Spotlight collects 7 NYPA awards

By JOSEPH A. PHILLIPS

Spotlight Newspapers came away a winner from last weekend's New York Press Association convention in Saratoga Springs, with seven citations for excellence in NYPA's 1998 Better Newspaper Contest.

"I'm especially pleased to see the talent on our staff get the recognition it deserves," said Executive Editor Sue Graves.

The Spotlight garnered two first-place awards. One of those was for Best Column for Katherine McCarthy, whose "Mom's The Word" is featured in all six current Spotlight and Journal editions.

The NYPA judges said, "The column on the death of the columnist's father was both powerful and sweet, touching on the details of the event that readers could identify with. Very nicely written, not (hitting) us over the head with those details."

"I'm thrilled," McCarthy said on learning of the award. "I think it's a reflection on motherhood, and the fact that people identify with it so strongly."

1st Columbia returns with new game plan

By JOSEPH A. PHILLIPS

Hoping the second time's the charm, a developer returned to the Bethlehem town board last week with a revised proposal to build a 40,000-square-foot family medical center in Slingerlands.

Albany-based First Columbia, which proposed late last year to develop the facility on a site at 12 Maher Road, presented a new site to the town board on March 24.

The new target is a 10-acre parcel on New Scotland Road, adjacent to the Normanskill and currently part of the planned residential district known as Terramere, now in its pre-construction phase. The Maher Road site, facing the former Blue Cross building, being renovated by Picotte Realtors, across Route 85, drew objections from members of the town planning board during its initial review of the proposal in January.

The principal tenant in the proposed facility would be St. Peter's Hospital, which plans to relocate several key satellite medical services affiliated with the hospital's Ambulatory Care Network. "We're very anxious to do this," network Director Pat Waniewski told the town board. "We've been looking for a long time, for the past three years, to consolidate these programs."

First Columbia requested rezoning the Terramere parcel as a planned commercial district, and the town board voted unanimously to refer the question to the planning body for its review and recommendation. The planning board has tentatively scheduled a discussion of the question for their April 6 meeting.

Its recommendation on the zoning issue would later be taken up by the town board at a public hearing before voting on the matter. Should the zoning change be approved, the site approval process would begin, which includes another public hearing before the planning board, that body's state environmental quality review (SEQR) recommendation and site approval, and a final vote by the town board.

Davis

Such a process was launched in January to consider the Maher Road site, but members of the planning board expressed concerns with its impact on traffic on the Route 85 corridor, and objected to rezoning the residential property. Those concerns prompted First Columbia's search for an alternate location in the same area. St. Peter's specifically desired a location close to major highway access, according to First Columbia's Kevin Bette.

Bette told the board his firm still considered the Maher Road site viable.

He objected to Supervisor Sheila Fuller's assertion that the planning board had discouraged his firm from continuing to pursue its development.

"We weren't discouraged," he said. "We were asked to look at other options." He said his firm had looked at "probably a half dozen other sites in the town. Our

School board denies request for more elementary teachers

By MAUREEN FREEMAN

Addressing two of its budget priorities, the Bethlehem school board voted to recommend adding almost $250,000 to next year's budget for new high school teachers and more than $225,000 for programs meant to give students across all grade levels extra preparation for new Regents diploma requirements.

Despite polite but sometimes urgent opposition from a dozen parents who spoke at its March 17 meeting, the board declined to recommend additional elementary school teachers.

In the course of the discussion, Superintendent Les Loomis warned that the town needs to control residential development in order to keep residential tax rates down.

District projections anticipate almost 100 additional students at the high school next year — "the biggest increase in enrollment at the high school we've seen," Loomis said — but it is expected to be the final year of an increase that has swept up through the district's grade levels over the past decade.

The high school will add 4.9 teaching positions to its proposed

Town pols start thinking November

By Joseph A. Phillips

With the Independence Party launching an effort to mount a full slate of candidates for local office in Bethlehem this fall, the major parties' town committees are just beginning the process of sorting out their own candidates. "The crazy season is beginning," said Supervisor Sheila Fuller, who has not yet announced her own intentions on seeking re-election this fall.

The process should be simple for Bethlehem's Republicans, who have incumbents in most of the offices up for election this year. Fuller, along with Town Clerk Kathy Newkirk, Highway Superintendent Gregg Sagendorph, Tax Assessor Nancy Mendick and town board member Doris Davis, are all up for re-election this fall.

With two exceptions, all of the GOP incumbents have so far declined to announce their intentions to seek re-election, deferring instead to the party selection process. Only incumbent councilman Robert Johnson has announced plans to step down, and last week, Newkirk confirmed that she will seek the GOP's endorsement for another run. "I like my job, I enjoy being town clerk, and I will seek my party's nomination," she said.

To identify candidates for open seats, the Republican committee has this year established a special selection committee, which began interviews last week. Republican Chairman Brian Murphy has indicated that the full committee is satisfied with the performance of the GOP incumbents, and would not subject those who wish to run again to this initial selection review, but only to a vote by the entire committee, very likely sometime in May.

The Democrats' only incumbent ostensibly due to face the voters this fall is Munnely. Last week he confirmed he is persisting in his challenge to Newkirk's January certification that his post should appear on the fall ballot. He was elected two years ago to fill a seat left vacant by the death of Peter Wenger. Munnely maintains he is constitutionally entitled to a full four-year term rather than simply the remaining two years of Wenger's.

"I won something," he said of his '97 election. "I just want to determine what it is. We all agree I was elected for at least two years. I just want to know if it's two or four."

Last week, Munnely wrote the county board of elections seeking their decision on the certification question. "I just want someone to determine (whether he must seek election this year), and we'll abide by it," he said. "It doesn't matter to me if I run this year or two years from now."

As for the rest of the Democratic slate, town party Chairman Matthew Clyne said his committee has yet to launch a candidate search. "It's generally an informal process," he said, and predicted it would not begin "crystallizing" until mid-April.

"Nothing has been set in stone at present," agreed Democratic committeeman Matthew Kelly. "I expect that we'll have to wait until a committee meeting next month some time." He did expect that "we'll identify a number of candidates by May 7," when the party will hold a fund-raising dinner at Normanside Country Club. "Typically, they would be, if not announced candidates, well on their way by then."

V'ville plaza to be dedicated May 8

By Joseph A. Phillips

In celebration of the centennial of the village of Voorheesville, a local architect has designed a memorial plaza in what is now Evergreen Park, at the intersection of Voorheesville and Maple Avenues. The centerpiece of the plaza will be a 16-foot high clock now at the village public works garage awaiting installation, and the plaza will be paved with memorial bricks currently being sold in a "Walk of the Century" campaign.

The park will be dedicated on May 8 to kick off the village's formal centennial observances, and Michael Jarus, who is chairing the Walk of the Century campaign, said the installation of the brick plaza and clock will take place shortly before the dedication ceremonies, to which numerous state and local government officials have been invited. Brick sales are moving briskly, Jarus said, and "I anticipate that once the clock is up, additional interest will be forthcoming. Seeing is believing."

The memorial park was designed by architect Bob Mitchell and his son, Samuel, to make the triangular park into a focal point for the center of the village. With the custom-made Victorian clock, designed by Damian Morano of

Cincinnati-based Verdin Design Group, as its centerpiece,

In the center of the red-brick plaza, the clock will be surrounded by shrubs and a low wrought-iron railing. The plaza will have stone benches in its corners, "convenient for people to sit and talk to each other," Mitchell said, with low plantings behind them, so occupants will be visible to those approaching along the street.

Police nab two men on host of burglary charges

By Joseph A. Phillips

A string of larcenies that began almost two years ago at a New Salem gun club came to an end on a Selkirk railbed on March 22, with the arrest of two men after a car chase through three communities.

The pair, and a third man not yet in custody, are suspected by various police agencies of a burglary spree that cut a swath through the Hilltowns and the town of New Scotland to the tune of $50,000. Their apparent motive, according to Albany County Chief Deputy Sheriff Craig Apple, was not profit: "They just wanted the stuff, and didn't want to pay for it," he said.

Police arrested Steven Preston, 20, of 28 Heath Drive, Glenmont, and John D. Northrup, 22, of 218 County Route 402 in Westerlo. Following an alleged burglary at a Colonie Yamaha dealership, the pair, with Northrup behind the wheel, led police on a high-speed flight through Albany and Bethlehem, police said.

According to various police reports, Colonie police responded to a 1:50 a.m. call from a passer-by reporting suspicious activity outside Phibbs Yamaha Motor Sports on Albany-Shaker Road. They found a fence at the property cut and spotted a pickup truck pulling out of the dealership lot, loaded with a possibly stolen all-terrain vehicle. They gave chase, and the ATV tumbled off the back of the truck.

With Sheriff's deputies and State Police alerted, the chase proceeded over Henry Johnson Boulevard and through the city of Albany, eventually entering Bethlehem and proceeding southbound on Route 144. The fleeing truck made several attempts to leave the roadway, allegedly attempted to ram a Bethlehem police vehicle driven by officer Christopher Hughes, and eventually turned onto the Conrail tracks in Selkirk. The vehicle was stopped near Creble Road when it rammed a state police cruiser.

Northrup and Preston were apprehended and charged with larceny, criminal mischief and numerous traffic citations by state police, along with Bethlehem reckless endangerment counts.

Searches of the two men's homes by Albany County sheriff's deputies uncovered a cache of stolen property, particularly at Preston's Glenmont home. The items allegedly link the pair to eight previously unsolved burglaries under investigation by the Sheriff's Department.

Those include a two-year-old break-in at the Bethlehem Rod & Gun Club in New Salem, but Apple said most of the burglaries occurred in the past eight months. Other burglaries included Dunston Brothers and New Salem Power Equipment, both in New Scotland, as well as camps broken into at the Lawson Lake Campgrounds in Coeymans and several other burglaries in Berne and Westerlo.

"They weren't professional about it at all," Apple said. "They smashed windows, pried doors, broke locks and climbed right in."

So far, more than $10,000 worth of stolen property has been recovered, including numerous power tools, clothing, stereo equipment, even a 1998 SkiDoo. "These individuals have caused us a lot of grief over the last 18 months,"

Apple said. Under investigation in the case and likely to be arrested shortly, Apple said, is a third individual, whom he declined to name.

Other police agencies continue to investigate the trio's possible connection to more unsolved crimes. Investigator Roger Williams, assigned to the state police New Scotland substation, confirmed yesterday that state police have been in contact with the Albany county district attorney's office about possible links of the trio to eight burglaries and grand larcenies in New Scotland.

They occurred in the area of Route 32, between Fuera Bush and New Salem, between September 1998 and this January. Articles stolen in these cases ranged from generators and power tools to ATVs and even a pickup truck.

Bethlehem police have also interviewed the suspects in custody, but "at this time, we're not able to connect them to any Bethlehem burglaries," Apple said. The two in custody already face more than 50 felony counts apiece of burglary, grand larceny, criminal mischief and criminal possession of stolen property.

Investigators do not believe the trio intended to sell any of the property. Several individuals with connections to the trio have been arrested and charged with possession of stolen property.

Independence Party seeks to broaden local reach

By Joseph A. Phillips

An impressive 8 percent showing in the 1998 gubernatorial election earned New York's Independence Party, an affiliate of the nationwide Reform Party launched by former presidential candidate H. Ross Perot, the coveted third line on the statewide ballot for this year's election. Now the party is determined to broaden its reach beyond national and statewide contests during local elections in 1999, according to party officials in Albany County.

The Independence committee in the towns of Bethlehem, Ravena and Coeymans has issued a call for candidates to interview in early April for the party's endorsement. The committee's vice chair, Theresa Pillittere, said they hope to enter candidates for all town and countywide races this year.

County chairman Larry Rosenbaum concurred, "We're on the ballot this fall for every election, we're running a candidate for every race. A blank space just doesn't look good on Row C."

Rosenbaum estimated that approximately 3,500 voters countywide are enrolled in the Independence Party, and "in Bethlehem per se, I have to think we're in the 400 range." But those numbers, he said, do not reflect the party's drawing power at the polls.

In the recent gubernatorial election, Independence candidate Tom Golisano drew nearly 14 percent of the vote in Bethlehem, and a somewhat smaller percentage countywide. "That puts real pressure on the candidates of the major parties," he said. "When you have a ballot line picking up that percentage, well, everyone knows the margin is closer than that in Bethlehem elections."

"I think we made a good showing last time, and we will be decisive or swing this year," said Pillittere, whose husband David is chair of the local committee. "And we don't have a lot of closed doors."

The local committee, she said, has requested resumes from prospective candidates by April 15. "We hope to have interviews completed by mid-April, so we have a few weeks to discuss them," she said, before announcing a slate in early May. A full countywide slate will be announced later in the month, Rosenbaum said. "Unless there are some that are clear from the start. That will allow enough time for independent candidates to step forward and for discussions with major party candidates to see what kind of coalition can be worked out."

The party does not expect to run a completely independent slate of candidates this year. "We do cross-endorse," Pillittere said, conceding that the only inquiries she has received so far have been from individuals who are also seeking major-party endorsements.

Rosenbaum feels the party's ability to cross-endorse — what he referred to as "fusion candidacy" — is a powerful tool for coalition politics. "We're definitely working through cross-endorsement to bring about changes in the relationships between the Democratic and Republican parties in terms of the balance. But we are working toward the day we will have our own candidates," he said.

Rosenbaum predicted there would be several local candidates running under the Independence banner exclusively this fall, but would not speculate on where such candidates might emerge.

"We present a window where any citizen who has the ability and the wherewithal and the support of their family to run for public office can make a credible run as a third-party candidate," Rosenbaum said. "We would be thrilled if we had people who were qualified, and had the guts to run, who would try to serve their local community and do it without the major parties' nomination."

Independence has already emerged as a force in several local communities. In New Scotland, where incumbent Democratic supervisor Herb Reilly lost his party's endorsement in 1995, he won re-election on the Independence line along with a separate by-petition ballot line "When I ran on that party it had almost as many votes as the Democrats and Republicans combined," Reilly said.

Though Reilly ran as a Democrat in '97, he also retained the Independence endorsement (and picked up the Conservative line) that year. Should he seek re-election this year, he said, he will again pursue Independence backing. "It's definitely a swing vote," he said.

In Guilderland, Rosenbaum said, the town Independence party ran an entirely distinct slate in the last town elections, though unsuccessfully. "The party is a little more mature in Guilderland than it is in Bethlehem right now, or in the town of Colonie, for another instance," he said.

He believes the third line will make it harder for local parties to drop popular incumbents, as was the case with Reilly. And he said both major parties are gearing up to contest the Independence endorsement this fall. Local chairmen are already reporting registration switches from major party lines to Independence which they believe represent big-party "moles" in the ranks, Rosenbaum said. "That way, no matter who's endorsed by us, they can be primaried and they'll have people there to vote for them on our line," he said.

"All over the country the Reform Party is scratching to have an impact in local races, while we in New York, through cross-endorsement, are having an impact long before we're ready to win elections in our own right," he said.

Among emerging local platform issues, Pillittere cited open water systems — towns sharing their water supplies more freely among their neighbors. Rosenbaum says the issue of police-department racial sensitivity will be an issue, particularly in a largely-white community like Bethlehem.

But local party officials say they will avoid any issue litmus-tests for their candidates. "We're looking for someone who doesn't have their own agenda, who is going to work for the people," Pillittere said. "We're not ruling out anyone by specifics."

Tooting our horn

Spotlight staffers are jubilant about the seven major awards from the New York Press Association this year. The awards were announced this weekend at the association's annual convention at the Sheraton Hotel & Conference Center in Saratoga Springs.

Kathy McCarthy won first place for Best Column and third place for Best Humor Column. Our hats are off to Kathy, who so consistently writes so well.

The Spotlight also garnered a first-place award for Best Editorial Page and second-place for Best Coverage of Local Government.

Sports writer Len Tarricone received second-place recognition for Best Sports Story and the Colonie Spotlight also earned second-place honors for Best Editorial. Former Spotlight reporter Peter Hanson received an honorable mention for Best Spot News Reporting.

These awards are especially gratifying this year since the Press Association received more nominations from weekly community newspapers throughout the state than ever before. We were up against formidable competition. It's nice to receive awards from your colleagues, but the awards are humbling reminders of our responsibility to our community to always strive for excellence.

Project needs review

First Columbia, a developer that is asking for a zoning change to build a medical complex for St. Peter's Hospital on New Scotland Road, seems eager to rush the process along. We've chided town planners in the past for taking too much time on a number of requests, but not this time. Planners, in this case, will get a first look at the proposal sometime in the near future.

This facility is one that needs to be carefully evaluated because of its potential impact on the town. Traffic, and a lot more of it, goes with the turf, and that warrants close scrutiny of the proposal. The town board did the right thing by moving First Columbia's request to the planning board for more careful evaluation.

If First Columbia thinks the process should be moved right along, it should think again. It took Price Chopper the better part of 10 years to gain board approval for its Slingerlands store.

Keeping open space an asset

By Carole Nemore

The author is vice president of the Albany County Land Conservancy and a member of Bethlehem Pesticide Watch.

When I was 10 years old (many decades ago), my family moved to a quickly growing suburb just outside the city limits of Philadelphia.

Our new home was a split-level house in a new subdivision carved out of what were once, woodlands on rolling hills. I remember stepping into lots of mud as we watched our house being built during that wet spring.

My parents had the foresight to select a lot next to the undevelopable land — a small creek bounded by a steep slope on the far bank. In fact, they paid a premium for that wooded hillside because they sought a bit of privacy in suburbia.

The backyard view became the favorite part of our house because it was beautiful no matter what season.

That was also the year that I got my first dog: a Weimaraner pup. She played outside all summer with her litter mate from next door and they drank often from the creek bordering our lots.

Both puppies died in November, and the creek water was blamed. It was my first encounter with pollution and with what would become my life's work.

After living in many cities, five and half years ago I returned to the suburbs — this time to a well-established Delmar neighborhood. Built somewhere around 60 years ago, the neighborhood contains both mature neighbors and trees; everything seems settled down here.

Point of View

But as I drive around the area, I am taken aback by the new subdivisions sprouting up on almost every road that isn't headed toward Albany. My first reaction is to cry "Stop! Stop!" so that our community won't become what my old hometown now looks like — wall-to-wall subdivisions, with wall-to-wall house lots.

But wisdom silences me. I know that no growth is not the answer. It is neither possible nor political to stop growth.

Ill-advised communities that want to save their open space misguidedly start decreasing the allowable density. That only carves up the remaining open space into larger lots. And as the lot sizes get bigger, so do the houses and vehicles.

Traffic congestion becomes a way of life as rural two-lane roads become hopelessly clogged with commuter traffic. Every aspect of life, from buying a loaf of bread to going to school or work, requires another vehicular trip. Sidewalks and biking lanes are not considered, while roadways are widened and traffic lights replace stop signs.

One Sunday morning recently, my friend's 8-year-old daughter asked her mom, "Can we have just one day without getting into the car?"

Are Americans really having a love affair with our cars? Or is it a new form of codependency?

Zoning without comprehensive planning creates the kinds of communities that necessitate driving to almost every other activity that we engage in beside spending a day at home.

Zoning was initially devised as a way to segregate land uses so as to avoid "nuisance" situations, but zoning without comprehensive planning results in sprawl. And sprawl costs money — just look at the skyrocketing costs for highway departments and school transportation. So, the whole town pays.

No one intentionally plans to create an endless sprawl of houses and strip malls, like much of New Jersey. It happens when we don't do comprehensive land use planning, and the only open space that gets preserved in its natural state is the land that is too wet or too steep to build on.

The lucky few, able to pay a premium, will choose to live next to undevelopable land, be it a stream, wetland or slope too steep to build more houses on it. But open space shouldn't be just for the rich.

Here in upstate New York, we cherish views of farms, fields or woods, whether it be from the car window or through binoculars on an early morning nature walk. It's not too late for suburban towns here to save open space, particularly in the areas of town where people live.

The Bethlehem planning board is beginning the process to revise subdivision regulations for the first time in 20 years. This is a historic opportunity to ask more from our town's subdivision controls than the typical subdivision design.

Whatever the density, be it half-acre or 2 acres, new subdivisions have looked pretty much the same. A typical subdivision contains checkerboard lots of approximately equal size and dimension, with houses planted squarely in the center of each lot. Streets are double-loaded and backyards on one street back up to backyards the next street over.

Only the houses on the edge or perimeter have any views of undevelopable lands — wetlands, steep slopes, waterways and flood plains. Few mature trees survive the developers' bulldozers.

Throughout the nation, suburban communities have begun to take steps to incorporate open spaces into every new subdivision. Randall Arendt of the Natural Lands Trust in Pennsylvania describes it as "designing golf course communities without the golf course."

Like my parents, who were willing to pay a premium for their lot, approximately 60 percent of golf course community residents don't play golf. They pay a premium to live there because of the park-like views of the golf course.

Subdivisions built around open space can do the same. Arendt calls them "conservation subdivisions," in which about half the parcel is set aside as permanent open space.

The community, through its planning board, decides what it wants to preserve to define the character of its landscape. Some communities save farm lands, woodlands, fields or historic features like stone walls and barns. On the remaining half of the parcel, the allowable density is doubled.

The developer and landowner get the same or more profitability on half the acreage because new homeowners will pay a premium for lots that look out onto the beauty of natural scenery.

Meanwhile, landowners get to retain the market value of their land while developers get to maximize their profitability by reducing infrastructure costs like road-way lengths. Commuters get to keep their rural roadside views. And the town preserves part of the character of its landscape.

Comparison studies have shown that conservation subdivisions sell faster than typical subdivisions. People buy homes on smaller lots that abut permanent open space for many reasons. One is changing demographics. Baby boomers are getting older while families are getting smaller.

Neither aging boomers nor young parents, for that matter, want to spend every summer weekend caring for their lawn. Aside from mowing and watering, we spend a fortune in time and money applying fertilizers, weed killers, and grass seed in an endless cycle. Raking leaves loses its nostalgia after about a half hour's labor.

Living next door to permanent open space, whether owned by a land trust, a homeowners association, a farmer or the town, would leave a lot more free time to spend with your kids or your golf clubs. Communities like Bethlehem can go even farther. Through their planning and subdivision controls, they can link the open spaces among adjacent subdivisions — into networks of natural lands that thread through developed communities, much like roadways. In this way, we begin to save habitats, water tables, clean air and all the natural amenities of suburban and rural places. In other words, we can plan to save all the reasons why we moved here in the first place.

Thanks to all

Editor, The Spotlight:

I want to express my gratitude to the many members of the Bethlehem community who have shared so much in the way of understanding, kindness and prayers since the tragic death of my son, Jesse, in a fraternity house fire in Geneseo.

I thank each and every one of you for your part in making Jesse's middle and high school years in Bethlehem happy ones and for the fond memories of them I now hold onto.

And please, please make sure that you and your loved ones have functioning smoke alarms.

Board should heed calls for new track

Editor, The Spotlight:

Two years ago, the Middle States Association stated in its evaluation report of Bethlehem Central High School that it had determined the the high school track needed to be replaced.

The replacement was to ensure the safety of students as well as that of other users of the track and to eliminate the annual cost of reconditioning and resurfacing the deteriorated surface.

Parent representatives, affiliated with several other groups, analysed the cost of replacement of the track, as well as that of the high school tennis courts and other physical education facilities. The group determined, after comparing the plan to other suburban council schools, that replacement of the track and tennis courts and ancillary work was less than half of 1 percent of the proposed budget or approximately $30 for the average homeowner in a one-time additional cost.

We intended to present this information to the school board earlier this year so that these projects could be included in this year's budget.

Unfortunately, we were told by the superintendent not to come to the board meeting and that such a presentation would alienate some school board members.

Upon further inquiry as to why this would happen, we were told by one school board member that if we wanted the track replaced, we should raise the money ourselves. Funny, that's what we thought school taxes were for.

It is clear that the existing board does not wish to address the immediate physical requirements of athletic facilities.

There is a remedy for those who think that attitude is misguided. There are three seats on the school board up for election in May. My wife, two older children and I will vote for new people to take them.

Five Rivers to conduct public scoping sessions

The state Department of Environmental Conservation's Five Rivers Education Center, in cooperation with its nonprofit citizens' support group, Five Rivers Limited, Inc., will conduct a series of public scoping sessions for a proposed Draft Unit Management Plan on Tuesday, April 6, Thursday, April 8, and Wednesday, April 14. The sessions will be at Five Rivers Center on 56 Game Farm Road, and will all begin at 7 p.m.

for the center through the year 2020 and to revisit the center's master plan, which was updated in 1993.

The purpose of the scoping sessions are to provide ample opportunity for citizen participation in the planning process and to ensure that the plan addresses salient public issues and faithfully reflects community needs and interests.

Center staff will begin each session with a brief overview of the management planning process. They will then facilitate discussion about what issues and ideas should be addressed in the draft plan.

Those who would like to contribute to the scoping discussions but are unable to attend the sessions can send in comments through Friday, April 30.

Publication of the proposed draft plan is targeted for September.

A preliminary outline of suggested issues related to public safety, habitat management, public use and program administration will be provided.

Those who would like to receive the preliminary outline or to request interested party status should write or call the center at 475-0291 to get on the mailing list.

The principal goals of the plan are to articulate a shared vision

Reading program to review latest research

The more things change, the more they stay the same. This maxim has seen a new incarnation over the last decade in research and discussion about how a child learns to read.

Prevailing pedagogy is reexamined in the library sponsored program "Reading Readiness" on Wednesday, April 7, at the Early Learning Center in Slingerlands. Three local teachers will review new research that validates a holistic approach to literacy and suggests how a child's "significant elders" can nurture the pure pleasure of reading.

"Reading Readiness," an instructional philosophy that has become the standard, holds that verbal skills are acquired in a sequential manner: listening, speaking, reading and writing. Part of the sequence is the sudden onset of a state of readiness at about age 6. New studies show that the four aspects of language development occur concurrently and are inter-related. Dubbed "emergent literacy" by the experts, this view has added the weight of research to the intuition that pre-reading and writing behaviors begin in infancy and are shaped by the language experiences of childhood.

A child sees and hears a parent reading, writing and speaking in the course of daily life — recipes, lists, telephone messages, letters, newspapers, signs, books. A parent reads to a child, and the child begins to grasp the connection between what is spoken and what is written. Over time, the child absorbs and integrates literacy experiences at a rate which, like physical growth, is not equalled in later years.

Societal and pedagogical pressure to introduce the formal introduction of reading at younger and younger ages runs counter to this research. More ominous is the potential for creating a level of anxiety in a child that works against healthy development in general and against the joy of reading in particular.

In next Wednesday's program, the panelists will focus on the importance of parental support in providing a breadth of experiences and a relaxed environment so a child can do what a child does best: absorb, integrate and imitate. The reassurance that "you know more than you think you do" will accompany practical suggestions that will go a long way role was to try to identify a site that both St. Peter's and the town would find suitable.

Bette also expressed concern with the length of the approval process. He said First Columbia hoped to complete construction of the site within five or six months of approval, and urged the board to move forward expeditiously, "in the best way possible."

"I think the way we're headed is the best way," Fuller told Bette. "Did you think I'd give you a different answer?"

The revised proposal calls for the original two-story building to become one and a half stories due to the slope of the Terramere site. Each floor would be accessible from a parking lot level, Bette said. He projected a likely 240-space parking lot surrounding the building on three sides and an entrance aligned to face the Blue Cross site's entrance on New Scotland.

The proposed building, Bette said, is above the 100-year flood line of the Normanskill, and would have minimal impact on the flood plain and on the stability of the site's steep slopes.

Waniewski said St. Peter's plans to relocate its Women's Health Program satellite offices on Delaware Avenue in Delmar, as well as other complementary medical programs, to the new facility. She later identified some of those as pediatric and high-risk obstetric services currently located in Albany, and various adult internal-medicine programs, possibly including laboratory and radiology centers.

Several board members expressed cautious support for the proposal while reserving final judgment. Board member Doris Davis, though raising questions about the site's parking needs and its likely impact on the town's tax base, said she was pleased with the scale of the project. "I appreciate you're listening to us and listening to our concerns," she said.

ULTRASOUND AT THE END OF THE TUNNEL

The carpal tunnel is the passageway in the wrist, bounded by bones and ligaments, that protects the nerves and tendons that extend into the hand. When the median nerve becomes compressed due to swelling or inflammation of the tissues that constitute the tunnel, numbness and pain may be felt in the thumb index and middle fingers to which the nerve provides sensation. These symptoms of carpal tunnel syndrome are often treated with steroid injections, splints, and even surgery. In addition, a recent Austrian study points to the effectiveness of ultrasound therapy. It found that bombarding the wrist with sound waves reduced symptoms and improved function substantially better than placebo ultrasound therapy. And, the benefits lasted at least six months.

Some tips for recycling, reusing various plastics

By Sharon Fisher

The writer is recycling coordinator for the town of Bethlehem.

Plastic recycling might never catch up with the volume of plastics that are produced in the daily waste stream. Sad but true, plastic manufacturing facilities have closed because the volume of certain types of plastics they require for their process has not been realized.

The town of Bethlehem's recyclable containers are delivered to a resource recovery system in Howes Cave because the facility that was being used closed its doors and the new recycling facility has a limited market.

It has been a constant that plastic household items such as flower pots, toys, laundry baskets, berry baskets, deli containers and buckets have never been acceptable in the recycling bin.

Most of these items are manufactured from the post consumer plastic bottles that we recycle in curb side bins or at the transfer station. Since these bottles cannot primarily be manufactured into new bottles for food and beverages, they must be molded into some new things.

PET can be recycled into paint brushes, scouring pads, audio cassette tape cases, non-food containers, six pack carriers, fiberfill for clothing insulation, sleeping bags, pillow and cushions, fiber for carpet backing and rope. HDPE No. 2 is the content of laundry baskets, flower pots and toys, for example.

To decide if the plastic is recyclable or not, think primarily of necks, screw tops and bottles only.

PET No. 1 and HDPE No. 2 make up approximately 60 percent of the recyclable plastic waste stream. Vinyl No. 3 represents a minor part of the plastic containers that are produced.

Here are some additional ideas. Ask the florist if they could use clean flower pots. Ask the local farmer if he would like to reuse the berry baskets. Bring all plastic bags to the grocery store for recycling.

Reuse buckets for bringing compost to the garden or leaves to the curb for storing toys. Donate good toys to local charities or neighbors.

Reuse deli containers to store leftovers or carry food in your lunch box. Unrecyclable, unreuseable plastics go into the trash.

Bethlehem students shine in Odyssey

Three teams from Bethlehem Central schools competed in the New York State Odyssey of the Mind held at Binghamton University March 20.

Odyssey of the Mind is an international program that promotes creative team-based problem solving for students from kindergarten through college. The program teaches divergent thinking and problem-solving skills while participating in a series of challenging and motivating activities, both inside and outside the regular classroom curriculum.

The competition involves solving a long-term problem (which students began working on in October) and a spontaneous problem that is given to the team at the time of competition.

Teams from Slingerlands Elementary School, Glenmont Elementary School and Bethlehem Central Middle School won the state Region 7 competition and advanced to the state finals.

All three teams shone at the state tournament with the Slingerlands team taking second place for Environmental Challenge (Division I) and the BCMS team taking fifth place for Over the Mountain (Division II). The Glenmont team competed in "O My Faire Shakespeare" (Division I).

Sam Boochever, Michelle Clair, Sean Ference, Beth Martin, Sean O'Connor, Analise Peleggi and Rebecca Stern were on the Slingerlands team coached by Chris Alexander and Sally Stern.

Diana Denio, Robert Hoffman, Maggie Jaffe, David Peterson, Damian Privitera, Claire Sacco and

Chelsea Swete were on the Glenmont team coached by Karen Peterson and Nancy Swete. And Mark Black, Virginia Fisher, Katie Himmelfarb, Molly Jaffe, Pete Laird, Kaitlyn Peterson and Peter Privitera were on the BCMS team coached by Paul Black and Donna Scanlon.

Correction

In last week's story about the Capital Region Spelling Bee, Hamagrael fifth-grader Meredith Lutz made it through the fourth round. She missed a word in the fifth round after correctly spelling infectious, immobilize, bludgeon and osteoporosis.

Why do smart people shop resale?

Reason #1: Quality

If you value quality, resale can be your secret weapon. Buying silk for the price of polyester and hunting for treasure is lots of fun. Don't pay for all that national advertising, middleman and store markup!

It's going to be a special, special day. Once he finds his eggs, Mr. O'Malley is taking his wife to the Albany Marriott. Sitting near the buffet, Mr. O'Malley wants to be steps from the fresh salads, fish, cheese and paté platters. And first in line at the chef's carving stations. With fresh roasted pork and Baron of Beef. From there it's right to the hot buffets of roasted leg of lamb, Pacific Red Snapper, Rainbow of Tortellini and more. Completing the day-a sinful display of luscious desserts, including Mr. O'Malley's favorites-strawberry shortcake and apple cobbler. Making him thankful once again for his expanding elastic waistband.

To reserve your place on Easter, call the Albany Marriott at (518) 458-8444.

Conference to address herbal alternatives

Are herbal remedies safe alternatives to synthetic drugs, ineffective placebos or dangerous self-medication? Nationally recognized researchers will present their viewpoints at a daylong video conference on Thursday, April 15, from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Cornell Cooperative Extension's Rice Center on Martin Road in Voorheesville.

Views on Dental Health®

Halitosis (Bad Breath)

Americans spend millions a year on everything from mouth rinses to candy to sprays to improve their breath. Halitosis remains one of our oldest yet least discussed health problems today. Even in the dental office, patients are embarrassed to ask for help if they have bad breath. Consumers go to the drugstore to buy products that temporarily mask their halitosis. This is unfortunate, as halitosis is often symptomatic of a more serious condition that is then left untreated. The cause can be dental disease, lung problems, stomach or sinus problems.

So, don't be shy! Ask your dentist if you have concerns about your breath!

Custom jeweler opens shop on Delmar's Adams St.

By Joseph A. Phillips

A husband-and-wife team of entrepreneurs has gone retail with a jewelry-crafts business that just opened at 125 Adams St. in Delmar.

Stephen A. Roehl, a professional goldsmith and platinumsmith for a quarter of a century, opened a custom jeweler's last week. His wife Margaret will manage the business, and Stephen will design and create custom jewelry pieces for clients.

In a sense, it is not a new business venture. Roehl already has a thriving by-appointment business that has grown to between 500 and 700 "active clients," who purchase one or more jewelry pieces a year.

"The appointment business was very good," Margaret Roehl said. "But we needed to be more easily available to our clients. But we didn't want to be in a strip center, either."

Their target customer, Stephen said, is not the typical jewelry shopper. "Retail jewelry today has become a lot of chain stores," he said. "We feel we can offer a unique service by the way we do it. It's not for everybody. But there's a certain person out there that wants something made just for them."

The Roehl store will not offer jewelry from brand-name makers, but jewelry lines or custom-made single pieces fabricated on the site. "I don't do watches," Roehl said. "I don't cut gemstones. I'm an artisan."

And he has the diploma to prove it. He studied at the School for American Craftsmen in Rochester, affiliated with the Rochester Institute of Technology, and completed a graduate program in fine arts, specializing in metalworking. He began then 25 years as a designer for major manufacturers in California and elsewhere, and eventually, on his own. He was located in South Texas for years, where he built up much of his current clientele.

Margaret Roehl also has a background in the jewelry business. Trained at New York's Gemological Institute of America, she worked in retail sales before relocating to Slingerlands in 1975. Stephen moved to the area in 1987, and they were married in 1992 and went into business together. "We like what we do," Margaret said.

Their typical customer? "There probably isn't a typical customer," said Stephen. "We have clients here and worldwide, and everybody's needs with this type of product vary."

He works in gold and silver but particularly enjoys working in platinum. "It's a great metal for jewelry, very unique, with some distinctive characteristics to it. It's experiencing a resurgence of popularity now, more popular than any time since the '20s."

They anticipate beginning local advertising and direct-mail marketing soon. "I'm sure there'll be more traffic soon," Margaret said. They will offer a handmade line of more than 2,000 pieces in addition to their custom work, and will also offer jewelry restoration services as well. With their hands-on style, they do not anticipate hiring any more than an additional craftsman or two.

Roehl has designed everything from Asian religious ornaments to custom dog-tags to cufflinks specially made for tow-truck drivers. "For a lot of people, jewelry is not a really important part of their lives," he said. "But for a 25th anniversary or the birth of a child, we offer a quality product that's unique to mark those times."

"Jewelry is something people don't need but they enjoy. And we almost always see people when they're happy."

Awards

Mostly I'd like to say I'm grateful to Sue for taking a chance on the column, and for all the help Sue and Dev Tobin have given me with the column and with writing in general. I think it's great that the paper did so well overall. It's an honor to be a part of this organization."

McCarthy also received a third-place award for Best Humor column, in particular her Dec. 9 "Suburban mom drivestellale wheels," reflecting on the implications of owning a minivan. "That's also a reflection on motherhood," she said.

The Spotlight's other first place honor was for Best Editorial page, supervised by Graves. The category judged entrants on the basis of variety, effectiveness and quality of editorial writing; headlines; general design, including original art, typography and general appearance; and editorial writing, letters, and commentary. In particular, the NYPA judges saluted the paper's strong editorial content.

The Spotlight placed second for its coverage of local government, heralding thoroughness of reporting and enterprise of reportage by newspaper staff. Judges commended the paper for "nicely written and researched government news, with some enterprise evident." And former Spotlight Bethlehem reporter Peter Hanson, now with Metroland, won an honorable mention citation for Spot News Coverage.

The Colonie Spotlight received two second-place awards, one for its editorials by Managing Editor Dev Tobin: "tough, straight-forward stuff written without clutter," the judges said.

And sports writer Len Tarricone was awarded second place for Sports Feature, honoring a Sept. 8 piece on state championships won by three children of Colonie's Griner family. "Right from the beginning Len captures the reader's interest and keeps him asking for more," the judges said.

"I'm very proud of our journalists," said Spotlight publisher Stewart Hancock. "It speaks to our commitment to quality in covering local news in our communities, and care and attention to detail in our responsibility to cover local government. I'd like to thank our loyal readers and advertisers 1999-2000 budget in order to keep pace with the increased number of students.

With elementary enrollment projected to decrease by 23 students next year, Loomis advised against hiring staff for grades one to five. Parents, mostly from the two schools with the highest estimated average class size for next year, Hamagrael (23.2) and Slingerlands (23.1), voiced concern about class sizes and district enrollment projections.

Loomis recommended that, beginning June 28, students who enroll after a grade level cap has been met in either school would be temporarily assigned to another elementary school. He proposed caps for the following grade levels: 23 in first-grade, 24 in second, 25 in third, 26 in fourth and 27 in fifth.

"It's a balancing act... and we've got to look at the overall numbers," said board President Happy Scherer. "At this point I think we've got to hold with the staffing we have."

Responding to a parent who asked about new housing developments in Bethlehem adding to the pool of residential property tax revenues, Loomis said, "residential development doesn't pay for itself." Assuming that new housing includes children who will attend public schools, those developments almost always add to the community's tax burden, he added.

"It's ultimately the board's responsibility each year to decide how to strike the proper balance between the needs for the students and the limitations for the taxpayers," Loomis said. "It's something this board and community have managed to wend their way through very carefully in the past."

But the town, he argued, needs better development planning if that balance is to be maintained.

"It's important that this town wake up and recognize that you can't have it all," Loomis said. "You can't have unlimited residential development and quality services at a reasonable tax rate. Something has to give."

Rather than head for a breaking point, he urged, the town should look into attracting business along with residential development.

"We need to consider a tastefully done commercial development that will fit into the character of the town, and it will help to spread the tax base to make education more affordable here," he said. "That's a difficult issue which I think we're trying to work on with the town."

Loomis has told the school board that he wanted to keep any tax rate increases under 5 percent.

SPOTLIGHT ON Family ENTERTAINMENT

CALENDARS ♦ ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

By JOSEPH A. PHILLIPS

The Egg has been interested in doing something for Easter for a long time," said Lloyd Waiwaiole, director of a new family theatrical event set to debut this weekend at Albany's premiere performing arts venue. "It sure seemed like a natural project for them."

There's a joke in there somewhere. (Easter, after all, has done so much for the egg, why shouldn't it return the favor?) But it pays to remember that the formal name of the place is the Empire Center for the Performing Arts, not the familiar nickname that refers to its distinctive profile.

And when Waiwaiole says it's a natural for the center to produce an Easter show, he's not referring to the shape of the building.

"I mean, with all the family shows there," he continued, suppressing a chuckle. "It seemed natural for The Egg to produce one themselves and give it as a gift to the community."

Nevertheless, there is a distinctly whimsical sensibility behind "Eggs for Easter: A Bunny's Tale," the new musical adventure for audiences of all ages about to crack open on Easter weekend, April 3, for a single free performance. Written by Kyle Pulliam, the Egg's production manager, with music and lyrics by the facility's "Egg"-secutive Director, Joan Roberts, it's a whimsical exploration of a really burning, or shall we say frying, question: just why are Easter eggs colored — and how'd the Easter bunny get involved in this egg business anyway?

How's this for a cracked fairy tale? "We tell how the Easter bunny was recruited by the chickens, who make eggs and wanted to give them away," said Waiwaiole. "Now the Easter bunny has a crew of elves that help him make the eggs. But there's an obstacle, an egg-eating schlub who wants to corner the market on eggs, with the help of the weasels."

With me so far? Hang in there.

"The rabbit finds a way to color the eggs to hide them from the weasels, and it sort of catches on," he added — not to mention hiding them from that egg-eating schlub, whose name, by the way, is actually that: Wilma Grouse The Schlub.

Follow all that? No? Well, the cast of characters includes Marva Ray as the aforementioned villainess Schlub; David Dixon and Elizabeth Purcell as a weaselly pair; Brandon Jones as Charlie the Chicken and John Quinan as Mr. Poulet; Barbara Howard and Carol Jones as a pair of elves, and Neilson Jones as the star of the piece, the Easter bunny.

Empire Center premieres Egg-ceptional holiday tale

Actually, the star of the thing may be a piece of scenery, a Rube Goldberg-esque egg-making machine, replete with smoke, bells, whistles, and operators on bicycles and treadmills. "It's a pretty advanced piece of scenery," Waiwaiole said of the contraption.

Wacky enough for ya? For that, you can thank Waiwaiole. A sometime director and longtime costumer with the New York State Theater Institute, Live at the Lakehouse and Cap Rep, he's well-known in local theater circles as a veritable human cornucopia of visual invention. Remember the Albany Tricentennial over a decade ago, and a show at Washington Park called "Nice Tri, Albany"? All those bizzarro costumes, people wearing ships on their heads and so forth? Right, Lloyd's handiwork.

He promises a feast for the eyes and the funny bone in this fastpaced Easter farrago. "I do tend to start from the visual and work toward the characters," he said. "It should be pretty visually exciting. We've done all the tricks." He is abetted in his mayhem by costumer Patty Pawliczak, mask-maker Mark Carrigan and scenic designer John Fonti.

There will be, Waiwaiole promised, plenty of audience participation, lots of kid-friendly antics, and enough sophisticated tongue-in-cheek humor to keep the adults cracking up too.

"We're still fine-tuning it as we get ready to open," he said. "But we've travelled a good ways from what Kyle originally wrote. We've ended up with a sort of childhood commando-kung-fu-fighter mode of storytelling, which wasn't where we were originally headed at all."

Despite all the tomfoolery, there is some content to this omelette. "A lot about holidays and giving and what is good and what is kind," Waiwaiole said.

And the Egg — pardon, the Empire Center — hopes to make this an annual tradition if it cracks 'em up sufficiently the first time around.

And what if the whole enterprise lays a grade-A Extra Large? "We all feel pretty good about it, but nobody's talking about that," Waiwaiole says.

"They don't want to jinx this. They are consciously not even thinking about doing it again until they see how it goes once." In other words, don't count your chickens before they hatch.

You won't have to shell out a dime for this wacky enterprise, but the Egg is, expecting a crowd for its 2 p.m. performance, so reservations, at 473-1845, are a must to avoid a last-minute scramble.

STAN SMITH'S TENNIS

RUN AT AN ANGLE

At the baseline, if you are caught out of position and the ball is hit deep, don't run toward where the ball has landed. You'll be too late.

Instead, stay behind the baseline and move toward the spot where the ball will bounce the second time. This will give you more time to reach the ball, and, if you hustle, you might get a racket on it before it bounces again.
