally, the BC schools and the library will receive upgraded equipment.

Unchanged is the 10 percent discount granted to senior-citizen subscribers for the basic offering (no pay channels permitted) and the $9.95 monthly rate offered to Medicaid patients. Nor is the monthly rate itself affected, for a local government has no control over cable charges.

Altogether, it seems to be a desirable contract, with thanks due to the negotiators, Steve Shaye, Stafford Davis, and Sheila Galvin, under Supervisor Ringler's guidance.

If you have questions or objections, take them to a public hearing on the new agreement next Wednesday night (Sept. 9) at Town Hall. It's your last big chance in the 20th century, for the next contract renewal will come up July 15, 2001.

Orphan's mite periled by foreclosure over tax

Editor, The Spotlight:

My name is Jennifer Luhmann. My husband Paul and I are legal guardians of an 11-year-old boy. His only living relatives are a 4-year-old half-sister in New Jersey and two half-sisters in Germany. Hence, we have become administrators of his estate.

The estate, which is the old "Student Prince" resort, consists of 135 acres of land, a stone house, and two other buildings in the Town of Westerlo.

The mother, having been on welfare for a number of years prior to her death, had not paid taxes on the property for three years.

Shortly after (3 to 6 months) her death, Iroquois Gas Systems Corp. came through the property by condemnation. (My husband and I had not yet been made administrators.)

Vox Pop

Iroquois Gas had offered a pittance for its easement, considering the damage done to the value of the property. Because of where they went through, they rendered the back two-thirds landlocked.

Because we are dealing with an "infant," we were not able to accept the Iroquois offer. This obligated us to sue the company.

We have just now, after two years, settled out of court with the gas company, allowing us to put the property on the market.

Needless to say, another two years' worth of taxes have accrued. In practically the same week the property was placed on the market, we learned that the taxes had been turned over by the Town of Westerlo.

Schools fail to realize need for cost priorities

Editor, The Spotlight:

Most residents of Bethlehem realize that if we are to make this a place where people of all walks of life and the elderly can afford to live, we will have to keep the cost of local government in line. This includes the cost of education.

Unfortunately, those who administer and run our schools do not seem to realize what high taxes do to our ability to keep this an open community. In the 1980s the costs of education here consistently outpaced the rate of inflation, even though our schools saw enrollments decline.

Now it appears that educational bureaucrats are receiving salaries that only a few would not envy. Last week's Spotlight reported that a mid-level educator, the assistant superintendent for educational programs and instruction, will receive a starting salary of $85,400 a year. Yikes! This is a salary that many college presidents would like to have. It is a salary that vice-presidents seldom have and mere deans would sell their secretaries for.

The Board of Education cuts the number of teachers and guidance supervisors and reduces arts instruction, equipment, library support, extra-curricular and inter-scholastic programs — and then pays somebody $85,400 a year to tell us we need more teachers and solid programs. It makes little sense.

I know that next week's Spotlight will be filled with outraged letters from educators implying that I am a senile grump who understands nothing about the education process. I simply wish that the Board of Education would fund traditional teaching, small classes, great art and music, solid physical education programs (have I left anything out?) and cut the costs of administration.

They're too long at the trough

Very possibly you have happened to note news stories recently reporting that a former Congressman from the Bronx, Mario Biaggi, is trying to win the Democratic nomination in a revised district that incorporates some of his old territory. There now is another Democrat holding the House of Representatives seat that had been his for nearly 20 years.

If you are unfamiliar with Mr. Biaggi's name and his career, you may be assuming that this is just another case of intra-party rivalry. But research your file of political memories and you are likely to come up with a sour recollection of Mario Biaggi's wheeling and dealing.

It was as a shrewd — but not endlessly clever — wheeler and dealer that Congressman Biaggi ended up in prison after two convictions on charges of selling the influence of his office and accepting favors improperly.

He served time on the convictions, but only a short time ago won his freedom — not on the merits of the case against him, but rather on the plea that deteriorating health made it inadvisable for him to be imprisoned any longer.

Apparently, the former Congressman considers the House of Representatives to be more favorable to his longevity than one of the minimum-security prisons.

For he hardly had time to order a new suit of civvies than he announced his candidacy for the office he had disgraced in the eyes of two juries. He resigned from the House before he would have been expelled.

There are words for this kind of shabby performance, and one of the kinder among them is chutzpah. Once, people would have called it brass. Arrogance is too gentle a description of the audacity that would be required to show one's face again to the constituents whose trust he betrayed. Shameless — perhaps that's the word I'm groping for.

Whatever you may choose to call this display of callous cynicism, it stands as a new definition for the American public's disgust with the political process today. The disgust reached such depths that it fostered a stillborn presidential candidacy of a man who lacked the credentials for that office but provided a vocabulary of adjectives and interjections that gave colorful expression to the nation's mood of revulsion.

The word "politician" has descended so far that it's now virtually a byword for the scorn and contempt that millions of people feel. Another form of the arrogance that breeds this bitter ridicule is the seniority credo of the true politician. He (or she) is a monument of such ego dimensions that he becomes irreplaceable in his own mind while becoming a cog in the seniority machine.

All this is behind the nationwide movement to limit terms of public officials. The movement would not exist if greedy politicians had not brought it about by overextending their stay at the trough. The porcine frame of mind is not limited to the U.S. Congress, of course. It appears everywhere.

If Jim Coyne's 16 years had been limited to four or eight, think how much better off he and we would be now. Erastus Corning was celebrated for his 41 years in office, but how much good he did the people of the City of Albany after, say, 1949 is certainly open to question. Ultimately his long exposure became something of a Ripley's curio that brought a certain kind of fame to Albany — almost like a beached whale at a resort. We recently had the case of Assemblyman Neil Kelleher who decided to quit after only 26 years in office — but in leaving tried to hand the ball off to his son. We had a Congressman in the area whose only boast, finally, was that he had hung on for three decades. The fallout from this year's discontent and redistricting, taking a toll among veteran legislators, is likely to generate some fresh breezes in various capitols (until the newcomers acquire some seniority).

This is the life to which Mario Biaggi, "hero cop" from the old days, aspires to return. He should be thankful to have escaped from Congress (the hard way) even before he escaped from the pen.

Hidden dangers in cars

A seriously important question is asked in connection with one of the articles in the September issue of "Hudson Valley" magazine:

"Is 'road-worthiness' as defined by the State of New York good enough for you and your family?"

The article, by Paul Luca, a lawyer and writer in New York City, is entitled "Hidden Dangers." Hair-raisingly, he details the justification for the title and the accompanying warning — for that is what the question on "road-worthiness" amounts to.

With gruesome description, he tells the background of an automobile accident (it really wasn't very accidental) that cost the lives of four children. They died in a burning, 11-year-old sedan which, having stopped to make a left turn on a two-lane road in Dutchess County, was rear-ended by an inexperienced, unobservant 17-year-old driver still on probation.

That driver's inattentiveness was the precipitating factor in the crash — but the author places the blame for the fiery deaths on the deteriorated underside of the car which the children's mother (the sedan's driver) had just bought on the recommendation of her live-in boyfriend, a mechanic at the garage which sold the car.

Many parts of the carriage were badly rusted, and among these were the straps holding the gasoline tank. They severed upon impact, the tank ruptured, and the fire started. The judgment of some inspecting experts is that the collision otherwise probably would not have been a fatal one.

Mr. Luca, the writer, draws a few pointed lessons from this dreadful event, focusing on the proposition that such an unsafe car can pass a state inspection — and that this should not be so. An investigator is quoted: "The driver must decide whether to take a chance with his or her life to operate a vehicle if it is rotted or has other unsafe conditions." He suggests that state conditions not covered by ordinary inspections. This might require an additional fee, but would yield a significant increase in safety." It is, indeed, impossible to read this article without deciding to have older cars meticulously inspected — and remedied or discarded.

To me, equally serious flaws in existing laws appear. The youthful driver, who "didn't see" the stopped car until she was upon it (at 47 mph), has not been charged under criminal law: "Inattentiveness does not constitute criminal negligence," says the Dutchess district attorney, and his office "couldn't speculate about why (she) failed to see" the stopped car ahead. As of the time of writing, it seemed "more than likely that her license will be suspended or revoked."

And the bereaved mother is suing her and her father for a total of $117 million.

Elsewhere in this issue you may well find interest in two parallel features: one will fill you in on more than a dozen antiquing spots in Columbia and Dutchess counties, including shops in Malden Bridge, Chatham, East Chatham, Valatie, and Hudson.

The second describes five B&B spots in Dutchess. All sound quite inviting, and certainly in the upper-scale among such hostleries. In the magazine's "Table Talk" pages, you will find an hilarious goof: reviewing the "hearty, home-cooked Polish fare" at Halina's Cafe and Deli, the critic placed it "across the street from the Co-hoes Common in Albany."

An article on walks along scenic trails includes among these Hannacroix Ravine and Bear Swamp in our area and the North Lake/South Lake cliff walk in Greene County.

And look for an informative, if rather brief, article on "The Incredible Shrinking Mortgage."

Recreating the universe to suit our lifestyle

The contributor of this Point of View, a Slingerlands resident, describes himself as "a sometimes economist, author, executive, and a sometimes none of these."

By Robert S. Herman

We are constantly reminded that "Life is what you make it." This may or may not be true. To a large extent our lives are conditioned by the nature of the Universe we live in. We are confined by its limitations.

Suppose we were able to recreate this Universe, to design one that would suit our lifestyle better. How would we do it differently?

Point of View

This is a formidable challenge. Here are some quick thoughts on what I might like. Other readers of The Spotlight may wish to add theirs.

I probably would begin with "god." Mine would be completely anthropomorphic and self-sustaining — anthropomorphic except for gender. It would be both female and male, not sexless but ambi-sexual. It would be anthropomorphic so people could easily identify with it. None of this "God as Wind" or even "God as Word." We need something more solid to relate to.

This "god" (never in capital letters to show it is one of "us," but in quotation marks to show it is a little different from "us") would be a mass of understanding and compassion and patience with a dash of whimsy added. It would be completely lacking in judgment, and it would have no memory. It is troublesome to have a "god" that judges, and even worse to have one which remembers what it has judged. This "god" would also be totally incapable of giving advice. It would be a bit mischievous. It would disdain any praise from us.

The Universe (always capitalized because it is the place we live), would be curved. On a curved surface we always meet each other — if we go far enough, and that is a pleasant arrangement. Earth would still be round. If it were square or rectangular, there would be danger of falling off. Besides, a rectangular Earth would look too much like a television screen. I'd leave it pretty much as it is, probably because I have no architectural vision.

There would be day and night. The nights would be brief, and their only purpose would be to allow us to see the moon more clearly. We need the moon for sentimental reasons, and because it does rhyme with June.

There would be heaven as well as Earth, but a strict rule against romanticizing about the heavens. That tends to degrade our beautiful Earth home.

People in my Universe would be structured pretty much as they are now. Again, my lack of architectural imagination. It would be useful to have a third eye planted in the back of our

Two genders would remain, their relationships being as unpredictable and exciting as they are now heads, but it might create too many problems. Our eyeglasses would all have to be changed, and besides, who wants to look backward?

For people who choose, they might be offered a special type of navel which they could set for any particular size or shape or weight they wish to be — fat or thin, hairy or hairless, tall or short. Our plumbing systems might also be redesigned to work more effectively, more aesthetically, and perhaps more quietly.

People might be designed so they would eat each others' waste materials. In that way we would be brought together constantly, would replenish and nurture each other, and not be forced to eat living animals or plants.

If this is too hard for the squeamish to take, people could be designed to feed on sunlight. The sunlight would be constantly available — an abundant source of energy and nourishment. At different times of the day the sunlight would come in different flavors. These would include vanilla, mocha walnut, and ginger. Also chocolate and peppermint. Any Universe without these tastes would be deficient.

UNIVERSE / page 8

If this failed, we might try eating our own words. In this way our nourishment would depend on ourselves, especially if each word had a different nutrient value.

Hot fudge sundaes would be a cure for cancer, and eating eggs and whipped cream would reduce cholesterol.

There would be two genders, probably female and male, and the relationships between the two would be exciting and unpredictable, the same as they are in our Universe.

Childbirth would have to be different. The present manner is the beginning of a possessiveness which warps the mother and father and is unfair to the child. Perhaps children could be ordered to suit particular tastes, much as we now order clothing or automobiles to match our personal preferences.

Children would enjoy being children. Adults would enjoy being adults. Neither would try to act like the other. There would be no important people. There would be no unimportant people either. Just people!

There would be no teachers, no swamis, no theologians. Teachers are essentially preachers or interpreters. We would have no need for either. Everyone would interpret to everyone else.

People would write more books of poetry, and fewer books about poetry.

It would be a World without numbers. This means no accountants, no engineers, no calendars, no adding machines, and no money. Without money, there would be no doctors, and with no doctors there would be no need for illness. And without money, there would be no pocketbooks, which are probably the most destructive of all our present weapons.

Without money, there would be no doctors, and with no doctors there would be no need for illness

There would be a language of listening, in addition to a language of talking. Too bad we have only the one in our present Universe!

The words "mine" and "yours" would be outlawed. There would be no word for "good" or for "bad," or for "always" or for "never." There would be no way of saying "should" in our language.

The wheel would be invented, but it would not occur to anyone to combine two or more for use on a vehicle. There would be no motors to mount the wheels on anyway.

All armaments including guns and bullets would be edible and nutritious. This would be of special benefit to the impoverished nations.

Every greeting would begin with "I love you. What can I do to help you?" Every answer would begin with "Thank you. Your love is necessary to my survival. I love you too. Perhaps I could be of help to you?"

Our Universe would have plants and animals. It would even have mosquitoes. But these would be different in one respect. They would not love people as ours do. Instead, they would have great disdain for human beings and would ignore them entirely.

There would be mountains and there would be oceans. A few tennis courts would be spread around, but no golf courses. (That's because golf courses take up so much space, but mainly because I play tennis and not golf.)

The Universe would unite caring and sharing, because each requires the other. It would also combine closeness and openness. Every person would be united with himself and with others. There would be no personal property to interfere with human relationships. The wedding vows would be something like this: "We accept each other now. We do not commit ourselves to the illusion of forever. But we don't rule out that beautiful possibility."

All clothing would button up the back so on one could ever get dressed or undressed alone.

Everyone would have time for everyone else. That would be a big change.

There would be no need for prisons. The death penalty would be applied only to anyone who had enough chutzpah to try to design a new Universe.

4 primary candidates offer statements on their positions

In the 104th Assembly District, which includes the Town of New Scotland (as well as the towns of Knox, Berne, Guilderland, and much of the city of Albany), four Democratic candidates for their party's nomination are on the ballot in the Sept. 15 primary election.

They are: Helen Desfosses, Josie Herrick, Joseph P. Sullivan, and John J. McEneny.

On this page and the page opposite, The Spotlight is publishing the information provided by each of them in support of their candidacies. This is in keeping with our tradition of publishing such statements by candidates in primary and general elections.

A related commentary is also published today in our editorial columns on page 6.

By Helen Desfosses

The 104th A.D. is not just the City of Albany. All too often, we forget that New Scotland, Berne, Knox, and Guilderland are thriving areas which add to the complexity of issues facing this Assembly district.

My candidacy is based on four survival issues: jobs, economic development, access to health care, and education—all crucial concerns for each of us. But there are concerns specific to our towns that must also be addressed.

- Establish a dedicated solid-waste management fund with revenues from all taxes on recyclable and disposable materials. This includes creating new markets for recyclable goods.

- Town governments are unnecessarily burdened by state mandates because county government shifts the costs of these mandates onto the shoulders of local taxpayers. Both county and town governments must be given mandate relief in order to prevent soaring costs and cuts in essential services.

- Preserve current levels of revenue sharing to help hold local taxes at their present level.

- Include a local road and bridge component to a dedicated highway fund to ensure the safety of our local infrastructure.

- Establish a town-based Water Resource Commission to coherently address the water needs and problems of our areas.

In order to address these and other issues, I have proposed the formation of a Capital District Legislative Delegation. With this delegation, the collective strength of our state legislators can be harnessed.

Economic development and job creation are crucial to the survival of our district. When elected, I will bring local and state officials together to guarantee that the capital region receives its fair share of the "Jobs for a New, New York Bond Act."

In a time of recession, when many of us are without steady or full-time work, it is imperative that the state takes action to guarantee universal access to quality health care. I support and will sponsor New York Health, a public insurance/private provider health care plan that will save taxpayers, government, and business millions of dollars a year.

Our future depends upon quality education today. As an educator, I have seen the future of young people held hostage by budget cuts at local school districts and universities. Education must be made a priority.

Democratic aspirants for Assembly seat state views

By Josie Herrick

On Tuesday, Sept. 15, Democratic voters in the 104th Assembly District will have an important decision to make. For the first time in 16 years, someone other than Dick Conners will represent our interests at the State Capitol—and the person voters choose on Sept. 15 is likely to be the new Assembly member elected in November.

I am running for this office because of my commitment to public service and open, accessible government that serves people's needs.

I am committed to:

Creating and implementing jobs programs to put New York State back to work and to get our economy going again.

Expanding access to quality health care services through enactment of New York Health.

Preserving a woman's right to reproductive choice.

Most importantly, to being available and accessible to all the people I represent.

When you decide who can best represent you, I ask that you consider experience as one of the most important factors in making your decision. The New York State Assembly is not an academic debating society where all it takes to win a point is a good argument. It's a diverse group of individuals with different priorities and varying agendas. I know. I've worked in the Assembly as a senior legislative staffer for over 13 years. I've learned how to make the system work and I know what must change.

Next year's Legislature will

By Joseph P. Sullivan

You are in a unique position to play a pivotal role in deciding who shall be the next member of the Assembly, 104th District. You are the swing vote in an extremely close four-way race. To play this role it is essential that you turn out in large numbers and vote for me.

Democrats will find my name on the voting machine, Row D. Conservatives must write in my name exactly (Joseph P. Sullivan). Ask election inspectors if you require assistance.

Democracy is in danger. Public offices are literally for sale to the wealthy and candidates financed by special interest groups. Ordinary people must participate and regain control of our government.

My campaign offers you that opportunity. It is a clear example of the reforms needed in political campaigns. I do not intend to raise/spend more than $1,000. I include a significant number of new faces. In a large class of freshmen, my experience—which is unmatched by any of my opponents—will be a significant advantage to constituents I represent.

My final pledge to you is my independence. If elected I will be grateful to my supporters and volunteers, and I will equally represent all of my constituents. I will not be beholden to party bosses or political factions.

If you elect me to the Assembly you'll get an independent, progressive Democrat, working full time, with the experience to get things done.

have no headquarters, expensive media ads, glossy brochures or paid political consultants.

Instead I present you with a candidate who has the desire, ability, experience and perspective to effectively represent you in the State Legislature. I am a US Navy veteran, AARP member, and president of a Neighborhood Association. I have 17 years sound experience in state government as a Senate staffer and administrator. Democrats and Republicans in both houses respect me for my ability to rise above partisanship in playing a key role in enactment of legislation that has benefited veterans and farmers and addressed environmental concerns.

In contrast to the empty signs and slogans and deceptive media ads of my foes I offer you a specific 16-point platform which includes: water/farmland conservation, saving family farms, urban/rural reforestation, improving indoor air quality for public/private sector office workers, lifelong learning for all, saving Albany's 210 Armor Unit (NYARNG), campaign/election law reform and respect for life.

As Assembly member I will ask to serve on the aging, agriculture, veterans, environmental conservation and higher education committee.

Thanks to The Spotlight for providing all candidates with an opportunity to get their messages out. This is a major step forward in campaign reform.

By John J. McEneny

Last fall, with the help of other citizens who felt the need for change in the Democratic party and the County Legislature, I took on the party organization, sued the Board of Elections over a disputed vote, and won an historic write-in election. Certainly these are not the actions of a "part-insider" or an example of "business as usual."

Although elected as an independent, I firmly believe that the Democratic party is the "party of the people" and still offers the best hope for working men and women and their families.

For 27 years I have worked in every level of government in human services, jobs, training, and economic development. I've seen firsthand the agony and stress New Yorkers are suffering from unemployment, underemployment, and spiraling health costs. As chief of staff for Assemblyman Dick Conners, I'm well familiar with the need for health insurance reform like New York Health that protects all of our citizens regardless of age, sex, or occupation.

We need quality, affordable eldercare and day care so that our people do not have to choose between work and family.

New York's future is with our young. We need to embrace the new technologies, which will rebuild New York's manufacturing base and give us the competitive work force needed to survive in a global economy. Just as we need the $800 million bond act to rebuild our infrastructure, so, too, we must invest in our precious human resources.

New York must stop over-regulating its business and its governments. We need to provide leadership and incentives to consolidate government services and encourage public/private partnerships in business and in the classroom.

Instead of investing in higher education we have all but eliminated the TAP program, cut funding to all colleges, and now give Regents scholarships that have no value. By neglecting education, we are selling our future to achieve short-term goals that will soon be forgotten.

This state's $18-billion tourist industry — most of whose resources are located in areas of highest unemployment — is languishing. The State government is only paying lip-service to tourism. "I Love New York" is a shadow of its former self. This trend must be reversed.

There can be no compromise on the safety of our people or the protection of their environment. Open space and land-based occupations need protection now, before Upstate New York becomes the next Long Island.

I would appreciate the opportunity to continue working on your behalf. Please vote on Sept. 15. Remember, one vote can make a difference!

Westerlo to Albany County. They are now giving the estate two months to come up with $28,000 before they foreclose and sell at auction.

We have $18,000 from the gas company settlement to put toward the taxes. The county, however, is refusing anything other than payment in full.

(There are only minor children involved in this estate, and no source of funds other than the estate. Because of the circumstances there was no way this estate could have progressed any faster toward satisfaction of its debt.)

I find it such a travesty that minor children could lose their legacy in this manner.

The estate's market value is $275,000. Everyone but the children wins if it goes to auction. Once sold for taxes, the county has its money.

There seems to be no way to stop the foreclosure other than payment in full. (Oh, I forgot — getting the property sold in two months!)

As a lay person, I believe that all we need is to buy a little legal time. I believe that $18,000 shows a wonderful intent to pay.

Of course, I am concerned for all the children involved here. But my bottom line is the "baby" I have here, living in our house, oblivious to what's going on, having lost his parents, standing to lose his estate, and hope for a better future, which he so rightfully deserves!

In putting all this down on

Must orphaned children lose their legacy in this way?

paper, I am getting a little emotional. I am writing in the prayerful hope that The Spotlight can be helpful in this dilemma.

I apologize for the length of this letter, and thank you profusely for taking the time to read it.

Any suggestions will be greatly appreciated. I am willing to go to bat any way I can.

TV special on Friday will expose child abuse and how it starts

Editor, The Spotlight:

Child abuse and neglect is "a national emergency" according to the U.S. Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect. In 1991, there were reports of 2.6 million abused or neglected children in our country; few pediatric problems are more prevalent... hundreds of thousands of children starved and abandoned, burned and severely beaten, raped and sodomized, berated and belittled. And we spend billions of dollars every year on programs that deal with the results of the nation's failure to prevent and treat child abuse and neglect.

Dealing with this national emergency will take a concerted, nationwide response, so we welcome the rather extraordinary Sept. 4 media event when three national networks — NBC, CBS and PBS — simultaneously broadcast Scared Silent: Exposing and Ending Child Abuse. (ABC will air the program on Sunday, Sept. 6.) Hosted by Oprah Winfrey, the one-hour special presents a half-dozen true stories of child abuse and profiles both victims and perpetrators to show first-hand how abuse starts and how it can be stopped.

Anne Cohn Donnelly, executive director of the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse (NCPCA), has called Scared Silent "an extremely powerful, important, and positive piece which could easily stir this country to greater action about child abuse."

We expect that after seeing Scared Silent, many people will reach out for help, as victims and adult survivors of child abuse. Many will want to find help for children and families they know. And many will look for ways they can prevent child abuse and neglect in their own communities.

The Prevention Information Resource Center (PIRC) will be a valuable resource for those people in New York State. PIRC can be called toll-free, at 1-800-342-7472, for information about child abuse and neglect and for referrals to local services and organizations. A program of the Federation on Child Abuse and Neglect, the New York State Chapter of NCPCA, the PIRC has served parents, professionals, and other concerned citizens of New York for five years and is the only statewide toll-free service dedicated to preventing child abuse and neglect.

However, PIRC should not be confused with the state's child abuse reporting hotline. People who know a child who is being abused or neglected should call the hotline (the NYS Child Abuse and Maltreatment Reporting Center) at 1-800-342-3720. Their reports will be relayed to the appropriate county's Child Protective Services to investigate and take action to protect the children.

People who want to do something to prevent child abuse and neglect may consider taking part in the federation's "Promises for Parents" pledge campaign. Really preventing abuse means alleviating parents' problems, helping them deal with stresses, before they reach a breaking point and

'Promises for Parents' pledge campaign is offered to people who want to do something preventative are at risk of hurting their children. This pledge campaign does not ask for money. Rather, it asks for individuals' promises that they will help parents in tangible, concrete ways, things that good neighbors and friends used to do. Individuals or organizations who would like to take part in the campaign may call the Federation at 1-800-342-7472 to have information about "Promises for Parents" mailed to them.

For those who would like to become more involved in prevention, the Federation can provide information and referrals to local child abuse task forces and other volunteer opportunities in their counties.

We invite every person in New York State who agrees with us that "It Shouldn't Hurt to Be a Child" to join us in taking action to prevent further abuse and neglect of children.

Trek tops Boy Scout trip

By Michele Bintz

Twenty-one boys from three Boy Scout troops in Bethlehem and New Scotland took part in the 1992 Twin Rivers Council Philmont Expedition this summer.

Scouts and leaders from Troop 81 in Selkirk were Roger Augar, Jay Engel, Jon Engel, Darrin Everleth, Todd Everleth, Tim Green, Alan Kampcik, Ken Layman, Kerry Layman, Bill McDonald Jr., Bill McDonald Sr., Chris Moon, Dudley Moon, Rob Selover, Sean Selover and Will Wilkinson.

Scouts from Troop 89 in Clarksville included Bob Euler, Steve Euler, Adam Hornick and Bill Smith, and, from Troop 58 in Elsmere, Bob Geurtze.

The contingent of 48 scouts and leaders from 8 counties traveled by train to La Junta, Colo., where they visited the Koshare Indian Reservation and museum and Old Bents Fort. They then traveled by bus to Cimarron, N.M., for a 12-day adventure at the Philmont Scout Ranch. With more than 214 square miles of land in the Sangre de Cristo mountains, Philmont is the largest organized camping area in the world.

At Philmont, the boys were divided into six crews. Each crew embarked on a backpacking trek covering 60 to 85 miles in a 10-day period, stopping each day at a different camp.

The Scouts studied many skills, including homesteading, conservation, astronomy, black powder rifle shooting, panning for gold and burro packing. The trek took them 12,441 feet above sea level to the top of Baldy Mountain.

After completing the trek, each Scout and leader received the coveted Philmont arrowhead patch. Those scouts completing 10 hours of trail work received the 50-miler award.

Bill McDonald Sr., council tour guide and trip leader, said, "This trip took two years to plan and is the first of many trips to be made by the Twin Rivers Boy Scout Council."

Teen charged with DWI □ Eulogy

By Dev Tobin

A Delmar girl is dead, and a Delmar boy faces charges of criminally negligent homicide and driving while intoxicated after a late-night accident Aug. 26 in Guilderland.

Erin Cox, 16, of 22 Haddington Lane, died from massive head trauma after she was ejected from the rear of a pickup truck driven by Christopher Arnold, 17, of 13 Bedell Ave.

The truck, with three people in the back and two inside, was travelling north on Route 155 near Wormer Road in Guilderland at a high rate of speed around 11:15 p.m. when Arnold lost control, crossed into the southbound lane, then swerved back across the northbound lane and went off the road into a ditch, according to State Police Senior Investigator Kevin Tuffey.

Arnold was treated and released for minor injuries at Albany Medical Center Hospital, where a blood test on his blood alcohol content was performed. He is due in Guilderland Town Court tomorrow (Thursday) for arraignment on the charges.

Three other passengers in the truck, all youths from the Bethlehem area, suffered injuries serious enough to require hospitalization.

The front-seat passenger, Daniel O'Brien, 17, of 16 Snowden Ave., Delmar, suffered a fractured skull and was in fair condition at the medical center as of Monday. Mark Herzog, 17, of Bethlehem Terrace Apartments, suffered a broken leg and internal injuries after his ejection from the back of the truck. He was also in fair condition on Monday.

Also ejected was the dead girl's cousin, Keri Cox, 15, of 28 Commonwealth Drive, Glenmont, who suffered internal injuries and was in fair condition at St. Peter's Hospital Monday following surgery Friday.

Arnold was charged with DWI based on accounts of the accident and his demeanor at the scene, according to Assistant District Attorney Cheryl Coleman. The results of the blood test should be available before tomorrow's arraignment, she added.

The case will likely go before the grand jury in the next two weeks.

"You shouldn't consider the current charges as final, because the grand jury will ultimately decide what charges Mr. Arnold will face," Coleman told The Spotlight.

No plea bargain will be accepted without the consent of the victims' families, Coleman emphasized.

Erin's mother Corinne Cox said she "most definitely" wants to be involved in the criminal justice process.

Erin's death robbed the world of "a real giver," according to her mother.

"She donated a quilt she had made to the Farano Center for children with AIDS," Corinne Cox recalled. "She told me she was very impressed with the center, and felt so bad for the babies there."

Erin's other volunteer work included helping out at the Equinox Thanksgiving dinner and cooking for the kids at the Bethlehem First United Methodist Church's day care center.

Corinne Cox said she grew concerned Wednesday when Erin had not returned home by her 11 p.m. curfew.

"My biggest fear was her walking home along the pipeline path and running into some dangerous person," she said. "After 11:15, I went to see if she was still at Haggerty's, where she said she was going for the teen karaoke. I don't believe in kids hanging out, and Haggerty's is somewhat supervised."

Haggerty's has conducted teen nights on Wednesdays over the summer where no alcohol is served.

When Cox returned to her Haddington Lane home, two Bethlehem police officers were there with the news of her daughter's death in the accident.

Apostle's creed — the pen is mightier...

By Mike Larabee

Newtonville businessman Chris Apostle says his only hope left is the power of the pen.

Though Apostle's hopes for an upstart primary victory over state Senator Howard Nolan were dashed by a court decision last week, the challenger said he may wage a write-in campaign to unseat the longtime incumbent.

On Tuesday, Aug 25, the state's Appellate Division upheld an earlier court decision that invalidated almost 900 Apostle petition signatures, leaving the candidate with less than the 500 he needed to stay on the Sept. 15 primary ballot. Supreme Court Justice Lawrence E. Kahn had ruled previously that 61 Apostle petition pages were invalid because they did not contain the assembly district of the person who collected the signatures.

While the decision effectively ends his attempt to wrestle the

Chris Apostle

Democratic Party line from the nine-term incumbent, Apostle, who served as local coordinator for Paul Tsongas' presidential campaign this year, said he hasn't ruled out continuing efforts to win Albany County's 42nd Senate District seat this November in unconventional fashion.

"I am leaving the door open for a possible write-in campaign," he said. "I wanted to be in this until the end, I didn't expect not to be on the ballot."

While conceding a write-in campaign would be a difficult uphill battle, he said he'll make the run if encouraged to do so by his supporters.

"I'm in favor of it, because I think we could do it," he said.

The five-member Appellate panel ruled unanimously against Apostle's appeal to overturn the Kahn decision. Since the original ballot challenge was brought by Town Democratic Committee Chairwoman Betty Momrow, Apostle argued, it was invalid because state election law precludes the chairs of party committees from bringing a ballot objection.

Momrow's attorney had countered that the town Democratic Committee was never officially formed and ratified, and Momrow, therefore, is technically not a committee chair and could initiate the challenge.

While Apostle still has the option of taking his primary case to the state's Court of Appeals, he said the move would be "like banging his head against a wall" because of the high cost of legal fees and the slim likelihood a new action would succeed.

If Apostle decides to mount a write-in campaign, he'll face not only Nolan but the GOP nominee Daniel A. Ehring of Delmar as well. Nolan, who in 1990 won reelection over Republican Mark Stuart by more than 2 to 1 margin, said he views Apostle's ballot troubles as a straightforward matter of election law.

"There are certain rules you have to play by and he obviously didn't conform to the rules," Nolan said.

Pressure screenings promote healthy hearts

By Susan Graves

A program that began over 17 years ago is still going strong in Bethlehem.

Former Town Board member Ruth Bickel, who was appointed to the board in 1975, said she was looking to do something "of a positive nature that would provide a worthwhile service to the community."

Blood pressure screenings turned out to be the perfect project for Bickel, who is responsible for launching the program in Bethlehem. "It started out with a bang," she said, with about 400 to 500 people.

The blood screenings were originally done at a former coffee house on Adams Street, now occupied by The Spotlight.

Caroline Wirth, outreach staffer for Bethlehem Senior Services, said the program isn't designed to give medical advice, but rather to monitor blood pressure readings and provide information to the community. "We don't give medical advice," but rather refer people with high readings to their physicians.

Retired physician Dr. Bill Blackmore, who participates in the all-volunteer program, concurs. "We who take blood pressure readings are not practicing medicine or giving advice," he said. "All we are doing is taking blood pressure readings and telling what it is."

When readings are high or erratic, patients are referred to their own physicians, Wirth said.

In 1991, 1,380 blood pressure screenings were taken. There were 115 referrals for unusual situations, Wirth said.

The blood pressure readings are open to all regardless of age, and there are no residency requirements.

Initially, the equipment was borrowed from the American Heart Association, but eventually the town bought its own.

The screenings are held on the third Tuesday of every month except May, July and August. Screenings are from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Town Hall on Delaware Avenue.

Nutritionist Navee Pohlsande is also available at the screenings to offer basic, simple suggestions about nutrition.

Dr. Blackmore said it is very important for everyone to have his blood pressure monitored. "Hypertension, in my opinion, is an area where there is excellent therapy," and there are many drugs available to control hypertension, he said.

Wirth said the six medical and four clerical volunteers are responsible for the screening program's success. "It wouldn't be possible without the wonderful cooperation of volunteers."

Dr. Bill Blackmore takes Mildred Hammes' blood pressure, which turns out to be right on target. Hammes is a longstanding volunteer who helps out with the screening program.

Views On Dental Health

Dr. Virginia Plaisted, D.D.S.

THE RULE OF THREE

Any teeth are susceptible to decay if they meet three conditions. You've got to have bacteria in your mouth, eat foods with sugar in them, and have a tooth that's susceptible to the decay attack.

Unfortunately, these are conditions that everyone can meet. Bacteria thrive on the human mouth. And the bacteria that love to eat teeth are in ecstasy. Your mouth is their heaven.

Even if you don't eat candy, a lot of foods have sugar in them. And who wants to give up eating apple pie?

As for susceptible teeth, very few can withstand the constant barrage of bacteria that feast on foods with sugar. Tooth enamel is the hardest substance in the human body. But the bacteria that feed on teeth create acid. Without good oral hygiene and regular dental care, the acid soon breaks down the enamel, causing cavities. Unstopped, it soon finds its way to the tooth's pulp and can destroy the tooth completely.

Taking good care of your teeth, with regular dental checkups, can change "Rule of Three" to "Cavity-Free."

The Spotlight remembers 10 years ago

In 1982, these stories were making headlines in The Spotlight.

- Nine-year-old Mirinda Staats from South Bethlehem was named Most Promising New Female Vocalist at the Colorado Country Music Convention in Denver.

- For the first seven months of the year, Bethlehem police recorded 155 drunk driving arrests, compared to 69 in the same period of 1981. Sgt. Richard Vanderbilt noted that less than 30 percent of those arrested are town residents "because so many people from other areas use our roads to get where they're going."

- Bethlehem Central's new football coach, John Sodergen, said he was relying on senior starters Pete Kelly, Rich Jadick, Lenny Klink, Dennis Dottino and Chris Braga to help reverse the Eagles' three-year slide from the top of the Suburban Council standings.

Five Rivers seeks adult volunteers

Five Rivers Environmental Education Center is seeking volunteers to teach fall guided lessons for school classes and other youth groups.

The lessons, each lasting two hours, are for pupils in kindergarten through eighth-grade and cover topics such as "Exploring the Outdoors," "Forest Life" and "World of the Pond."

The program runs during school hours for groups of 15 or fewer children. All volunteers will receive training from center naturalists, beginning Tuesday, Sept. 9, at 9:15 a.m.

To apply to be a volunteer, call Anita Sanchez or Joanne Gwinn at 475-0291.

Finley wins art award at summer program

Andrew Finley, a senior at Bethlehem Central High School, recently won an award for excellence in oil painting after participating in the Sage Summer Art 1992 program.

The monthlong program is offered to high school students who want the experience of working creatively under the supervision of professional artists.

Ag districts can reduce farm taxes

By Mel Hyman

Local farmers worried about the effects of Homestead legislation passed by the Bethlehem Town Board may make their lives easier by joining an agricultural district next spring.

Under Homestead legislation approved in March, farms and businesses in town could be taxed at a higher rate than residential properties.

But, thanks to new state guidelines signed into law by Gov. Mario Cuomo, farmland and farm-related buildings located within the borders of an agricultural district can be classified residential instead of commercial for taxing purposes.

Currently, only eight of the 65 or so farms left in Bethlehem belong to an agricultural district.

Agricultural district borders, which are redrawn every five years, will be up for review and revision in February, according to Town Assessor Brian Lastra.

The last time district lines were redrawn in 1988, only a handful of Bethlehem farmers joined because "taxes were low enough so that most of them didn't have any real incentive" for joining, Lastra said.

"I think you'll see a lot more interest on the part of farmers when the ag districts come up for renewal again," he said.

It was the town's changeover to full valuation assessment which made it a new ball game, he added. A certain percentage of farmers are bound to see their taxes rise as a result.

Quite a few farmers already benefit from a partial tax break by qualifying for an agricultural assessment. But, unless they belong to an agricultural district, they will not be sheltered from the effects of Homestead.

The status of the Homestead provision in Bethlehem is still up in the air as some Town Board members have hinted they might vote to rescind the legislation before year's end.

Local dairy farmer Douglas LaGrange of Echo-Glen Farms in Leura Bush told the Spotlight recently that unless some relief was provided, the Homestead provision as passed by the Town Board could prompt some farmers to throw in the towel and sell off all or part of their holdings.

IT'S THE LAW INTOXICATION AND LIABILITY

By Joseph R. Cardamone, Esq.

We have all become aware of the serious consequences that can occur when someone drives a motor vehicle while intoxicated. As we all know, such conduct can give rise to various criminal charges as well as sanction from the Department of Motor Vehicles.

There are other possible consequences of drinking and driving which are not as readily apparent or as widely known; however, in the area of personal injury litigation they can be of great importance.

New York State, as with many other states, has, by statute, created the civil liability of persons who sell alcoholic beverages to the public. This liability is defined in section 11-101 of the General Obligations Law and is commonly known as the Dram Shop Act.

The Dram Shop Act allows people who have sustained an injury or been damaged in some way by an intoxicated person to seek compensation from anyone who caused or contributed to that person's intoxication by unlawfully selling him alcoholic beverages. This liability most often arises in the operation of a motor vehicle by an intoxicated person.

This law holds not only the owner of the tavern liable but also the bartender or anyone employed by the tavern who played any role in serving drinks to the intoxicated driver. Liquor stores, caterers and any other commercial seller of alcoholic beverages can also be held liable. The law does require that there be a commercial setting in which the alcoholic beverage is sold for a profit.

In essence, anyone who is injured by an intoxicated driver can make a claim for damages against the tavern or other commercial seller that served the driver alcohol. The intoxicated driver cannot make a claim for his own injuries; however, his family can make a claim for loss of support due to his injuries or death. A passenger in the vehicle with the intoxicated driver can also make a claim for his injuries even if the passenger had been drinking and was intoxicated as long as he did not buy drinks for the driver or encourage the driver to drink.

The tavern owner or other commercial seller can be held liable for all damages that flow from the injuries caused by the intoxicated driver, including pain and suffering, lost wages and medical expenses of the injured party; emotional distress even if the party received no physical injuries and was never in any physical danger; and punitive damages.

In addition to the liability created by the commercial sale of alcoholic beverages, New York State has also created a social host liability. This is contained in section 11-100 of the General Obligations Law. Under this statute a person can be held liable for the injuries sustained by anyone as a result of the intoxication of a minor if that person knowingly causes such intoxication by furnishing or assisting in the procuring of alcoholic beverages to someone he knows or should know is a minor. Thus private individuals can become liable for the actions of minors who they allow or help to become intoxicated.

The Law Office of Joseph R. Cardamone is available to answer questions concerning personal injury claims or other areas of the law. Please call 393-6814.

If you have a legal question, mail your questions to "It's the Law," Spotlight Newspapers, 125 Adams Street, Delmar, N.Y. 12054.

Justice candidate faces challenge to petitions

By Mel Hyman

Tom Dexter's independent campaign for Bethlehem Town Justice is running into static before it's even gotten off the ground.

As the only non-lawyer in the race, Dexter finds himself dueling with the sharpened sabre of Slingerlands attorney Francis V. Carine, a former law associate of incumbent GOP Town Justice Peter Bishko. Carine, who describes himself as semi-retired, filed an objection to Dexter's nominating petitions last week with the Albany County Board of Elections.

Dexter submitted 756 signatures for his independent Justice Party line last Wednesday. Only 600 valid signatures were needed. Carine said he plans to scrutinize Dexter's petitions more closely this week and added there are "indications that discrepancies and errors exist."

Dexter was upset with the attempt to deny him ballot access. "The voters of this town should be outraged that the lawyer-dominated Republican machine chooses to deny citizens the opportunity to vote in November for a well-qualified candidate," he said. "With all their power and money, I can't for the life of me imagine what they're worried about."

Carine refused to engage in verbal fisticuffs with Dexter and said his only reason for challenging the petitions was that he felt Bishko was a superior candidate. "I was associated with (Bishko) over in Colonie for many years. He's a no-nonsense guy and the best qualified candidate for the job."

Bishko was appointed by the Republican-dominated Town Board in January to fill the vacancy created when Justice Roger Fritts left to become an Albany County public defender. Democrat John Dorfman, who waged an unsuccessful race for the $25,580-a-year post last year, is running again.

Dexter, 59, has touted his extensive background in criminal justice as proof of his qualifications. He has served as a probation officer in four counties, a county probation director and a family court administrator.

In addition, he has served as executive director of Community Corrections, district supervisor of Berkshire Farm Youth Services, deputy state director of probation and assistant deputy state commissioner of correctional services.

Dexter promises to work full-time as town justice and to conduct outreach activities to familiarize the community with the criminal justice system on the local level.

Overdue fine increase slated Sept. 8 Artist's work on display

A time-honored way libraries encourage borrowers to return materials on time is by assessing overdue fines.

Libraries are helped in the effort by New York state which has made the keeping of overdue materials for more than 30 days a violation of the State Education Law as an unclassified misdemeanor, punishable by up to six months in jail or a fine of up to $25.

The library is grateful that most borrowers do return materials promptly, making it possible for others to use or borrow and enjoy them.

For many years the fine for an overdue children's book has been two cents per day. On Sept. 8, the fine will be increased to five cents, the same as for adult books.

Even though five cents per day does not pay the cost of maintaining the records necessary for overdue materials, the change brings the fine into conformity with other local libraries that share the automated circulation system.

Since Bethlehem, like other libraries, allows materials to be returned to any area library, an overdue children's book will be charged the same amount, regardless of where returned.

In an effort to be good stewards, the library has in recent years referred chronically delinquent borrowers to a collection agency.

This summer the library offered a free fines month if the long overdue materials were returned. More than $680 worth of long overdue materials were returned with that offer.

"While it is true that card holders lose their borrowing privileges when materials charged out to them are overdue, the primary interest of the library is return of the materials, not the collection of fines or penalizing anyone," says Library Director Barbara Mladinov. "We simply want our materials back, so that others may use them. All card holders and library users should have full access to the wealth of materials owned by the library."

The library will be closed on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, Sept. 5, 6 and 7 for the Labor Day holiday. Also in September, the library will return to a seven day week service schedule, beginning on Sunday, Sept. 13.

Berne bridge to close for construction work

The bridge carrying County Route 2 over the Fox Creek in Berne will be closed to traffic beginning today, Sept. 2, according to the Albany County Department of Public Works.

The closing will allow the replacement of the decaying bridge by the county. The department estimates the work will take approximately 10 weeks.

A detour will be supplied and maintained as part of the project.

Delmar woman pleads guilty in June accident on Route 85

A Delmar woman faces jail time after causing a two-car accident on June 27 in which a Cazenovia couple sustained serious injuries.

Patricia Windelspecht, 44, of 12 Longwood Drive, pleaded guilty in Albany County Court to a felony charge of second-degree vehicular assault and a misdemeanor charge of driving while intoxicated.

The accident occurred in Bethlehem at 4:30 p.m. on Saturday, June 27, on Route 85 near Blessing Road. Under a plea bargain agreement, Windelspecht will receive six months in jail and five years' probation. Her driving license will be suspended for the duration of probation.

The plea bargain was entered into with the consent of the victims, said Cheryl Coleman, an assistant Albany County district attorney.

Edward Holly, 31, suffered serious, multiple leg fractures and his wife was operated on for internal injuries, Coleman noted.

Windelspecht is free on bail pending her formal sentencing on Sept. 22 before state Supreme Court Justice Thomas W. Keegan.

Bethlehem Recycling Corner

By Sharon Fisher, town recycling coordinator

Composting is a practical way to handle yard waste and some food wastes by returning these organics to the soil in a form which provides extra nutrients for plant life.

The compost pile is a teeming microbiological farm of bacteria, fungi and protozoans and, later, centipedes, beetles and earthworms which all do their part to break down the plant matter into a dark rich additive.

Anything that was once live plant matter can be composted. Leaves, grass clippings, weeds, garden plants and small woody wastes are the best items.

Food items can be added if care is taken to omit those organic things which tend to attract pest animals. For example, meat, bones, fish, fatty food, cheese, salad dressing and leftover cooking oil should never be put in the compost heap. Adding these items attracts dogs and wild animals into the area and can cause odor during decomposition.

Composting time can be shortened if items are in the smallest pieces possible.

For example, if a lawn is clipped frequently, short clippings are created which can be left on the lawn because they will break down rapidly and produce nitrogen. If clippings are long and heavy they need to be removed and placed elsewhere.

Compost should be contained in an area such as a garbage can, a concrete block square, a chicken wire or wood fence, or even a hole in the ground. If food waste is composted, a layer of soil should be added on top. The soil not only keeps down odors but also adds the microbes needed to break down the organic matter.

The ideal compost heap contains layers of ingredients. Green material, such as grass clippings, provides nitrogen. Brown items, such as dry leaves, chipped twigs and branches are bulking agents or the carbon source. Inoculants are compost, garden soil and manure. If fruit and vegetable wastes are added, that is the fourth layer in this biodegradable concoction.

Microbiological activity, such as composting, requires air and water. Compost should be turned about every two to three weeks to get air pockets inside and to evenly distribute the moisture content.

The faster the composting, the hotter the pile will be. When piles are turned, steam should be visible. The final result will be dark, rich, soil-like material to mix into the garden.

SPORTS

Bethlehem soccer club continues to flourish

The Bethlehem Soccer Club is gearing up for the fall Intracub season.

Nearly 800 children and more than 50 volunteer coaches have been divided into teams, which will practice and play games for eight weeks this fall at the Elm Avenue Park.

Hundreds of parents are given tasks throughout the season such as field lining, coffee and doughnut sales and fundraising.

The fall Intracub program includes children born from 1979 through 1988. It is a fun, noncompetitive environment for children to learn the sport and improve their skills season to season.

Many children who come to love the sport and wish to play competitively join the soccer club's travel program. Registration times for the travel teams are Sunday, Sept. 13 and Saturday, Sept. 19 from 1 to 4 p.m. at the Bethlehem Town Hall.

All girls and boys must bring a photo for ID purposes or it can be taken at registration time for a $1 dollar fee. Also needed is a commitment level form signed by player and parent.

The travel registration fee will be about $80. You must register before trying out. Tryout dates will be announced at registration.

The Bethlehem under-12 girls travel team completed a highly successful 1992 spring season by finishing first in the A Division of the Capital District Youth Soccer League. The team had a 9-1 record with two ties.

They scored 39 goals, while limiting the opposition to eight goals for the entire season.

Bethlehem's under-8 travel team took first place in the league's C Division with a record of 11-0 with one tie coming against Clifton Park.

Since the Club began 12 years ago, the number of children and adults involved in the various programs has grown tremendously.

This summer the Club purchased about 20 acres off Wemple Road between Route 9W and the Thruway.

Work on the new fields is already under way, with drainage, leveling, seeding and construction of a parking lot going on this summer.

The "soccerplex" as it's called, should be ready for use in the fall of 1993.

The soccer club is asking for community support for its fundraising efforts. The Club offers fall and spring Intracub programs, competitive (travel) soccer, spring and summer training camps and indoor/outdoor tournaments.

Further information about the Bethlehem Soccer Club is available by calling club president Bill Silverman at 439-6465.

Anyone wishing to send a donation for the "soccerplex" can send a check to the Bethlehem Soccer Club, P.O. Box 305, Delmar, N.Y. 12054.

Members of Bethlehem's Under-8 Travel Team, which took first place in the Capital District Youth Soccer League's C Division for the '92 spring season, included the following players: (front) Bob Barrowman (l), Eval Gall, Matthew Swiatowicz, Jamie Collins, Nitin Roper, Kevin Neubauer, (second) Ryan Dalton, Michael Hoghe, Michael Nuttall, Andrew Swiatowicz, Padriac Hennessey, Stephen Hoghe, Stephen Perazelli, John Thibdeau, (rear) coaches Ted Swiatowicz (l) and Ken Gall.

Returning players boost hopes for girls volleyball

In the past, the Bethlehem Girls Varsity Volleyball team has been strong and it looks like they will be strong again this year.

Although the team lost some outstanding players because of graduation, those moving up from junior varsity could fill the spots nicely.

The girls who graduated are Lisa Domermuth, Jen Grand, Dana Histed, Kristen McKie, Debbie Robbins and Stacey Parsons. Returning from last year are seniors Erin Murphy, Heather Selig, Lynda Smith and junior Jessica Murphy.

This year's team has not been decided upon, but according to the varsity coach, Nancy Smith, she is looking for a squad of 12 people.

Last year's team finished third in the Suburban Council with a record of 12 wins and 3 losses. They lost twice to undefeated Burnt Hills and once to Shenendehowa.

Smith says "the Suburban Council is getting stronger in all sports. All the girls are excelling."

Smith feels good about this season. She is impressed with the nucleus of good players on hand and attributes the incoming talent to the coaches working under her.

The freshman coach, Keith Gunner, does an excellent job teaching his players the basics, she said. For many years, the freshman team has been successful in having winning seasons.

Sandy Collins, the junior varsity coach, goes a little beyond the basics and teaches plays and game strategies. Collins plays in leagues, is up to date, and knows the game very well, Smith said.

When Smith was asked how well the team would work together, she was unsure, but said that after a few games, it would probably jell.

With the returning players and a "cooperative, cohesive and trusting" team, Smith is confident they will again have a winning season.

Hoop club holds registration

The Bethlehem Basketball Club will hold registration for 10-13 year old youths at the Bethlehem Town Hall Thursday, Sept. 17 from 6 to 10 p.m. and Saturday, Sept. 19 from 9 to 10 a.m.

Club membership for the 1992-93 season is open to all residents of Bethlehem and students of the Bethlehem Central School District.

New players should bring a non-refundable xerox copy of their birth certificate at the time of registration.

The registration fee is $50 or $75 for a family with more than one child enrolled.

Registration is on a first-come, first-serve basis and is limited to 48 youths in each age division (10, 11, 12, and 13 years of age).

For additional information, contact 439-7284 or 439-5320.

Dolphin swimmers win places on Adirondack all-star team

Ten-year-old Brian Dowling and 12-year-old Reid Putnam of the Delmar Dolphins Swim Club recently won places on the Adirondack Zone All-Star Team.

This qualified them to compete against swimmers in their age groups from Maine to Virginia at the Eastern Zone Long course Championship meet held August 13 - 16 at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, N.J.

Dowling swam in 10 events. He achieved a personal best time of 1:20.39 in the 100-meter butterfly.

This put him in fifth place and was the fastest time by a New York state swimmer in his age group.

Putnam, competing in a Zone meet for the first time, had his best times ever in each of his individual events, including taking eight seconds off his 200-meter freestyle time, finishing at 2:23.91.

He swam in every 11-12-year-old relay event as a part of the Adirondack boys team.

THE YOUTH NETWORK

A BETHLEHEM NETWORKS PROJECT

Trained coaches can make sports more fun

At least half of all 12 to 16-year-old Americans who participate in sports have one thing in common.

They quit.

And, according to many studies, most of the reasons youth give for dropping out have negative overtones: They were getting yelled at. They weren't getting to play. They weren't learning how to improve.

In short, they weren't having fun.

"It wasn't the sport. It was the structure," said Charlotte Humphries, assistant professor and graduate division director in the Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation (HPER) at the University of North Dakota.

"We're losing a lot of kids who have the potential to be the good athletes," said Humphries. "We are not making sports fun for them."

Many times, the emphasis on winning gets in the way of the player's desire to develop skills and have fun. Sometimes, they are asked to handle sports endeavors they are not ready for, physically or emotionally. Whatever the reason, youths won't remain in a sport experience if it's not enjoyable.

And the problem, Humphries said, may have something to do with the coaching.

Even though youth sports coaches are some of the most well-intentioned people in the world, Humphries said, they may be unable to deal well with all of the psychological, physical and social needs of youths.

Increasingly, youth sports organizations are making an effort to provide coaches with training. A trained coach may make the difference between a child who has a positive sports experience and one who doesn't.

"I think things are moving in a positive direction," said Cynthia Pemberton, HPER assistant professor and department chair at the University of North Dakota. She specializes in child psychology.

"There's more emphasis placed on getting more qualified people in coaching positions. That's going to help the whole aspect of children's sports."

Both Pemberton and Humphries support standardized coaching requirements, including certification.

Stockbridge museum shows Rockwell's slices of American life

By Michael Kagan

Through his work, Norman Rockwell communicated the vision Americans want to have of themselves more articulately than possibly any other artist.

In a time when many people are questioning the health of the nation and its culture, his paintings are particularly relevant.

While his paintings and their reproductions are still displayed in a variety of places, it's difficult to view any quantity of his work at one time, short of poring through piles of old Saturday Evening Posts.

Capital District Rockwell-seekers have an advantage over their counterparts in the rest of the country, as the only significant public collection of Rockwell's work lies just over the state border in Stockbridge, Mass., in the Norman Rockwell Museum.

The museum houses about 500 of his works, approximately half of which were donated by Rockwell himself.

"We know that he did about 4,000 in his lifetime," said museum director Laurie Norton Moffatt, who published Norman Rockwell: A Definitive Catalogue, the culmination of a ten-year research project at the museum. "Many are in private collections.

Some have disappeared. We probably know where about half of them are."

Born in 1894, Rockwell entered the Chase School of Fine and Applied Art when he was 14, and also studied at the National Academy of Design and the Art Students League. He was hired for his first formal art job, as art director for Boys' Life, while still in his teens.

On May 20, 1916, his first Saturday Evening Post cover appeared. Over the next 47 years, he filled their front pages with 320 more works.

Some of his most critically acclaimed pieces, including "The Four Freedoms," illustrations of Franklin Roosevelt's "Freedom from want, freedom from fear, freedom of speech and freedom to worship," are on display in the Stockbridge museum.

Saratoga's closed, but pigs are still racing at county fairs in Rensselaer and Columbia counties this week.

Two county fairs slated for Labor Day week

By Dev Tobin

The last weekend of summer is county fair time for two of our neighboring counties to the east—Rensselaer and Columbia.

Beginning mid-week and running through Labor Day, the fairs celebrate agricultural production during the peak of the summer harvest, and also provide a variety of old-fashioned entertainment.

Country music highlights the 173rd Schaghticoke Fair, the third oldest fair in the state.

On Wednesday, Josie Waverly and her Genuine Country Band will entertain in the park area of the fairgrounds.

On Thursday, country pioneers Smokey Green, Lee Moore, Art Anderson and Al Bain will be in the spotlight.

The working man's hero, Johnny Paycheck, will sing his trademark "Take This Job and Shove It" and other hits Friday in the park.

Local country-blues rocker Mirinda James will return from Nashville with a new show Saturday night, with opening act Alex Craig.

On Sunday and Monday, Mel McDaniel will sing his number-one single "Baby's Got Her Blue Jeans On" for fairgoers.

Strolling the grounds, Reggie's Red Hot Feet Warmers and the Cedar Ridge Blue Grass Group will entertain through the weekend.

Aside from the agricultural demonstrations ongoing at the fair, scheduled competitions in front of the grandstand include draft horses and jalopy football (Wednesday), farm tractor and pick-up truck pull

Murder mystery provides suspense and touch of comedy at Dorset

Frederick Knott is a past master at creating the sophisticated, suspenseful comedy, including Dial M for Murder and Wait Until Dark. In his latest, Write Me A Murder, Knott plays with the literary form and creates a mystery which has a witty twist that plays havoc with the principal characters.

This season-closer at the Dorset Theatre Festival near Manchester, Vt. is well-staged by Jill Charles who directs an expert cast through a fast-paced production of Knott's work.

Set in England in 1955, the elder brother of a once-prosperous family is considering selling the family estate so he can establish his own fortune. This is not favored by his younger brother, a man who has made his livelihood as an editor. Into their lives comes a buyer for the estate to be made into sprawling sectors of townhouses, disrupting the quiet bucolic countryside.

Martin P. Kelly

The real estate man's wife is a novice writer who becomes enamored with the editor as he helps her forge a tale of murder. When their working together grows romantic, the fiction she's written becomes a scenario to murder her husband.

But, Knott will have none of that. The husband dies in an automobile accident the evening he's to be murdered, leaving the lovers with a plan and no victim. Knott, however, makes full use of this twist with several more concoctions that resurrects the murder plot and provides a humorous ending.

Connor Smith is properly boorish as the selfish older brother while Terry Rabine (a Siena College drama professor) is unctuous as the developer. Jack L. Davis and Paula Mann are intense as the lovers caught up in their own plotting while Ada Brown Mather stomps through the proceedings as the unwelcome village physician.

Write Me A Murder is a delightful excursion into the inner-workings of a mystery writer's mind. It runs through Sept. 6. For info, call (802) 867-5777.

Theatre Barn stubs toe on latest Gilbert and Sullivan adaptation Director Paul F. Hewitt has made a minor career adapting the century-old operettas of Gilbert and Sullivan during summer seasons at the Theatre Barn at New Lebanon.

Four years ago, he touched up the sprightly New York Public Theater version of Pirates of Penzance in a popular local production. Three years ago, he tested his own imagination with a cleverly funny version of The Mikado where the action took place in the 1960s amid the Japanese business boom. It gave new meaning to the Gilbert and Sullivan satire while preserving the integrity of the original.

Last season, Hewitt was a little less successful with his adaptation of HMS Pinafore where the British battle wagon was made a modern American submarine. Still, humor persisted and the music prevailed in a generally funny production.

This past weekend, Hewitt became too clever by far and has failed to give new life to Patience, a fragile tale of a man who is too handsome for his own good but is willing to step away from the adoration he receives for the love of a young maid, Patience.

Hewitt sets the scene in a 1950s diner where the hero is a leather-jacketed jock and the heroine is a short order cook. The first few minutes are funny because of its audaciousness. Once the first shock is over, the audience finds that Sullivan's music doesn't translate well when done to the rhythms of the '50s. The pace bogs down and the satire is missed completely, causing even as fine a performer as Dyanne Mimmo (Patience) to appear less than adequate. The director misses the point of Gilbert's satire and diminishes the value of Sullivan's sprightly music, itself a satire of the romantic nature of the silly plot.

Patience plays through Sept. 13 to be followed by the season-closing Nunsense. For information, call 794-8989.

Reprise of Oliver to close season at MacHaydn

The MacHaydn Theater in Chatham is turning to Oliver, the musical adaptation of Charles Dickens' 19th century tale of poverty and thievery in London to finish its season. The production, a reprise of previous productions done at the 25-year old summer theater, opens tonight (Wed. Sept. 2) and runs through Sept. 13.

A young veteran of the Chatham theater, Justin Schantz, plays the captivating waif who is spirited away from his foster home by the evil Fagin. Michael Replogle who just played King Arthur in Camelot, is the wily leader of a group of child pickpockets.

Linda Rose Payne (she played Queen Guenevere in Camelot) portrays Nancy, the woman attracted to another thief, Bill Sykes, played by Michael Wark.

Though Dickens set the plot in dreary surroundings, the musical is upbeat and light-hearted with an optimistic tone. For information, call 392-9292.

his life in Stockbridge, dying in 1978.

The museum was originally instituted to preserve a historic building. In 1967, several Stockbridge citizens, including Rockwell and his wife, formed the Stockbridge Corner House Corporation for the purpose of saving the Old Corner House from demolition.

The organization, which changed its name to the Old Corner House larger museum building was started, two miles from the center of Stockbridge. That site also includes the Rockwell studio, with all its original contents, open for visitation. The studio was moved from the town center in 1986, in keeping with Rockwell's wishes to have it preserved.

The museum, located on the corner of Main and Elm Streets, is one hour from Albany. Take Route I-90 east to the Route 22 exit. Go south on New York Route 22 to Massachusetts Route 102. Follow Route 102 through West Stockbridge, approximately five and a half miles to the flashing light at the intersection of Route 183. Turn

In 1986, Rockwell's studio was moved from the center of Stockbridge to this location at the Stockbridge site of the museum's new building.

Stockbridge Historical Society, opened the house as a small museum in 1969. The first exhibits featured a historical display from the local library and a few of Rockwell's paintings.

Not surprisingly, the paintings became the main attraction of the museum. In 1973, Rockwell left his collection of art in trust to the museum, and in 1976, he did the same for his studio and its contents.

Five thousand people toured the building its first year. Now, more than 150,000 visitors a year come in to view the collection of idealized and humorized illustrations of American life.

Even people who are familiar with Rockwell's work in the Post will find that the paintings often have a more striking impact when viewed in their original form.

"It's quite astonishing and breathtaking. It's always a surprise to see, first of all, how large they are," said Moffatt.

Aside from the Rockwell paintings, the museum features several temporary exhibits throughout the year. Currently, works by other illustrators are on display, including Howard Pyle, Edwin Austen Abbey, J. C. Leyendecker and Thomas Fogarty, one of Rockwell's instructors.

In the late 1980s, construction of a

The new building and the Rockwell studio are at 2 Glendale Road in Stockbridge, off Route 183.

Admission is $10 for adults, $5 for children and $4 for members. For information, call (401) 298-4065.

SPOTLIGHT TEENSCENE

By Michael Kagan

The end of summer vacation means different things to different people.

There are those who go through a denial period which lasts until they get their first homework assignment or have to study for their first test.

There are those who reason that school was bound to start anyway, so they might as well deal with it.

And there are those who, strangely, are glad when classes begin again. Either they didn't have a very good summer, or they're seniors who just want to get it all over with.

Nevertheless, some things are fairly universal at the end of the summer. Like buying school supplies.

In elementary school, and even to some degree in middle school, teachers tell pupils exactly what to get: four pocket folders and spiral notebooks, or a spiral notebook with dividers and a small assignment pad.

In a way, this system is comforting. You don't have to stand in a store staring at a pile of notebooks saying, "Hmmm. Do I want wide ruled or college ruled?"

Also, if you're supposed to wait until you get a list of required materials, it's easy to get out of going supply shopping in the summer with your folks.

Shopping for clothing, another common pre-first day of school ritual, is based on the premise that you want to make a good first impression.

This excursion can come down to a battle between what the parent thinks kids should wear to school, and what the kid actually sees other kids wearing. In this eternal battle of fashion forces, parents easily gain the upper hand because, generally, they hold the credit cards.

Often, however, the kid in this shopping scenario hasn't seen what most people are wearing because he or she's most likely just been around friends for the summer. Since friends often dress in similar styles anyway, this isn't much to go on.

Most kids have enough pens, paper and pants in their closets to get through the first few days of school. Therefore, it might be more practical to do the majority of shopping after school starts.

Fairs

(Thursday), a sanctioned NYTPA tractor pull (Friday), firemen's parade and competition (Saturday), horse pull and the Joie Chitwood Thrill Show (Sunday) and two demolition derbies (Monday).

The 152nd edition of the Chatham Fair "tries to keep the rural aspect of a county fair," according to spokesman Angelo Nero.

At the junction of routes 203 and 66 in the northern Columbia County village of Chatham (about 40 minutes from downtown Albany), the fairgrounds team with livestock and produce superlatives.

Continuous entertainment at the fair includes rides, games of skill and chance, a backyard circus for the kids, McHale's racing pigs and the Hill Country Cloggers.

Thursday will be Youth Day at the fair, when, for $9 with a coupon from Pepsi, children under 12 can ride all day. Other attractions Thursday include harness racing, the Peaceful Country Singers at 3 p.m. and the Hollywood Stunt Show, a car thrill show, at 7:30 p.m.

Senior citizens will be admitted free to the fair on Friday, when the special attractions include harness racing and a variety circus.

Saturday will be Firemen's Day, with a gala parade of more than 40 units scheduled to step off at 1 p.m. In the evening, the Duprees singing group will entertain at 5 and 7:30 p.m.

Museum sets month's events

The New York State Museum has announced its schedule of special events for September.

• "Tsvi Nussbaum: A Boy From Warsaw," part of the Remember the Children video series, will be presented on Sunday, Sept. 6, at 3 p.m. The program features Nussbaum, a Holocaust survivor, who is now a physician living in New York State.

The cost is $2 per person. Children 12 and under are free.

• A one-day conference on Saturday, Sept. 19, "Rensselaerwijck Seminar: The Dutch in the Age of Exploration," will feature discussions of recent research about the Dutch contribution to the Age of Exploration.

The conference, sponsored by the New Netherland Project of the state library, will run from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. The cost is $25 per person.

For information, call 474-5877.

"I'd like to open a joint account with someone who has a lot of money."

New Probe boasts modern design, increased interior space

The new 1993 Ford Probe offers a contemporary design and a higher level of technical sophistication, according to Bud Kearney, Inc. of Ravena.

"The design has been changed by increasing the overall length and width, along with the wheelbase and tread," Kearney said. "The front overhang has been shortened by moving the cab closer to the front of the car. This gives the windshield a greater slope, thus increasing the interior space."
