Town merchants welcome Department of Health

By KATHERINE McCARTHY

On Nov. 2, the state Department of Health will move 140 employees to the former Dormitory Authority building on Delaware Avenue and Bethlehem Chamber of Commerce President Marty DeLaney is planning to greet them in style.

"This is a big thing," DeLaney said. "When was the last time so many people came at once? It's a big shot in the arm for Bethlehem business."

DeLaney is organizing a welcoming party for Nov. 4, with Susan Cassler performing as Lollipop the clown and Bethlehem Central High School's Senior Brass Quintet providing an opening fanfare for arriving workers at 9 a.m.

When was the last time so many people came at once? It's a big shot in the arm for Bethlehem business.

"Merchants have been very supportive so far," DeLaney said of her push to contact business people and give them a chance to offer prospective clients a welcome to the community.

"Subway in Delaware Plaza has already offered 150 coupons," DeLaney said, "and Del Lanes is offering a free game of bowling." Bruegger's, Dunkin' Donuts, My Place & Co., Mercado's and Grand Union are also planning to be on hand to welcome the state worker.

Marty DeLaney

Robert Barnett, who is the director of continuing care for the Health Department, said that the move to Delmar will consolidate all of the state's oversight activities regarding continuing care. "Our office was created one year ago," Barnett said, "and includes oversight of nursing and adult care homes, home health care and agencies. As part of the creation of this office, we'll be pulling together staff from different places. This is the first time we'll be together as a functioning office."

Barnett said employees will begin moving in on Friday and Saturday, and offices will be open for business

Three-way race in 42nd District

By BILL FONDA

If the job of a state Senator is to "bring home the bacon," Republican Anthony Esposito of Guilderland feels that Democratic incumbent Neil Breslin of Delmar has shortchanged the 42nd District, which includes all of Albany County.

Esposito claims that former Sen. Michael Hoblock, who Breslin defeated in 1996, received about $2 million in funding for local community organizations from 1994 to 1996, while Breslin barely obtained $190,000.

"As my campaign slogan says, I can make a difference, and he hasn't. Gov. Pataki needs a partner in the Senate, along with (Majority Leader) Joe Bruno, to work for Albany County. I don't think Albany is getting its fair share either in community grants or state aid for education," Esposito said.

Breslin countered by saying that Albany County's 20.55 percent educational increase is better than Rensselaer County's 17.98 percent, Schenectady County's 14.58 percent or Saratoga County's 12.75

McEneny looks like shoo-in for re-election

By JOSEPH ANDREW PHILLIPS

As the campaign in the heavily Democratic 104th Assembly District enters its final week, all three candidates on the Nov. 3 ballot rate the election a near shoo-in for incumbent John McEneny — but that hasn't lowered the rhetorical boiling point.

Gary Domalewicz, trounced by McEneny in September's primary, is on the Conservative ballot line. He concedes he's "not actively campaigning" against three-term incumbent McEneny, also running on the Liberal line. "I don't believe Democrats should be beating up on Democrats in November," he said. Nonetheless, he declines to endorse McEneny either: "I can't support a liar."

McEneny's principal opponent, Republican and Independence nominee Lisa Hampton, is a political neophyte. Hampton is fighting an uphill battle for media attention, frustrated that her opponent declines to engage her in debate.

"Jack will win two to one," Domalewicz said. "Just look at the voter enrollment — 85 percent of the district is Democratic."

The 104th comprises the city of Albany but also includes the town of New Scotland.

At issue in the campaign has been McEneny's role in crime legislation, particularly with respect to Jenna's Law, recently enacted by the Legislature. McEneny insists that his efforts on behalf of the legislation were critical to its eventual passage, but his opponents

Family Court candidates cite years of legal experience

By JOSEPH ANDREW PHILLIPS

A Bethlehem resident with a solid pedigree in family law is taking on an entrenched and well-regarded incumbent in the race for Albany County Family Court justice.

The campaign has taken on the classic dimensions of Albany County political races: urban Democratic incumbent faces suburban Republican challenger. Two unusual features, however, mark this particular contest: Family Court judges rarely stand for re-election in Albany County, as Democrat Beverly C. Tobin has — and the Republican challengers rarely gain as much campaign traction as has William P. Soronen Jr.

Tobin and Soronen are squaring off for a 10-year term on the three-judge Family Court bench, which

Bethlehem police arrest two on DWI charges

Drug case remanded to Albany County Court

Two citations for driving while intoxicated were issued by Bethlehem police recently.

On Saturday, Oct. 17, a vehicle driven by Mariann Theresa DeCocinis, 36, of 16 Greystone Drive, Voorheesville, was observed operating erratically on Route 85, and pulled over near Couse Lane.

Police said DeCocinis was charged with DWI, following a subsequent Breathalyzer test. She was ordered to appear in town court on Nov. 2 at 4 p.m.

Anthony A. Brezac, 27, of 180 Kenwood Ave., Delmar, was charged with DWI after he was stopped on Sunday, Oct. 18, at 3:53 p.m. while travelling southbound on Route 85, near Price Chopper. Police said he was observed by witnesses weaving into an oncoming lane. Brezac was also ticketed for failure to keep right.

Brezac is scheduled to appear in town court Nov. 11 at 4 p.m.

St. Stephen's bazaar

St. Stephen's Episcopal Church on Elsmere Avenue in Delmar will hold an Election Day Bazaar on Tuesday, Nov. 3, from 7:30 a.m. to 7 p.m.

A Glenmont man arrested last February and charged with growing and possession of marijuana has had his case remanded to Albany County Court.

Scott J. LeClerc, 35, of 720 Route 9W, Glenmont, was arrested on Feb. 25 after Bethlehem police were summoned to the home by ambulance personnel.

The emergency workers had been called when LeClerc suffered a drug overdose. They transported him to Albany Medical Center Hospital, where he was treated and released.

In their initial call to the scene, police found several marijuana plants in plain view at the home, and subsequently obtained a search warrant.

Police then discovered more than 100 marijuana plants growing in the attic. Police also found and confiscated more than two pounds of marijuana, a cache of weapons and ammunition, and assorted paraphernalia and growing equipment.

LeClerc was then charged with criminal possession of a weapon, unlawfully growing marijuana, and criminal possession of marijuana in the second degree. A record search turned up additional charges against him and several previous felony convictions.

Following several adjournments of the case, Bethlehem Town Court turned the matter over on Oct. 20 to county jurisdiction, where LeClerc will be tried as a persistent felon.

No leads in hit and run

Bethlehem police have no solid leads at present on a hit-and-run accident earlier this month on the Slingerlands bypass.

On the evening of Saturday, Oct. 10, Joan T. Kivlen of 26 McMillen Place, Delmar, was southbound on the bypass when her vehicle was struck by what she described as a red or maroon Caravan-like passenger van that crossed into her lane. The vehicle then continued northbound without stopping. When interviewed by police, Kivlen and another witness were unable to further identify the offending vehicle.

Bethlehem police inquiries to area repair shops have failed so far to turn up any similar passenger van reporting damage, according to police reports.

High school students to present concert

Bethlehem Central High School will present its second concert of the season on Monday, Nov. 1, at 7:30 p.m.

Two Duke Ellington pieces, "Mood Indigo" and "Oclupaca", from The Latin American Suite will be played by the jazz band in honor of the 100th anniversary of Ellington's birth.

The symphonic orchestra, wind ensemble and Sound System Singers will also perform.

The concert is free and open to the public at the high school on Delaware Avenue in Delmar.

Liberal challenging Faso

By Joseph Andrew Phillips

Virtually assured of re-election to his seventh term in the 102nd Assembly District, Minority Leader John Faso, R-Kinderhook nonetheless declares, "I'm certainly running hard. I'm not taking anything for granted."

Few of the voters in the 102nd, which encompasses parts of four counties, including the town of Bethlehem, are even aware that he's running. "Most of them don't realize I have an opponent," Faso said.

He does. Joseph Laux, statewide vice-chairman of the Liberal Party, employee of the state Department of Taxation and Finance and a New Baltimore resident, opposes him on the Liberal line. But the Democratic party provided no candidate at all. Its only visible effort has been a series of mailings by the Democratic Assembly Campaign Committee attacking Faso's record. "By and large, they're either outright falsehoods or gross distortions that I frankly haven't paid a lot of attention to," Faso said.

Why no Democratic candidate? "Frankly, I'm baffled," said Faso, who believes the lack of a candidate on the ballot will cost the Democrats support for the top of the ticket and might therefore contribute to their loss of the second position on the ballot statewide. "The Democrats have a real problem," he said. "In many places, perhaps even in our district, (gubernatorial candidate Peter) Vallone will get fewer votes than (Independent) Tom Golisano." Faso holds the Conservative and Independent slots on the ballot.

For his part, Laux, said several Democratic town chairmen in the district sought him out to take the ballot line, but too late to file without an expensive petition drive. "I find it mind-boggling that they let Faso run unopposed," he said. "On a regular basis there is a guy who runs against (Majority Leader Sheldon) Silver. This is the Minority Leader in the Assembly; why the Democrats didn't field a candidate is anyone's guess."

What motivated Laux to run? "You mean, besides the fact I'm completely out of my mind?" he said with a laugh. "Well, we do respectfully disagree on a number of issues."

Among those Laux cites are the need to tackle the state's mounting debt. "John and the governor can talk about tax cuts, which is a wonderful idea," he said, "but not when the state's awash in red ink." He derides the flat tax that Faso supports as "the death knell, practically, for working families."

On the issue of campaign finance reform, Laux estimates that he is outspent by Faso by about $148,000 to $1,000. But he said, "I won't take campaign contributions. I've always held that position and I always will. It leaves you beholden to people. The only people I want to owe anything to are the voters who put me in office."

Faso, for his part, counters that "someone running on the Liberal line isn't likely to get many campaign contributions," but nevertheless concedes the power of incumbency and supports such reforms as "a fairer reapportionment system that would level the playing field and create fairer districts." He's also come out in favor of a statewide privately-managed public affairs cable channel similar to C-Span to cover state government.

Both candidates have conducted a campaign free of personal attacks, and both decry the lack of media attention. "We've been offered no forums at all" for a debate, Laux said.

And what of his chances next Tuesday? "If I won the election, John would have nothing to worry about," says Laux. "I would have a heart attack, drop dead, the governor could appoint John to replace me, and he'd be right back in the Assembly."

CMI neighbors hire attorney

By Joseph Andrew Phillips

The debate over CMI Senior Housing & Healthcare's plan to erect an assistive living facility adjacent to Bethlehem Public Library moved into a new phase when it was once again taken up by the Bethlehem town planning board.

The latest version of the controversial plan was presented to the planning board by attorney John Cahill, who consults with CMI on the project, and a group of the project's site planners from The Architectural Team. The project, which had previously won town board approval to rezone the 6.7-acre site at 467 Delaware Ave. to accommodate the planned $10 million, 94-unit project, now faces building project approval by the planning board.

It also faces potential litigation by a group of neighbors, who were represented by Albany attorney Donald Zee. He has been retained by a group he estimates as "about 30," including David and Ann Moore, Borthwick Avenue residents who have previously vowed to file Article 78 litigation against the town to block the project.

"They're not against seniors," said Zee. "They're not against senior housing. But if it's gotta go in there, they want to make sure it's done right."

Zee raised a number of his clients' concerns before the planning board, related to traffic volume on Delaware Avenue and the adequacy of the planned 47-space parking proposed for the site.

"We want to ask the town to revisit the parking issue, and we also questioned placing the parking adjacent to Delaware Avenue," he said. "We think it should be in back. We also question CMI's statement that there's only going to be one or two emergency calls a month."

The presentation was the first step toward another public hearing on the project. Before a formal presentation of the full plan, however, the board asked CMI to address several issues raised by the town's planning and engineering departments, regarding such matters as site lighting and a fire department request for sidewalk access on the west side of the property.

Board chairman Douglas Hasbrouck said, "We thought we'd be in a position by (this week) to put them back on our agenda for our next meeting," which is scheduled for Nov. 4. But since the meeting, CMI's planning team has indicated it will be unable to complete its review of the planning board's concerns in that amount of time.

Hasbrouck anticipated the earliest the proposal will be back on the planning board agenda would be its Nov. 17 meeting.

Zee, who practices law in the area of real estate and land development, has represented a variety of commercial and residential developers as well as opponents, he said. At this stage, he said, "We're exclusively discussing planning issues."

"I'd like the planning board to understand my clients' concerns and help them work through their concerns," he said. "I don't think it's unreasonable to ask a major developer to work with the neighbors."

Zee asked CMI to provide site plans and data on several of its other facilities throughout New England for the purposes of comparison, but he indicated his clients were prepared to obtain the information they sought independently if CMI did not provide it. The future of any potential litigation from his client group, he said, "depends on how cooperative the developers will be."

"I understand there are additional people over and above this group who are concerned," he said, "and may seek their own legal counsel." He declined to name them.

McNulty, Ayers square off

By Dev Tobin

The contest between U.S. Rep. Michael McNulty, D-Green Island, and Republican challenger Lauren Ayers is typical in many ways — the incumbent running on his record and the challenger attacking that record and saying she can do better.

McNulty, finishing his fifth term, said his priorities if re-elected include saving Social Security, enacting a Patients' Bill of Rights, providing more federal aid for school infrastructure, and continuing to promote economic development in the district.

He noted that, despite what national leaders of both parties have been saying, the federal government's non-Social Security budget is still not balanced, but about $30 billion in the red.

He said he therefore opposed Republican plans for a tax cut because "The money to pay for that will come from the Social Security trust fund."

In foreign affairs, McNulty said he supported the Clinton administration's rapprochement with China, which Ayers has made a key issue in her campaign.

"We can't promote world peace by ignoring the largest nation on earth," he said.

Commenting on the major "news" item of the year, McNulty said President Clinton "shouldn't be impeached and won't be removed from office" for his "highly objectionable, but not impeachable" behavior on the Monica Lewinsky matter.

McNulty, 51, and his wife have four children. He said he returns to Green Island every week rather than staying in Washington. "I'm engaged in the district," he said.

Ayers, 52, a psychologist who also serves on the Guiderland town board, said she disagrees with McNulty on most issues because she is a conservative Republican.

"What got me into this race was the transfer of missile technology to China," she said. "We have to look much more carefully at presidential decisions that transfer defense policy to the Commerce Department."

Ayers said Clinton administration policies, with McNulty's support, were helping "the increasingly aggressive Chinese military" consolidate its control at home and expand its influence abroad.

On the domestic front, Ayers said she supports more tax cuts, arguing that cuts in areas like capital gains tend to raise more revenue, as people sell stocks or other property to take advantage of the lower rate.

She also supports school vouchers, which she said McNulty opposed as a pilot project in Washington, D.C.

"Why not support parents who want to do something for their kids?" she said.

While McNulty said he had delivered millions of dollars in highway and economic development aid, Ayers said she could bring more back to the district as a member of the Republican majority in Congress.

"I'm surprised the district didn't get more, considering how long McNulty was part of the Democratic majority," she said.

Ayers has three children and three stepchildren.

A father's last gift is his loving legacy

By Katherine McCarthy

Sometimes love sneaks up and tickles the back of your throat and eyes, creating tears to blink back in the brightly lit early morning hours of a hospital pre-op room. Then, only the good things are remembered and there's a prayer for everything to go OK so

COMMENTARY:

*Mom's
the

there will be many more years with the father now drifting off and being wheeled away to surgery.

Love is a relieved, floating feeling when the surgeon says that the cancer is gone, the colon is resectioned, and now we'll watch and wait. And love is reassurance, when dad strains in a post-anesthetic fog to hear how things went, and you tell him fine, but he should rest now.

And sometimes love smacks you hard in the chest, forcing out tears and stealing away your breath when the heart that loved you all your life just isn't strong enough to keep on beating.

Then love is a dull, empty feeling, as machines are shut off and good-byes are said to a body the doctors say felt nothing and went peacefully, and wouldn't have wanted to suffer any more or live anything less than a full and satisfying life.

For a while, then, love is about the living, giving mom time alone with the man she shared 40 years and five children with, then holding her and guiding her back to a house that seems too empty on a day unfairly bright with autumn warmth and color.

Love is phone calls and sadness again as each loved one told cries out in sorrow.

Love is planning: pick-up times at the airport; a wake and funeral; walking the cemetery searching for a spot that can look past maple trees to Lake Champlain, waters dad loved to traverse in his vintage wooden boat.

Love is consolidating the details of his life for an obituary: family, work, hobbies, favorite charities; lyrics to a song that make mom and me smile through tears.

Love is my husband, who had to tell our children by himself, then pack up their good clothes and hunt down mine, and persuade the dog to take Dramamine before the long car trip to Burlington.

Love is the black pearl earrings and pendant we go to the jeweler's to find out about. Extravagantly expensive, dad had been putting down a little bit of money every now and then to give my mother a magnificent Christmas present. "It's the least I can do for her," he'd said; and her eyes welled up again when we brought them to her.

Love is people from different parts of everyone's past, like my mother's roommates from nurse's training, and my friends' parents, some of whom I didn't even recognize, but who remembered enough of my childhood to offer comfort in this difficult time.

Love is food, pans of lasagna and platters of cold cuts, arriving with hugs and condolences.

Love is two questions: can there ever be enough chocolate, and will I ever stop crying long enough to wear mascara again?

Love is five adult siblings and two in-laws sitting up too late the night before the funeral, giggling at the more bizarre stories of our childhood; stopping when it gets to things we'd just as soon leave forgotten.

Love is Chris' explanation to the four grandchildren about the casket and where exactly grandpa is. "Grandpa's spirit is somewhere else now, and the casket is like a beautiful jewelry box to hold his body."

Love is freedom, and some peace for dad, I thought as I sat, finally alone, on my family's back porch for a few minutes as the last of the funeral guests drank soda and made themselves sandwiches. Freedom from a life too often hard, and peace from cancer and heart disease.

Love for us now is memories, and the wonderful furniture he built with his final passion for wood-working. A picnic table, a dining room table, a pin shaped like a maple syrup bucket and the coolest treehouse you ever saw.

Love is the Irish music he taught us, especially "Fiddler's Green," the song that made me smile in the hopes that death is just a trip we all take someday to a place where we can all be together again.

Love will be this verse every time I miss my father.

"Wrap me up in me oilskins and jumper,

No more on the docks I'll be seen,

Just tell me old shipmates

I'm taking a trip, mates,

And I'll see you one day

On Fiddler's Green."

New staffers on board

Several new editorial staff have joined Spotlight Newspapers.

Joseph Andrew Phillips joins The Spotlight full time as the town of Bethlehem reporter. He will also write Family Entertainment features carried in all editions.

An Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute alumnus and longtime area resident, Phillips is a former editor of the now-defunct Capital Magazine and a freelance writer for publications including the Daily Gazette, Hudson Valley Magazine and Troy Record.

Len Tarricone is sports coordinator for Spotlight Newspapers' Colonie, Bethlehem and Loudonville editions, joining the staff in August.

Two part-time correspondents have also recently joined the staff. Debbie Eberle is an Albany native and has lived in Delmar for more than 30 years. Holder of a degree in marketing and sales, she and her family opened a One Hour Photo business in the area 16 years ago.

Eberle, whose late husband suffered from leukemia, hopes to one day write a book "on God's faithfulness and comfort in the midst of tremendous trials."

Bell is a newcomer to the area, and is a freelance writer and president of "To The Point" editorial services. A former public affairs specialist for the Treasury Department, she is also a former managing editor of Leader's Digest, a magazine for Federal managers, and founder of Vice President Gore's Federal Communicators Network.

Bell teaches Creative Memories scrapbooking classes and attends college full time.

Nick Kutryb joins the Spotlight staff as a high school intern. Apart from routine office duties, he has also covered Shaker High School fall sports for the Colonie paper.

Church to install new pastor

New Scotland Presbyterian Church on Route 85 will celebrate the official installation of its new pastor, the Rev. Holly Cameron, on Sunday, Nov. 1, at 4 p.m.

The Rev. Kay Truax of the Albany Presbytery will be the installation ceremony moderator. The Rev. Lois Wolff of Hamilton Presbyterian Church in Guilderland, the Rev. Harry Heintz of Brunswick Presbyterian Church, Elder Mary Ewart of New Scotland Presbyterian Church, Elder Thedrick Eighmie of Charlton-Freehold Presbyterian Church, Elder Laura Rogers of First United Presbyterian Church in Troy and the Rev. Bruce Miller, will also participate.

The Rev. Richard Spalding of the Boston Presbytery will attend as corresponding member for the installation commission.

Cameron earned a bachelor's degree from Auburn University and worked as a certified public accountant for seven years before entering divinity school. She received a master's degree from Harvard Divinity School in 1996.

While at Harvard, she helped organize a Presbyterian Student Group and led two Bible study groups for business professionals in conjunction with the Massachusetts Bible Society.

Family Court

handles 16,000 cases annually. And both candidates agree that the contest deserves the public's attention. Family Court is "probably the most basic court in the system, alongside city police court, for dealing with the public and its problems," said Soronen.

Family Court is the venue for issues revolving around parents and children: custody, delinquency, domestic violence and protection. It is not the court of first resort for resolving divorce matters, which are filed before the state Supreme Court, but it often deals with the fallout of family breakup, including issues of visitation, adjustments of child support and custodial arrangements.

"We're like a big triage unit some days," said Tobin. "When you're in Family Court, you're dealing with entirely different issues than any other court, which deal with real property, damages from lawsuits and the like. You're talking about custody of someone's child. Nothing goes more to affect your whole being than your ability to parent a child. It's not an ordinary court because emotions run very high because of all these issues."

"There are no winners in Family Court," said Soronen. "You go there when there's a broken family, a broken marriage. By its nature, everyone comes out of there with a bad experience. It touches an awful lot of lives."

Family Court carries a heavy caseload and both candidates endorse the reform proposal before the county Legislature to add a fourth judge to the bench.

Yet for many a career jurist, Family Court is often just a stop along the way to a higher judicial post rather than a career end in itself. Tobin is thus the rarity in seeking re-election. "This is not a judicial stepping stone for me," she said. "This is my career. I want to be a Family Court judge for the rest of my career. I have not sought a higher judicial position. This is where I want to be, this is where I can be most effective."

Tobin's path has been directed toward youth services and the law. Admitted to the bar in 1962 after graduating from Albany Law School as the only woman in her class, she pursued a career in the private practice of family law until signing on as counsel with the state Division for Youth. She was employed there from 1971 until her appointment to the Family Court bench in March 1988 to fill out the remaining months of an unexpired term. She was re-elected that fall.

Tobin rates her patience and listening ability to be her strong suits on the job. She also cites her "practical experience as a mother of three and a grandmother of three," her 17 years in youth services, and decade on the court.

"In the area of child abuse and domestic violence, I think there's a much greater awareness than when I began 10 years ago" of the protections available — and that has driven up the caseload. She also cites the specter of drugs and of mental illness as increasing factors in matters of juvenile justice.

"And in the area of juvenile delinquency, youngsters who are coming in are coming in for more serious offenses," she said. "Weapons in school, drug sales in school settings — we've never seen that before."

How would she contrast her qualifications with those of her opponent? "I'm a candidate for judicial office," she says. "I will comment on my qualifications, I will not comment on his. I think it's inappropriate in a judicial race."

Soronen is careful not to make the campaign personal. "There's nothing in a race like this that's personal," he said. "But we need the best people we can get into that court. I believe I would be one of them."

His path differs from Tobin's. A Westchester County native, he graduated from Albany Law School in 1975, and joined the Albany firm of Carter, Conboy, Bardwell, Case & Blackmore.

His principal qualification for the post he's seeking revolves around his two decades as confidential law clerk in the chambers of state Supreme Court Justice Harold Hughes from 1978 to 1997.

"When I started with Judge Hughes, 10 percent of our caseload was in divorce work," he says, "but by the time I left, half of our work was in the area of family law." He has had "20 years' experience ... in very confrontational, emotional cases."

The increasing complexity of marital law has contributed to the heavy Family Court caseload, he said, but Soronen also cites slow execution of cases in Family Court in Albany County, and he lays part of that at Tobin's feet. He cites a study prepared by the Office of Court Administration (OCA) for 1997 that compared the rates of disposition of cases in Family Court county by county — and that suggested the Albany Court was falling behind in resolving cases within the recommended six-month time standard recommended by OCA.

"In 19 years with Judge Hughes, our track record of decisions out on time was outstanding," he said. "I would speed up the system because I have the ability, the experience, the background to apply the law promptly ... A great judge is going to move a case along because of his ability." He also thinks Family Court may be behind the times in not using computer technology effectively to manage its caseload.

Tobin bristles when she hears that Albany Family Court is slow:

"That's blatantly untrue. Ninety-nine percent of all of the cases before court in 1997 were completed in a six month period of time, and there are always reasons why the other 1 percent weren't completed on time. And it's always a reason in the best interests of the parties."

"I really believe in 10 years I've served the public well," she said, "and I want to keep on doing it."

"What I would want the public perception to be is that (Family Court) is a place where they will be treated respectfully, where they'll get justice," she says. "It's really a full-service court, and I believe we give people these services in a dignified manner, and we accomplish this as quickly as we are able to do it."

Soronen said, "I know that my opponent puts in long hours and is a hard worker. I know the other two judges down there do the same thing. I'm not here to tear down what she's accomplished in 10 years. I'm here to win an election."

Support Networks

It would be a shame if Bethlehem Networks Project goes belly up for the lack of funds. For a community strongly focused on its children and schools, Networks, an organization devoted to positive activities for youth, has helped to foster numerous programs and projects to benefit Bethlehem's young people.

Many of Networks' unique programs are joint ventures with Bethlehem Opportunities Unlimited and these programs will not happen in the future without the backing of these groups.

Under the able leadership of Mona Prenoveau, Networks has launched dozens of events for youth and parents over the last 10 years. Many children have taken advantage of the mentoring program and as many have reaped the benefits of volunteer opportunities organized by Networks. Adults, too, have found Networks to be an important resource, with parenting programs that provide support and encouragement.

But perhaps the most significant Networks' achievements are its efforts to steer kids toward positive activities rather than toward alcohol and drugs.

We join BOU President Phyllis Hillinger in urging Assembly Minority Leader John Faso and the state Education Department to restore the modest funding needed to keep Networks afloat.

It's up to you

We're down to the wire. Election Day is next Tuesday, Nov. 3. We wonder if voters will continue to turn an apathetic eye toward elections by not showing up at the polls. What a shame if that turns out to be true. Democracy is eroded a little bit every time a registered voter fails to exercise this hard won right.

Keep in mind that the polls open early — 6 a.m. — and it takes little more than a minute in the voting booth. If you vote early, there are usually no lines, so it's a painless process that can be over and done with on your way to work.

Though there are no town races in Bethlehem or New Scotland this year, there are a number of important county and state races. We hope our election stories help you make up your mind. We also hope you make up your mind to vote.

New tenants

The New York Dormitory Authority building on Delaware Avenue across from Delaware Plaza will have new tenants soon.

That's good news for the town of Bethlehem and particularly for the plaza eateries and shops.

More than 100 state Health Department workers will be at the site, which has been empty since the Dormitory Authority workers left.

We welcome the Health Department workers and encourage them to get to know Delmar.

BCHS Lab School worth checking out

By Trudy Quaif

The writer is a parent of a student who attends the Lab School.

Are you wondering if there is a way to become more involved in your high school student's education? Would you like to know more about what your children are learning in school that is preparing them for the demands of college life and the jobs of the future? If so, you and your student may want to explore the Lab School option at an open house on Sunday, Nov. 8, from 3 to 5 p.m. at Bethlehem Central High School.

BCHS students and their parents have an opportunity that few other school districts in the state offer — the opportunity to choose the Lab School as an alternative to the regular high school program.

Chartered in 1992, the Lab School is a small, rigorous, high school program designed to put some of the best ideas in current education into practice. It is a program staffed by a few outstanding educators, enlisting the help of involved parents and other professionals in the community.

Yet, when my son started 10th grade this year and I mentioned to some other parents that he had joined the Lab School, the usual response was, "What is the Lab School?" Others commented, "Yes, but will he be prepared for the SATs and college?"

As I think about it now, my response should have been something like this: With the 21st century just around the corner, today's students need to impress those prospective colleges and future employers with more than their test scores. Yes, test scores are important but also significant to our children's futures are self-confidence, work experience, life experience, oral presentation, research, and organizational skills, and the ability to work as a team member.

Lab School teachers don't promise that their students will develop

Lab School students Dave Bagg and Jenny Geyer sort books for a garage sale to benefit the school's marine biology field trip. Elaine McLain all the above-mentioned skills, but they do promise to provide the opportunity, and a structured community environment, to encourage each student to establish and achieve his or her educational goals. Teachers in the Lab School follow each student's progress from the time the student enters the program through graduation.

The curriculum is challenging for students at all ability levels and comprehensive enough to meet all state graduation requirements (including Regents). Each student's schedule includes science, math, humanities (history and literature), a research class, current events and a second language. As a component of the science curriculum, many of the Lab School students will be going on a marine biology field trip to Florida this coming March.

Students at all levels work sometimes in teams and at other times individually. Whenever possible, an interdisciplinary approach is used to combine subjects such as history and literature. The philosophy is to teach fewer topics in greater depth, whenever possible. Students are expected to demonstrate mastery by earning a grade of at least 80 percent to pass each subject. Almost all work is graded, and students are given an opportunity to remediate (redo and improve) their work to gain a higher level of understanding of the topics covered.

Students also take physical education and an elective. All students have the option of participating in a BCBS music organization and all other BCBS extracurricular activities. Fewer tests are given, but each student must complete a 20-week and 40-week thesis project, which includes in-depth research and an oral presentation before a board of examiners composed of teachers and professionals from the community.

of the program is required community service of at least 30 hours. Seniors must complete an internship that requires them to spend 125 hours working in a setting of their choice in the community.

All students participate in meetings where the Lab School community comes together to discuss issues of importance to students and teachers. A Student Judicial Council has been established to settle disputes regarding the Lab School's Code of Conduct.

Every student compiles a graduation portfolio, which includes a sample of his or her academic work, a 20- or 40-week research project, a resume, an autobiographical essay and his or her Lab School transcript, including SAT scores. The portfolio is provided to colleges during the application process.

Former Lab School students have been accepted and are attending colleges and universities throughout the country, including Cornell University, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Rochester Institute of Technology and various SUNYs, to name just a few. Lab School graduates report that they are well prepared for the academic challenges of college life.

In addition, Lab School parents have the option of attending monthly meetings, which are also attended by teachers and students. More than 50 parents attended the September meeting, and most were eager to participate and volunteered for various Lab School activities. Yes, they really did seem willing.

During this meeting, parents were asked by teachers for input on various topics. A newsletter is produced jointly by parents, teachers and students. Several fund-raisers are held during the year. This year's garage sale was one of the school's major fund-raisers. Lab School students worked at the garage sale to earn money for their marine biology field trip.

My son is a newcomer to the Lab School, and we have only just begun to see the potential benefits it offers. This year promises to be exciting and challenging. Several parents have described a feeling of community that students and teachers share.

The mood in the Lab School community this time of year is "down to business" as students begin their 20-week research projects. A few of the newer students may view the 20-week project as something that is due next year so what's the rush? The juniors and seniors however, are quick to encourage them to stop procrastinating and immediately become part of the research team.

I am sure that there will be moments of panic when my son (and his parents) wonders why he didn't just sign up for the regular high school program. This isn't going to be easy, but then what better time for a student to test his limits and take a few academic risks than while still at home with family to provide support and encouragement.

If you have a student entering ninth- or 10th-grade next year, why not check out the Lab School's open house next Sunday. Teachers, parents and students will be available to show you samples of their work, describe their academic community and answer questions.

As John Dewey said, "Education is a social process. Education is growth. Education is not preparation for life: Education is life itself."

Bethlehem Networks is vital to Bethlehem youth

Editor, The Spotlight:

The very fiber of the town of Bethlehem is being threatened. I do not exaggerate. Bethlehem Networks Project, under the able leadership of Mona Prenoveau, has been providing that special sense of community that defines a great place to live and raise a family. Networks is a program that really works, but its future is in jeopardy.

The funding for Networks has come from the state's Task Force on Integrated Projects, but those grants are no longer being administered by the state in the same way. After a long delay, Networks got the news that it will no longer receive revenues.

Much to its credit, the town and Bethlehem Central School District are trying to advocate for Networks to ensure that funding is available. Both the town and the school district recognize Network's importance for our residents.

Bethlehem Opportunities Unlimited will continue to underwrite many of the special task forces and programs, but BOU cannot cover the major costs of administering this effective work.

If you have any influence, go to bat for Networks. Drop a note to Assembly Leader John Faso, 933 Legislative Office Building, Albany 12248. And send word to the state Education Department that this is a worthwhile program. They have heard from BOU, please add your perspective.

BOU officers and board members are sure that you and your children have participated in Networks. More than that, we are sure that in very substantial ways, you have benefitted from the prevention programs and messages that are the hallmark of Networks.

Have you read "Real Dope on Marijuana" or the high school parenting guide, "Don't You Trust Me?" Have you attended Home On Your Own, teen parenting classes, or the transition to ninth-grade orientation? Did you participate in No TV Week or Feestelijk? Thank Networks.

Did your child gain self-esteem through the art club, photography club, the mentoring program or a summer volunteering experience? Thank Networks.

These are just a few of the written resources and programs that happen because Networks and BOU work together with the town, businesses and the school district.

Unfortunately, because the future of Networks is not clear at this time, the Community Partnership Day scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 7, will not take place.

This joint effort with BOU usually sparks four or more task forces to do some of the great prevention work highlighted here. If Networks does get funded, we all hope we can reschedule Community Partnership Day early next year.

Let's all remember that in our hurried suburban world, Networks and Mona Prenoveau help us all to take the time to be a community. We applaud Mona, her staff and all the volunteers who make substance abuse prevention a priority. Let's make sure Networks continues.

Phyllis S. Hillinger
BOU president

Teachers got bum rap from critical parent

Editor, The Spotlight:

In response to Pat Kane's letter of Oct. 15, I would like to say this: Life is full of frustrations for us all. As parents, we want the best life can offer for our children. We feel their disappointment when life lets them down. Sometimes, however, it is our own disappointment we feel, our own guilt, our own insecurity.

Whatever the case, most people try to handle these issues in a mature and appropriate way for our own benefit, as well as to set a good example for our children.

I am the parent of a beautiful, bright seventh-grader at Bethlehem Central Middle School. On rare occasions, I have questioned decisions her teachers have made about her placement or her work. Sometimes I agreed with them, and sometimes I did not.

Expressing my opinions in a public forum was never an option.

I have also been a teacher in the district for 28 years. You can't teach for that long without having your share of critics. Fortunately, none of them has used The Spotlight as a forum either.

Pat Kane's use of generalizations regarding educators infuriated me. All teachers do not think, feel, act or react in the same way to a situation any more than all parents do.

Most of us appreciate it when a parent comes to us with a concern about their child, and try our best to work out a plan that pleases everyone. Yet there are times when disagreements arise and we ask you to trust our judgment.

The teachers I know do so much more than teach academic subjects and they do it willingly and lovingly. We don't ask for praise, but it's nice to hear once in a while. Perhaps someday if Ms. Kane is ever happy with BC, she'll let us know.

Resident grateful for services

Editor, The Spotlight:

As a relatively new resident of the town of New Scotland, I am pleased to have discovered that small-town charm still exists. I wish to commend two entities, in particular, for their superior services.

My appreciation first to SuperValu in Voorheesville. In these times of oversized and understaffed super stores, this market stands out like a rose among thorns. More important than even the competitive prices is the friendly, ever-helpful staff. These folks know what customer service is all about — a model their competitors would do well to follow.

And surprisingly, the selection at this manageably-sized store is excellent. It has been on more than one occasion that I have found a long-sought item here, rather than in larger markets. In the rare event and item is not found on SuperValu's shelves, management is more than willing to special order the item, even remembering to follow-up with the patron who requested it.

Secondly, I would like to thank the hard-working highway department. Having now driven through three winters up Wolf Hill out of New Salem, I can enthusiastically attest to the superior job they do. The roads are consistently clear and well sanded, much to the envy of our neighboring towns. The New Scotland Highway Department deserves a loud and long round of applause.

Many music 'stars' deserve praise

Editor, The Spotlight:

On behalf of the music education department of the Bethlehem Central School District, I would like to express our appreciation for the article that paid tribute to our program.

Unfortunately, the article was incomplete as many students have graduated over the years and were not mentioned, especially the choral and string majors who have gone on into the music education and performance fields of our profession.

Of important tribute, we must also acknowledge the talented music educators of our district, especially the teachers of our program who are no longer teaching: Sal Gangi, the late Virginia Dale, Muriel Nevens, Beverly Bozzella and Suzanne Carr. Their dedication and efforts to build the foundation of a program that exists today will never be forgotten.

Finally, special tribute goes to Sam Bozzella, who, over his 30 years as an educator, is noted throughout the state and the country.

Easy access to Internet through library system

Library cardholders with home Internet access know by now that they can log on to UHLAN, the library's online catalog, by going to the homepage (<http://www.crisny.org/libraries/capreg/bethlehem>) and clicking on "BPL Online Catalog."

For users without a telenet application, the site provides downloading instructions. "Bethopac" is the operative log-on word.

Patrons with new library cards can also log on to EBSCOhost, our online magazine and newspaper database, by clicking on the homepage's EBSCO link and entering their 14-digit library card numbers (without spaces).

While you're visiting our homepage, check out the wry "Sharps and Flats," composed and maintained by media head Michael Farley, and the local history and genealogy site, written and maintained by librarian Babs Carlson.

Both contain information about our own collection and handy links to relevant sites and sources. Youth services also maintains a site with links for children and parents.

Patrons who don't have Web access can use one of the library's three public Internet stations.

Cardholders can stop in or phone to reserve a half-hour of Internet time per day. Extra time is available on a walk-in basis. Patrons with reservations will be asked to present a current Bethlehem library card.

For novices and Webophobes, online and off, help is available in the form of Web tutorials and hard copy how-to books such as Learning the Internet: A Workbook for Beginners. Youth services provides hands-on training for parents and students every Thursday from 6 to 8 p.m.

Webliographies for a variety of subjects are available at the youth services and reference desks.

Because of enthusiastic response to a library program for Internet beginners last summer, "Web Workshop for the Wary" is set for Friday, Nov. 13, at 7:30 p.m.

Automated systems librarian Audrey Watson will introduce the Netscape Navigator browser, demonstrate Internet searching and tour the library's Web page. No Internet experience is required. Registration is limited; call 439-9314.

Russel concluding stellar tennis career for Blackbirds

By Len Tarricone

Clayton A. Bouton High School varsity girls tennis coach Tom Kurkjian has a vivid memory of eighth-grader Trinell Russel practicing her volleys long after a match in which she completely dominated Ravena-Coeymans-Selkirk High School's top player.

"Their coach came up to me and told me how impressed he and his girls were with the sight of our number-one player out there working on her game after destroying their No. 1," he recalled.

It is an anecdote depicting the intangibles that make Russel, now a senior, the special player, and person, that she is.

"She has been such a great role model, with a great attitude and a terrific work ethic," Kurkjian said. "She is tremendously dedicated and is still a wonderfully pleasant person."

Russel closed the book on an outstanding varsity career for the Blackbirds with her appearance in the Section II singles final Oct. 22 against Hudson High School's Megan Yeats at the Capital Region Tennis and Fitness Club.

Yeats, who is probably the finest player to ever come out of this area, male or female, and is ranked 22nd nationally in her classification, won the match 6-1, 6-1 to capture her record fifth consecutive Section II singles championship.

The points and the games did

Voorheesville tennis star Trinell Russel fires a serve. Len Tarricone

not come easily for Yeats, as Russel used all her resourcefulness, talent, and determination to extend the match as long as she could. But Yeats' power game, which will be on display at Arizona State University next fall after her verbal commitment to the school a few days earlier, was far too much to handle.

"I had some decisions to make this week, and lost my focus a little bit," said Yeats afterward. "Trinell made me get back into a groove."

"It was great to play in the finals," said Russel. "It was the most fun I've had all season. I played well and gave it everything I had. She deserved it, and I wish her luck."

Russel may have had the misfortune of having her career paralleled, and overshadowed, by Yeats', but in no way can her own greatness be diminished. Playing first singles on the Blackbirds' varsity since seventh grade, Russel lost one league match in six years.

She won the league singles championship every year and advanced to the state championships four times, including this year's, which starts Nov. 1 in the Catskills. She also won the gold medal this past summer in the Empire State Games singles tournament.

Russel is looking to continue her tennis career at either the University of Maryland-Baltimore County, the University of Delaware or Bowling Green University, at least for now. A straight "A" student, she is strongly considering majoring in physical therapy.

Wherever she goes or whatever she does, her legacy will remain. "When I think of Trinell, I think of her helpfulness and her humbleness," said Kurkjian. "I will miss her for a lot of reasons but mostly because she is a great talent who is a class person."

Stockade-athon set for Nov. 8

The Hudson-Mohawk Road Runners Club will hold its 23rd annual Stockade-athon Sunday, Nov. 8, starting at 10:30 a.m. at Central Park in Schenectady. The 15-kilometer (9.3 mile) road race follows city streets through the Stockade district.

The first five male and female finishers overall and in 14 age groups and four Clydesdale divisions will receive awards. There will also be a one-mile fun run for children starting at 9:30.

Runners can enter between noon and 5 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 7, at Proctor's Arcade at 432 State St. There will be no day-of-race registration except for the fun run. The entry fee is $20 and $2 for the fun run.

For information, call 435-4500.

Bethlehem Pop Warner goes 2-2

The Colonie Packers jumped out to an 18-0 first-half lead and went on to down the Bethlehem Pop Warner Senior Midget Eagles 26-6 Oct. 25. Tah-Quan Jackson scored the Eagles' lone touchdown, and was supported offensively by Brian Dantchez, Darnell Douglass, Ryan Livingston and John Sterrett. John Flagg had a 50-yard punt return.

Defensive standouts included Jorge Luis-Reyes, Shane Cassidy, Nate Panucci, Terence Stanfield and Jerry Saliba.

In other Pop Warner games, the Bethlehem Pee Wee Falcons shot down the Watervliet Cannoneers 32-14 behind Matt McKenna's three touchdowns. Ryan Eder and Zach Patnode scored the other touchdowns. Eder's score was on a 75-yard run. Other offensive performers were Geoff Wilcox, Ryan Miller, Sean Conway, Marcus Hauf and Dan Mulhall. On the other side of the ball, Erik Russo, Matt Carroll and Ryan Murphy had big games, supported by Willie Haas, Zach Smith and Brian Nolan.

Elsewhere, the Junior Pee Wee Condors were blanked by the South Troy Warriors 22-0 behind Brian Burke's two touchdowns.

In one other Pop Warner contest, the Bethlehem Hawks rolled all over the Burnt Hills Spartans, 34-0, as five different players scored touchdowns. Quarterback Will Ryan began the scoring with a five-yard bootleg, followed by Billy Rivers, Tim Hannigan, Sadiem Wood and David Brewster.

The Hawks' solid defensive play was led by Quinn Wilson, Tyler Zink, Jeff Hines, Josh Mack, Jason Hoogkamp, Gary Auclair and Stephen Hannigan. Brian Bird, Tommy Vatalaro, Kip Spencer and Art Koreman also played key roles in the victory.

Bethlehem boys volleyball moves closer to the elite

By Len Tarricone

Shaker High School boys volleyball coach Dave Ford had just called a timeout to settle his troops. The 20-0 league powerhouse was feeling a little heat, down 9-3 in the first game of a round-robin match in the Suburban Council tournament Oct. 21.

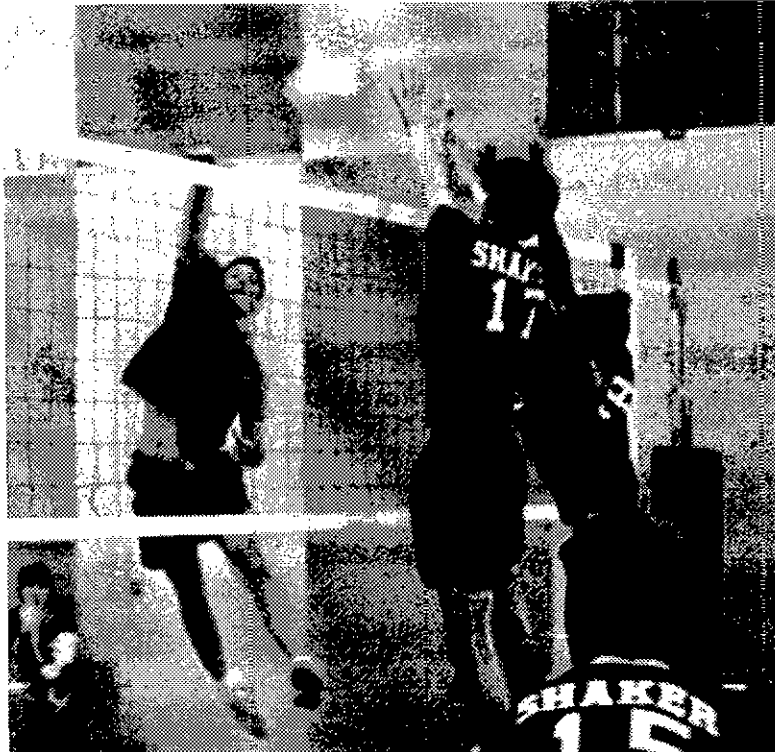

On the other bench, Jim Lemire was hoping his Bethlehem Central High School Eagles could continue this elevated level of play that he had envisioned when he took over a program at ground zero three years ago.

Shaker rebounded to win the game 15-12 and the second game 15-8 after being tied 8-8. The loss ended the Eagles' chances for advancement, and they concluded their season later that night by taking two meaningless games from Mohonasen High School.

But the flashes they showed, not just in this tournament but throughout the season, proved that volleyball at Bethlehem is up from the ashes and on the rise. And for Lemire, who assumed the reins of a program in 1996 that had gone almost two years without a win, his plans for making the Eagles contenders took another step forward.

"Our goal at the outset of this season was to play .500 ball or better, and in finishing at 15-11, we did that," he said.

Jimbo O'Keefe spikes over two Shaker defenders.

Len Tarricone

This comes on the heels of a four-win season in 1996, and a six-win campaign last year. Bethlehem got off to a good start this year, going 6-3 in the first half, including a win over powerful Guilderland. The Eagles finished at 10-8 in the Suburban Council this year, good enough for a fourth-place tie in the regular-season standings.

Lemire came to pre-season this year minus five contributors from 1997, but he had plenty of returning strength, including co-captains Jimbo O'Keefe, Alex Weber and Andrew Switlyk, a trio that formed the nucleus of the team.

O'Keefe is a senior and a three-year starter, a powerful outside hitter who started his career as the team's setter. He recorded 432 kills in 85 games this year and 391 digs. Additionally, he only missed two serves out of 386 and had 48 aces.

Weber is a sophomore and a third-year varsity starter at setter. He made second-team all-Suburban Council last year as a freshman and had 1053 assists this year. His 51 aces were tops on the team.

Switlyk is a middle hitter and started as a first-year varsity player last year as a junior. He led the team in blocks with 151, including 40 solos. He also had 334 kills.

The other starters were junior outside hitter Zac Conley, who moved from the middle this year, another junior, Joey Bartley, at opposite and sophomore middle hitter Matt Treadgold.

Coming off the bench senior middle hitter and first-year player Mike Leczinsky, junior Rob Shaye, who missed only four serves out of 180; senior Ajay Murthy, the backup setter, and another senior, Jared Milano. Rounding out the team were three sophomores — back row defender Bill Combs, setter Brian Axford and Andrew Zox.

Lemire loses his two best players in O'Keefe and Switlyk, but is encouraged by the strength of the junior varsity program, headed by Joan Lillis, and expects some highly skilled players to be vying for varsity spots next year.

"I thought when I took over that by my fifth year we would be looking at a real solid team. Hopefully we can be a power in this league within a year or two, and next year our goal is to contend with some of the big guys," Lemire said.

Local store specializes in computers & personal service

By Ellen Gelting

SOLUTIONS BY DESIGN, 318 DELAWARE AVE. DELMAR, IS A FAMILY-OWNED COMPUTER business that makes its mark in a competitive world by providing a personal approach to home and business computing that the bigger retailers just can't match.

Solutions by Design is owned by brothers Gary and Don Robbins, who have been in business together for almost two years. Both had been working in the computer industry when they decided to get together and open a store that would serve both the home and business computer user.

"We provide complete computer solutions for home and businesses, including sales, networking, service and repairs," said Gary. They also offer free consultations to discuss anything from designing a home or business system to the approaching year 2000 problem. Even if you don't know what you need, the experts at Solutions By Design can make recommendations based on analyzing just what the customer intends to do.

Solutions by Design can repair and service any brand of computer. They sell Acer computers, but also build and sell their own brand using high-quality components like Intel motherboards and chips. These computers are assembled and tested in the store.

We offer a personal touch. We know all our customers and they know us. You deal with the same person each time and that makes it much easier. We keep a file on each customer so we know exactly what they have.

Gary Robbins

Using components makes upgrades and repairs easier and cheaper, explained Robbins, because components can be swapped out.

"If you have a video card that you don't like, we can replace it and it's a $50 to $60 item. The bigger brands use integrated components which may be cheaper initially, but not when it comes to upgrades or repairs," he said.

"In a Compaq, you would have to replace the motherboard, and that can cost $500 to $600," Robbins added.

Robbins sees a lot of people who want to go on the Internet, but just don't know how. "We can set-up an Internet account right on the computer so all you have to do is plug it in and you're ready," he said. "We work with EmpireOne, but we can set it up any way the customer wants," he said.

In addition to expert advice and solutions, Robbins stressed that his business is about service.

"We offer a personal touch. We know all our customers and Gary (standing) and Don Robbins, owners of Solutions by Design.

they know us. You deal with the same person each time and that makes it much easier. We keep a file on each customer so we know exactly what they have," he said.

According to Robbins, the main thing people have to be concerned with is the year 2000 problem.

"Lots of people have problems, but lots don't. What does it take to have us come in? It's free and we can give peace of mind. If they do have a problem, we can offer solutions," Robbins said.

Web Watch

A newly redesigned Web site has been launched to help parents and teachers encourage children to eat right. Apparently, it's not a moment too soon.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, (USDA) only 26 percent of American children eat the recommended five or more servings of fruits and vegetables they should have for good health every day.

Log on to the site at www.dole5aday.com and you will find more than 800 pages on food and nutrition organized in a fun, interactive format including a Just Kids section that contains an interactive menu of nutrition facts and games to help youngsters learn about their favorite fruits and vegetables. There is an e-mail link to animated fruits and vegetable characters.

Online auctions: They're a growing bid-ness

SHOPPING ON THE INTERNET IS EXPECTED TO TOP THE $15 billion mark by the year 2000, according to the research firm Jupiter Communications Shopping on the Internet allows consumers to find great bargains and a wider selection of goods while avoiding the crowds and hassles associated with traditional shopping venues.

One new breed of shopping destination — online auction sites — is exceeding expectations as customers are finding "cyber-bidding" not only a convenient way to find bargains, but an exciting way to shop. It is estimated that there are now more than 150 auction sites on the Web.

Onsale of Mountain View, Calif., a pioneer and leader in auction sites, offers customers a way to get name brand products including computers, electronics, gourmet foods and sporting goods at 15 to 20 percent below retail. Onsale, which launched its site in May 1995, reported approximately $75 million in sales through three quarters as a public company.

"What lures people to the site are the bargains, and what keeps them coming back is the thrill of the hunt," says Jerry Kaplan, CEO of Onsale. One online auction customer, Rick Rockett of Maine said, "On Nov. 5, I was a successful bidder for a Hitachi VCR at a great price. The VCR arrived at my home on Nov. 8. I couldn't believe how quickly Onsale delivered it."

How Does It Work?

Visitors can come to Onsale's site and bid on a wide range of merchandise. The merchandise opens at rock-bottom prices, and buyers can bid on products any time of day during the 24-hour auction cycle. When bidders are outbid, they are notified by e-mail and can increase their bids. At the end of the auction period, the highest bidders win and are notified by e-mail.

At Onsale, monitoring your bids becomes even more convenient with a Java Web application called BidWatch that uses "push" technology. Bidders can find, monitor and bid on items from their computer desktops. Current auction and bid information is displayed in "real time" as prices change.

Five tips for buying online

With online auctions exploding on the Internet, Kaplan recommends the following tips for first time bidders:

- Visit the site in advance to familiarize yourself with the auction process. Check out the reputation of the auction house or selling merchant.
- Select the category or item(s) of interest to you, collect some pricing information and decide how much you are willing to pay for those items.
- Place your initial bid early, as this may help to win the item in the event that your bid ties with someone else at the end.
- Note the closing time of your auction and be sure to monitor your bid at the end — the price often rises at the last minute.
- Don't get carried away in the last-minute frenzy!
- Now that you've bought, try selling.

Always wanted to be auctioneer for a day? Don't forget that after you've won that new item, you can sell your old one at auction yourself.

Onsale recently launched a classified auction site called The Onsale Exchange. Here, small businesses and individuals can sell merchandise through the company's auction management system.

"The Onsale Exchange acts much like a traditional classified advertising service with the added benefit of establishing fair-market price as buyers competitively bid for goods," says Kaplan.

Onsale's Web site is located at www.onsale.com.

Do computers save time?

IN BUSINESS TERMS, IT'S A DISTURBING REALIZATION: BILLIONS OF DOLLARS HAVE BEEN SPENT ON COMPUTER TECHNOLOGY, YET MANY FIRMS HAVE LITTLE TO SHOW FOR IT. AND WHILE GETTING A HANDLE ON HARDWARE AND software costs has proven easy, estimating the cost of time wasted by employees baby-sitting computers seems as elusive as the connection between advertising and revenue.

According to Claude Wiatrowski, author of three technical computer books, computers are simply more expensive than they seem and often are applied in areas where they do little or no good.

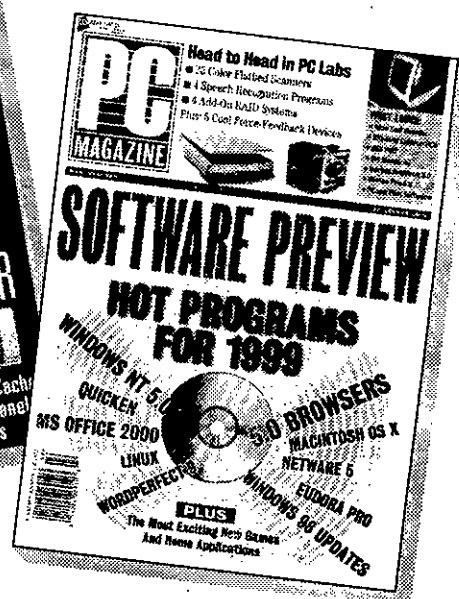

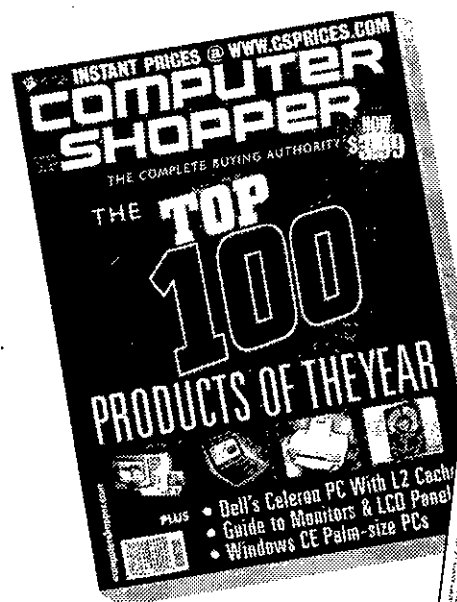

It's a fact that precious few computer applications are known to actually increase a firm's earnings. And among ways to make more money with a computer, increasing employee productivity ranks with the most difficult. Why?

According to Wiatrowski, it's because many employees find themselves spending hours simply trying to make some new feature work. Some employees even neglect their real jobs in favor of more "interesting" computer tasks. For example, a salesperson may expend too much time creating flyers using desktop publishing software and not enough time on the telephone making sales calls. "We are particularly poor at applying computers in certain areas, such as in aiding intellectual processes," says Wiatrowski. "We don't really know how to use them to help management make better decisions so we print out long complex reports hoping that all that data will somehow increase profits."

For example, says Wiatrowski, we don't have software that will help those who are "artistically challenged" create more attractive fliers. In fact, the power and flexibility of desktop publishing software provides dangerous tools to make even uglier fliers — and more of them.

There is help. You can learn about applying computers in your business by watching the videotape Why Computers Don't Make You More Money And How To Fix It. For information on purchasing it, call 1-800-345-6120, department NUS4.

Get ahead by working in neutral

TODAY'S RUNAWAY TECHNOLOGY PLACES AN INCREASINGLY HIGH DEMAND ON OUR hard drives, surge protectors, file servers — even our bodies. Mentally, we are challenged to keep pace with the latest hardware gizmos, software upgrades and Internet wizardry, but time spent at the computer can take a physical toll as well.

If you're interested in maintaining top-speed on the information superhighway, shift to neutral, says fitness expert Judi Sheppard Missett, founder of Jazzercise.

"Nothing stops your momentum as quickly as a physical 'breakdown'," said Missett. "Unfortunately, that's exactly what happens when people fall prey to Repetitive Stress Injuries."

Repetitive Stress Injuries, RSIs, are painful, sometimes debilitating, injuries that occur over time, when individuals perform repetitive tasks, such as typing on a computer keyboard. But, individuals can reduce their risk of injury and increase their comfort by working in "neutral", according to Missett.

"Working in neutral means keeping your body in its natural alignment," she said. "Adjusting your computer station to custom-fit your body is the ideal way to maintain neutral alignment. Frequent stretch, vision and relaxation breaks are also extremely important."

Because the burgeoning use of personal computers, both on the job and in the home, shows no signs of slowing, there is a move to raise awareness among the estimated 73 million Americans who own a home computer and the 50 million who have one on their desk at work.

"RSIs are usually cumulative," explains exercise physiologist

Lauren Spangler. "The trauma to your body actually builds over time. That's why early intervention and prevention education is important."

According to Spangler, you can lower your risk of succumbing to repetitive stress injuries by following these posture tips:

- Relax your shoulders, lift your torso tall and keep your head upright and your chin level.
- Keep your ears in line with your shoulders and your shoulders in line with your hips. There should be a natural "S" curve in your spine.
- Use your abdominal muscles to maintain good posture. This reduces the strain on your lower back.
- When sitting at a computer, keep your feet flat on the floor and use a chair that supports your lower back. Your keyboard should be positioned at waist level, so that your forearms can remain level with your wrists

A new screen saver, CyberStretch by Jazzercise, reminds computer users to take frequent vision and stretch breaks, which can help reduce the risk of Repetitive Stress Injury held straight.

- Take frequent breaks, every 20 to 30 minutes if you perform repetitive tasks. Take a moment to stretch the muscles you are working, as well as those that help maintain proper posture: neck, shoulders, arms, fingers and back

In an effort to address this growing health issue, Missett's company has introduced CyberStretch by Jazzercise, an interactive computer screen saver that reminds individuals to take frequent stretch and relaxation breaks and actually leads them through the process with step-by-step instructions and illustrations.

The application also offers 26 body-specific, timed stretches and 26 action tips (vision and relaxation breaks, posture checks and fitness tips) developed and approved by an exercise physiologist.

CyberStretch is available in Macintosh and Windows formats and can be previewed at www.cyberstretch.com.

A free demo is also available for downloading.

Indians rolling heading into Sectionals

The Ravena-Coeymans-Selkirk Indians have not missed a beat this season, maintaining perfection in the Capital Conference while dealing with adversity. Now that they hopefully have their problems behind them, their play is looking downright scary.

Tailback Gary Jones, two weeks removed from disabled status, rushed for 281 yards and four touchdowns in a 55-0 demolition of Taconic Hills Oct. 23 in Ravena.

"We're doing what we want to right now, and everyone's healthy," said head coach Gary VanDerzee.

VanDerzee said that diversification of his offense to include quarterback Minard Carlner's passing would be a goal for his team as they prepare for Broadalbin-Perth and a home first-round Class B playoff game Oct. 23 at 7 p.m. The Indians beat the Patriots 27-0 in an opening day matchup, when Jones rushed for 251 yards and three touchdowns.

Elsewhere, quarterback Pat Hughes scored three times and tailback Dan Heenan twice, but it was not enough to prevent Bethlehem Central High School from falling to Albany High School 42-35, in a Class AA crossover game Oct. 23. The Eagles will wrap up their season Oct. 30 with a 7:30 p.m. road game against the Schenectady High School Patriots.

Also, The Clayton A. Bouton Blackbirds rebounded nicely from their loss last week to Cohoes with a 53-0 pasting of Hudson High School Oct. 24 in Vooheersville. Pat St. Denis, Tim Beadnell and fullback Tom Gregory all rushed for over 100 yards for the Blackbirds, 7-1, who will host Greenwich in a Class C playoff game Oct. 31 at 1:30 p.m.

Tomboys perfect in fall

The Bethlehem 12-and-under Tomboys swept their fall softball season, a series of five consecutive doubleheaders, by defeating the Colonie Classic Lassies Oct. 18 to finish at 10-0.

The score in the final game was 10-3, as Bethlehem broke open a close game with six runs in the seventh inning. The teams actually played only one game, as Colonie forfeited the opener.

The Lassies were also Bethlehem's first victims of the season, when Tomboy pitchers Nicole Volpi, Katie Dumbrowski, Mandy Calvagno and Kathleen Getz got the Tomboys off to their winning ways. They struck out 25 Colonie batters in the two games.

Lauren Turner reached base three out of four times and scored three runs in the contests.

Latham offered little opposition to the Tomboys the following week, falling 21-1 and 13-3. Victoria Graf was the offensive star for Bethlehem in that twinbill, clubbing a homerun, triple, and double.

Against Shenendehowa the following Sunday, Liz Bouyea and Katie Conklin scored three runs apiece in the Tomboy's 10-6 win in game one before Meaghan Murphy keyed a 7-2 win in the nightcap with stellar offense and defense.

Then, in week four, it was Colonie was once again falling victim to the Tomboys by scores of 15-4 and 9-8.

Anna Rubin homered in the opener and Caitlin Dietz scored the game-winner in the second game.

The team was managed by Phil Volpi, with assistance from Jeff Conklin, John Stupp, Dave Rubin and Beth Clement.

BCHS girls volleyball qualifies for postseason

By Christine Potter

The Bethlehem Eagles girls volleyball team took two of their final three matches to finish at 8-5 in the Suburban Council, and qualified as the eighth seed for the Class A Sectional playoffs. They hosted Albany High School in a first-round game on Oct. 26.

Key late-season wins over Guilderland and Mohonasen cemented the postseason berth.

"Our team was very young this year, and we still haven't reached our potential in what we can do, but overall we played well," said coach Deb Elmendorf. "It has been a wonderful season, and the players have been wonderful to work with. There was a tremendous improvement in each player, and we have laid solid groundwork for next season with both the remaining varsity players and those will be moving up from JV."

Individual recognition went to Jen Siniski, who was selected to the All-Suburban Council team. Kristy LaGrange was an honorable mention choice.

"We are continuing the fight to increase aid to Albany County schools that have been short-changed for 30 years, but we are doing well compared to adjoining counties," he said.

Breslin also has sponsored a bill in the Senate to change the school aid formula and another for public schools to consider pesticide management programs that include notification 48 hours before spraying.

"Those bills dealing with education are an important part of what my constituency believes in," he said.

As part of the pesticide bill, homeowners who plan to spray would also have to notify their neighbors 48 hours in advance.

As the ranking Democrat on the Election Committee, Breslin supports bills alphabetically by last name, computerized election filings, a reduction of money that can be given to individual candidates and the elimination of transfers from different political accounts.

He is also looking to amend the Off-Track Betting formula to make it more responsive to Albany County.

Although Breslin is in the Senate minority, he pointed out that there is only a five-seat difference and that he is able to work with Assembly Democrats and good friends John McEneny, Paul Tonko and Ron Canestrari in conference committees.

"Conference committees allow much more participation by members of the majority and minority," Breslin said.

Among the items Breslin said he is most proud of supporting were funding for University Heights, the STAR property tax relief program, the Albany Plan and the fight to keep State University of New York tuition from increasing.

"Hopefully, we will hold the line on those the next two years," he said of SUNY tuition.

Although Esposito has started running TV and radio advertisements and appearing on billboards, Breslin said he prefers to go door-to-door and meet with different constituencies.

"My strategy has not been so much to rely on the media. It's much more of a hands-on campaign to listen to the concerns of the people of Albany County," he said.

Esposito's legislative agenda centers largely around his work as the unpaid chairman of the Capital District Transportation Authority and nonprofit organizations such as the Palace Theatre, Albany Symphony, Stratton Veterans Administration Hospital-Fisher House and Homer Perkins-Trinity Institute.

His proposals include new shuttles, establishing a rail line to downtown Albany, creating more comprehensive drug rehabilitation and family service plans, removing the gross receipts tax from hospital bills and providing more housing opportunities for visiting families of veterans.

"These are issues that come out of things I do on a daily basis," Esposito said.

Esposito, who retired as division head of Time-Warner Cable three years ago, is still technically a Democrat until after the election because he changed his party affiliation just last year and state law does not allow the change to become official until a full election cycle is complete.

However, after being a Democrat for 20 years, Esposito said he has found a home with the Republicans.

"When I realized what Gov. George Pataki was doing for Albany County, reduction of taxes statewide and creation of jobs statewide, that's where I decided I wanted to be," he said.

Esposito needed a waiver from the Republican party to run on its line but was still eligible to run as a Democrat and tried to run in a primary against Breslin.

He collected 1,400 signatures, but fell short of the 1,000 required for a primary after a Breslin challenge.

"That was a risky political action, but a risk I decided was worth taking," Esposito said.

Breslin and Esposito have debated six times, most recently Oct. 24, and have two more scheduled for Oct. 28 and 29.

"I think that's great. We've really both been at it, and we've been engaged in a lot of conversation," Esposito said.

The third entrant in the race is Right-to-Life candidate Joe Sullivan, who spent 17 years as a staff member in the state Legislature, including a stint as former state Sen. Howard Nolan's chief of staff in the 1980s.

"I have more years of legislative experience than my opponents combined. I wouldn't require on-the-job training," he said.

Much of Sullivan's agenda is based on environmental issues, as befits a man with a bachelor's degree in geography from the University of Wisconsin and a master's degree in geography from the University of Minnesota.

He is a supporter of the Northeast Dairy Compact as a way to help local farmers and claims to be the only candidate who has raised the glycol runoff issue at Albany International Airport.

Sullivan supports a ban on glycol, which is used to de-ice airplane wings.

"Even though they do have a containment system, there is still a runoff into the Hudson River, which is the main source of water to the town of Colonie," he said.

Sullivan also supports a mass-transit system that includes parking at the edge of the city of Albany, clean-air buses and a trolley system.

His education proposals include using a combination of income and property taxes to fund school districts and allowing residents to vote on all aspects of district budgets, which he said will make them more accountable.

"There's not a lot of accountability in the school districts. They're a little like fiefdoms," Sullivan said.

Even though Sullivan has spent less than $1,000 and is on a minor-party line, he feels he can win.

"I'm a qualified, experienced candidate with good ideas. Why shouldn't I be elected?"

dispute that.

"He wouldn't even support Jenna's Law until Shelly Silver decided it would be politically beneficial for his downstate members," Hampton said. McEneny dismisses that comment as part of the "up-state-downstate nonsense" that he said has dominated the statewide Republican campaign effort.

"Jack did absolutely nothing to help Jenna's Law come to the floor," said Domalewicz. "He led people to believe he did." McEneny dismisses this assertion as "very dishonest and very distasteful" and defends the process which produced the final legislation, for which he voted. "For legislation as complicated as this was, the bill was still passed in six months or less when it got to its final form."

Hampton broadens her critique to McEneny's overall record in the area of crime victims' rights and mandatory sentencing. "Jack McEneny, plain and simple, is soft on crime," she said.

Hampton's own law-and-order credentials include a stint as a former Cobb County, Ga. police officer. She is now a fraud investigator for the state Department of Health's office of medical conduct. She vows to support the Pataki administration in its campaign for criminal procedure reform and crackdown on guns in the schools.

McEneny contrasts his own position and what he calls his opponent's "simplistic" stance on crime. "We already have the longest sentences in the world," he said, "what has it gotten us?" He rejects "programmatic punishments for the same crimes" and said, "I believe the Rockefeller drug laws should be repealed. I'm sure she feels exactly the opposite." Hampton readily concedes that.

She also supports the Pataki line on reducing both government waste and the size of welfare rolls, and on tax reductions. In fact, she believes one of her principal advantages as a candidate lies in her ability to work with the administration that will likely remain in power in Albany for the next four years.

But her campaign's most frequently-repeated theme as it nears election day is: "Where's Jack?" She maintains that such institutions as The College of Saint Rose and WMHT-TV have offered to host a debate, but that McEneny "is running from me." No debate is scheduled during the final week of the campaign, and McEneny declined to discuss the issue.

McEneny cites several accomplishments in office, including his efforts to obtain management reform at Capital District OTB; increase state aid to SUNY and local school districts; sponsor cab driver shield laws and the GI Bill of Rights for employment and training; and his efforts on behalf of the state's provisional employees. He is proud of what he considers his maverick stance in the Democratic Party (nine of 13 ward leaders in the district supported Domalewicz in the primary campaign) and dismisses Hampton's claim that she gets along better with Albany Mayor Jerry Jennings as "irrelevant."

Though she virtually concedes the forthcoming election, Hampton said she's in politics to stay. "I never expected to be a candidate. I am not a politician, and I will never turn into what one expects of a politician," she said. "I do know if I'm not successful this time, Jack needs to watch out for next time."

Family ENTERTAINMENT

CALENDARS ♦ ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

David Alan Miller, artistic director of the Albany Symphony Orchestra, assumes the role of Space Captain Dave for a concert this weekend.

By Joseph Andrew Phillips

Two Albany arts organizations that build their reputations principally on their adult offerings devote this coming weekend to catering to the family audience.

Albany Symphony Orchestra resumes its popular Sunday Symphonies for Families series on Nov. 1 at 3 p.m. with a concert at the Palace Theatre that's headed "Out of This World," with ASO artistic director David Alan Miller in the podium in the guise of Space Captain Dave. Meanwhile, on the same day and just a few blocks away the Empire Center for the Performing Arts, the eclectic Actors Collaborative Inc., the Center's theater-company-in-residence, cracks open The Egg's Family Fun Series for the year with an original potpourri called "Fairy Tale Casserole."

ACI are the new kids on the kids' entertainment block. For a theater company that has tackled such adult fare in recent seasons as "Middle Aged White Guys," "Les Liaisons Dangereuses" and the darkly comic "Reckless," family fairy tales are relatively uncharted territory. But they warmed up "Casserole," written by company member Mark Stephens, hot on the heels of a more modest effort.

A modern fable called "Fool of the World" visited area elementary schools last spring, says ACI member Cynde Schwartz, and the group "found there was a huge need for specifically fairy tales for teachers in the early grades." But ACI and director Gary Avazanato saw, Schwartz says, "that if they're going to use fairy tales as teaching tools, we all realized the violence of some of them, the morals, are kind of rough for contemporary kids." All those grimly Grimm tales of wolves eating kids and houses tumbling down on little pigs' heads convey some unintended messages to youngsters nowadays.

Much of the children's literature out there, they found, was similarly wanting. "So we ended up deciding, 'why don't we write one ourselves?'" says Schwartz.

The resulting "Casserole" serves up fractured fairy tales with a contemporary twist. A self-absorbed prince is turned into a wolf, wherein he puts to the test — and learns not to trust — some favorite fairy-tale theses: princes are more interesting and more important than anybody else; all pigs are greedy; all wolves are evil. Walk a mile in a wolf's skin, the story suggests, and you might find that, for instance, all that huffing and puffing and blowing down of houses might just mean the wolf has a bad allergy.

"Kids really enjoy things that challenge their minds and are unpredictable," says Schwartz. And adults will appreciate the contemporary wit.

The production features the work of Capital Repertory costumer Denise Dygert and Mark Carrigan of the local shop The Puppet People. The set is an enormous children's storybook designed by John Fonti, and the ensemble cast features Gina Riano, James Keil, Michelle Smith-Carrigan and Steve Dumas, with Avanzato at the helm. They'll offer two performances, at 1 and 4 p.m. on Sunday, and tickets are $10 for adults, $8 for seniors and children 12 and under. For info, call 473-1845. And if you miss it Sunday, look for it at a school auditorium near you. "Sure, we'll tour it to the schools," says Schwartz. "All this effort and you don't want to do it just once."

ASO's Miller goes on the road with his performance art too. He's in demand to do his family-audience thing as a guest conductor for symphonies in Chicago and Detroit, the Minnesota Orchestra, and "countless other orchestras when I have the time," he says.

And beyond is where his act often takes him. Miller's Sunday Symphony series offers his costumed conducting gigs as everyone from Mozart to his annual favorite, Cowboy Dave, in boots and spurs and cowboy vest. There's usually more than a touch of irony to the whole proceedings that keeps the adults interested too.

"They're aimed at kids between five and 105," Miller says of the concerts. "Designed to appeal on the kids' level and on the much funnier adults level." Cowboy Dave will don his ten-gallon hat later this year, in a reprise of the popular "Cowboy Dave and the Last Reindeer Roundup" concert for the Christmas season, but this Sunday it's the other-worldy Space Captain Dave who'll be taking the symphony orchestra to a galaxy far, far away.

"It's lighthearted, humorous, and I hope very entertaining," Miller says. "But never just about entertainment. There's always an educational underpinning."

His intergalactic endeavors this time around teach a lesson about the history of dance. Members of the Capital Ballet Company will pitch in Sunday as the stalwart crew of the Starship Albany battle an assault by the "Orchs" from Planet "Symph", who take over the bodies of the viola section and rob them of their ability to dance.

The viola section? Explains Miller, tongue firmly in cheek: "Viola players are often the butt of orchestra humor, and our viola section are a very game bunch."

Anyway, it's all in good fun as the audience participates in a survey of dance set to Strauss and "The Nutcracker" and "West Side Story".

"The trappings are very silly," says Miller, "but the underlying mission is to introduce kids to the beauty and the grandeur and the wonder and the challenge of great music."

Can his act be easily duplicated by other conductors? "It's a nice niche I've been able to fill," Miller says. "But it's closely connected to me and who I am. I write them, stage them, and of course conduct them, and it's not easy to graft onto someone else."

"I'm very proud of the series," he says. "It's one of the things we're doing I'm most proud of." And they boldly go where no conductor has gone before.

Tickets for ASO's Sunday Symphony are $12 for adults and $6 for children 14 and under. For information, call the Palace at 465-4663.

Arts for the whole family
ACI and ASO dish up theater casserole and "spaced out" symphony this weekend

Stephen Dumas, James Keil and Gina Riano are just three of the ingredients in "Fairy Tale Casserole," a modern twist on traditional children's stories presented this weekend at the Egg by Actors' Collaborative Inc.

Miller with a group of young ASO fans.

Welcome

on Monday, Nov. 2. "We're delighted to be in the Delmar facility," Barnett said.

Town Supervisor Sheila Fuller will be among the dignitaries on hand to welcome the new neighbors. "Delaware Plaza lost customers when the Dormitory Authority left us, so it's good to see that the building is alive and well again," she said. "I'll be there for the big celebration and to welcome the DOH employees to our community."

DeLaney pointed out that merchants beyond Delaware Avenue could also profit from the influx of population. "There's more than just lunchtime opportunities," she said. "People could patronize local merchants after work, or on their way home. I hope that all the merchants will jump on the bandwagon, and make a great first impression on these employees. I'd like them to see that businesses in Bethlehem are friendly, and that all the town's merchants are happy that they're here."

"These folks will be here for a long time," DeLaney pointed out. "We need to let them know we care."

Library to host genealogy speaker

Frederick Tubbs will share his genealogical research experience in a program titled "Compile and Publish Your Family History," on Thursday, Oct. 29, at 7:30 p.m. at Bethlehem Public Library in Delmar.

To register, call 439-9314.

Haunting Halloween happenings

Traditional Halloween trick-or-treating aside, a number of alternatives for observing the season will be on hand this weekend in the community. A few highlights:

- Preschoolers are invited to dress up in costume for the Bethlehem Public Library's annual Halloween bash on Friday and Saturday, Oct. 30 and 31, at 10:30 a.m. Stories, songs, goblin goodies and a parade are planned at the library at 451 Delaware Avenue in Delmar. Parents can call 439-9314 to register for one program only.

- Super Valu Foods, located on Route 85A and Maple Avenue in Voorheesville, will sponsor its first-ever Pumpkin Harvest Fest on Saturday, Oct. 31.

Spooky or funny jack-o-lanterns will be on display all day; registration for the display begins at 7 a.m.

Then from 11 p.m. to 2 p.m., come by to have your picture taken in halloween costume, or participate in an Oreos cookie stacking. Youngsters have a chance to meet the animals from nearby Otterness farm. And from 6 p.m. to 10 p.m., the jack-o-lanterns in the display will be lit for a spooky finale to the free event.

- Slingerlands Fire Department will host its annual Halloween party and haunted house on Saturday, Oct. 31, from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. at the firehouse on New Scotland Road. There will be candy, cider and doughnuts for all, and the event is free.

- In one of the area's biggest Halloween fests, Indian Ladder Farms in Voorheesville celebrates with a daylong event on Saturday, Oct. 31.

Kicking off at 2 p.m., Tractor-drawn hayrides through the apple orchard will depart from the market on the half hour, through 8 p.m. Hayrides cost $1.

In the barn next to the store, a munchkin pumpkin painting workshop begins at 3 p.m. and at 4 p.m., children can decorate their fingernails for the occasion. The workshops cost $3 a child, and registration is required.

Storyteller Mary Murphy scares up ghost stories for young and old at 5 and 5:30 p.m., and a blazing Halloween bonfire lights up the apple orchard at 6 p.m., reached by hayride. The day is capped off at 7 p.m. with a costume contest in the barn.

Throughout the afternoon, Indian Ladder's Yellow Rock Cafe will serve up a holiday-themed menu: Halloweenies (cocktail franks smothered in cheddar cheese on a bun), Ghoulash, platesful of Bloody Fingers (chicken fingers in a barbecue sauce), and Ghost on Toast (grilled cheese sandwiches cut into ghostly shapes).
