Reservoir level up, but restrictions stay

I don't want to raise any hope

The recent rains and snow of early spring have begun to replenish Vly Creek Reservoir, according to a recent reportfrom town Public Works Commissioner Bruce.Secor.

But Bethlehem Supervisor Sheila Fuller warned last week against any expectation that the emergency wateruse restrictions imposed by the town board last month will be lifted anytime soon.

In a memorandum dated April 3, Secor said that as of April 1, the reservoir, the town's principal residential water source, has regained more than four- and- a-half feet of depth in a month, and stands at 46 percent of capacity — about nine-and-a-half feet below, or 61 percent of, its seasonal average storage.

"With the rain and snow received in March, the level is now out of the 'emergency' stage and is now in the 'warning' stage," Secor wrote. "This is good news, but the reservoir needs to continue to refill at least another 5 to 8 feet before the drought can be declared behind us."

On average, the reservoir stands at about 76 percent of capacity on April 1, heading for an average peak of 93 percent in May as spring rain and snowpack runoff replenish it.

Fuller said last week that she anticipated that the emergency restrictions on water use put in place on March 13 will remain in effect at least until May. "I don't want to raise any hope that we'll lift the restrictions soon," she said. "It's too premature."

Moreover, as a condition of the emergency supplemental water agreement entered into between the town and the Albany Water Board in February, which provides the town with 2 million gallons a day of supplemental water from the city, the town is still obliged to maintain a plan to reduce its average water consumption by 20 percent and the restrictions voted last month are a key element of that plan.

Sheila Fuller

Still, the April 1 reading was a significant improvement over the reservoir's levels of January and early February, barely two feet above "disaster" stage. In climbing above 60 percent of seasonal average, the reservoir is now above the "Emergency" level specified in the town's water emergency plan — by just half a foot. It remains far below the 80 percent of average seasonal capacity considered "acceptable" under the plan.

With the onset of spring, the town board's restrictions on residential uses of water are just starting to take effect, so the recent precipitation, and the use of supplemental water from Albany and Guilderland in place of further drawing down of the reservoir, is largely responsible for the March rebound.

That Guilderland water will be cut off May when that town begins its own annual supplemental purchases from Mark you calendar for a big top performance at Elsmere Elementary School, 7 p.m. on Friday April 12. Parents and community members are invited. Students and staff will be treated to an earlier show at 1:30 p.m. the same day. Peter Hogan, Elsmere's physical education teacher, said the program started two years ago as an enrichment activity offered to students where they could learn a variety of circus skills. It is a before-school volunteer program. The students were introduced to a progression of juggling, plate spinning, devil sticks, rola bola boards and unicycling.

The program is designed so that each student can explore an activity, practice it and master it to the extent of their own ability and interest.

Not only is the equipment available for practice sessions at the school, but students can sign out equipment to take home for a week of practice. While most of the equipment was purchased new, Hogan was able to find several skatebikes in a used equipment shop. Students must master a skatebike before progressing to unicycles.

Student development in the program is recorded on "Skill Cards."

These cards are large pasteboard cards, approximately 18 by 24 inches with the skill listed on top, for example 12 repetitions of juggling beanbags. The master level of each skill is recorded on separate cards and requires demonstrating by a student the ability to Charter One Bank in Slingerlands helped state and local police collar three downstate residents in a⁴ recent bank-fraud scheme - and the March 29 Bethlehem arrest may be only the tip of a much larger iceberg.

The three, all 23 — Rosalind Ann Ebanks and Calvin Robert Byrd, both of Manhattan, and according to Bethlehem detective Devenus Davis of Brooklyn were apprehended near the bank at Price Chopper Plaza with roughly $9,000 in cash and numerous fraudulent business checks in their possession.

Arraigned before town Justice A tip from an alert teller at Theresa Egan, each was charged with a single felony count of criminal possession of a forged instrument, as well as attempted grand larceny, a misdemeanor. Egan ordered all three held without bail at Albany County jail and set an April 16 date in Town Court.

Additional charges are likely, supervisor John Cox. Bethlehem police met last week with representatives of Albany County District Attorney Paul Clyne and "at least four other (local) police

At least one other incident at the Slingerlands Charter One branch involving some or all of the threesome arrested last week is under investigation, according to a police report.

Cox said the suspects are believed to have been involved in attempts to pass fraudulent checks in banks in Colonie, Guilderland, Albany and Rensselaer County, as they did unsuccessfully in Slingerlands.

"There will definitely be other charges filed," Cox said. "Just based on police departments we know about, they've done a lot of damage in a very short time. Within the last 30 days throughout the Capital District, banks were hit pretty good and pretty hard (in similar incidents).

"We were unaware that they were in the area," Cox said. "It was only a teller who noticed something suspicious and alerted a supervisor that brought this to us. That bank teller ought to be given bonuses galore. They've, helped a lot of people."

The teller attempted to distract Ebanks and Byrd while a supervisor called the Bethlehem police, who in turn alerted officers in the vicinity. The first to arrive on the scene at about 11:43 a.m. was a state trooper on patrol on Route 85.

Davis, waiting outside the bank, alerted his companions, who attempted to leave. The state trooper, assisted by the Bethlehem police, apprehended Davis and Byrd at the bank; Ebanks fled but was soon picked up by another state trooper at the Hess station across the street.

The suspects' car, left running _ and parked in the bank's handicapped space — for which transgression they were also ticketed — was searched. Two Charter One bank envelopes were found, containing nearly $8,000 in assorted cash, along with more than a dozen uncashed checks and pages torn from a local telephone book, with various area bank branches marked.

A license check disclosed that the would-be getaway vehicle's registration was suspended.

The suspects also had more than $1,400 in cash on their persons. Police are still investigating where all the cash originated — and how far the fraud scheme may have reached. Grand jury indicts two on dog crueity charges

By JOSEPH A. PHILLIPs

An Albany County grand jury has handed up an indictment charging two individuals with violations of Buster's Law in an apartment they formerly shared on Hanover Drive, just off Rockefeller Road in Delmar.

According to assistant district attorney Holly Trexler, who presented the charges before the grand jury, the indictment handed up on Wednesday, March 20, charges James Richard, 24, formerly of Albany, and Olivia Mullins, 21, the renter of the Hanover apartment, with one misdemeanor count against the felony count each of aggravated cruelty to animals under Buster's Law, as well as four misdemeanor counts apiece of cruelty, torture and failure to provide sustenance.

"Unfortunately, on the Buster's Law charges, the maximum amount of time they would do (if convicted) is two years, and the misdemeanors would run concurrent with those," said Trexler.

Mullins was arraigned on the charges on March 22 before county court Judge Thomas Breslin and released. Breslin set a May 6 appearance date to entertain motions on the case by Mullins' attorney. Richard, who was being held in Albany County jail on unrelated charges of kidnapping, assault and coercion at the time in a case involving an Albany woman, was arraigned on the Buster's Law indictment on March 26.

"Certainly (Mullins') defense attorney can make a motion to sever the cases, but the grand jury indicted them together, and it's our intention at this point to try them together," said Trexler. "They were both in the home with the dogs, they were both responsible for them, and they were both aware of the situation."

Most of the charges against the pair resulted from a Dec. 4 investigation at Mullins' serious charges against Richard.

apartment by Bethlehem animal control and police officers. An adult pit bull and four puppies, one of them suffering serious wounds inflicted by a harness meant for a much smaller animal, were found unattended, left without food and water in the apartment for several weeks.

The felony counts, Trexler said, relate to the condition of the and injured dog, the misdemeanors to the failure of Mullins and Richard to provide adequate food, water and sanitary conditions.

Trexler said the remaining two derive from an incident on April 23 of last year when animal control officers responded to the same address and found two adult pit bulls in a garage in similar condition.

The animals were not confiscated in the April incident, but those found in December were turned over to the Mohawk & Hudson River Humane Society shelter in Menands for adoption. "They have all been placed," said Trexler — including the most seriously injured dog. "His name is Lucky now, and he's doing quite well," she said.

Despite speculation that the dogs might have been bred as fighting animals, "There's no indication at all that (Richard and Mullins) used them to fight," Trexler said. "They also were not aggressive to each other, which is a good indication that they were not used for fighting.'

In a separate incident, Richard was indicted by the grand jury Dec. 27 in connection with a November allegation of torture involving a former girlfriend, a case being prosecuted by assistant district attorney Peter Torncello. Mullins has not been implicated in the torture incident, and Trexler said the Buster's Law case will be prosecuted independently of those more

Car wash looks to buy property

By JOSEPH A. PHILLIPS

Glenmont Car Wash is seeking to buy a 3.45-acre parcel behind the Monro Muffler outlet on Route 9W to allow for future expansion of the business. Last Wednesday, April 3, following a public hearing, the Bethlehem zoning board of appeals granted preliminary approval of a zoning variance to permit the property transfer.

The zoning board also approved a proposal to permit a new owner of a former farm at 81 Kenwood Ave., Glenmont to resume agricultural use of the property — specifically, to permit the boarding of horses there. That proposal had been the subject of a March 20 public hearing.

Monro's proposal to transfer the parcel at 454 Route 9W, declared surplus property by the Rochester-based company, to Bethlehem Auto Laundry, owner of the Glenmont Car Wash. required amendment of the special exception approved two years ago to permit the Monro facility to be built.

Attorney Ralph Mancini presented the variance request before the board last week on behalf of Monro. Also in attendance was Tom Aspenleiter, head of Monro's real estate and operations. Dennis O'Shaughnessy, owner of the car property. wash, in operation for more than three decades on Route 9W.

The board voted to approve the application, pending drafting of a final resolution by counsel Peter Bishko,

Following up on an earlier public hearing, the board also discussed the request of John and Holly Lutz - who are purchasing the 81 Kenwood Ave. parcel, near the road's eastern end, from its current owners, a family trust of the Schulz family — to rebuild both the family home and a horse stable for up to a dozen animals, both currently situated on the

as well as several conditions to minimize any potential traffic impact of the operation. They requested that Bishko draft the appropriate resolution for consideration at the April 17 meeting.

Board member Marjorie O'Brien said that "putting it back farmland is certainly as advantageous to the town.'

Pockets are windows into son's active life

By KATHERINE McCARTHY

If our eyes are the reflection of our souls, what, then, do a child's pockets reflect?

Emptying 9-year-old Cormac's pockets before doing laundry provides a paper trail of recent activities, solves a few mysteries and offers abit of insight into the soul of our family's liveliest member.

Cormac lives life at full tilt. chattering, cocking his head to one side and squinting when he needs to size something up and making quick associations and word plays wherever he can. He is a self-proclaimed collector, part of the reason that his pockets are so very full at the end of each day.

"I'm saving Starburst wrappers," he proclaimed once, and, doting, fostering or stupid mother, I let piles of them collect on top of the dryer, until I came to my senses. The same "mouse" who ate the rest of his Easter cookie, was the reason he had to stop eating graham crackers in his room, and took the milk carton gingerbread house to the great mouse hole in the sky, became the reason the wrappers finally had to go.

Good nesting material, I said, and though we haven't seen a mouse inside for a few years, the fear of vermin outweighed Cormac's desire to hold on to candy wrappers. He consumes a lot of food during the day for a boy who goes to school only with lunch money. Evidence of furtive trips to the pantry in the afternoon show up days later as I pay homage to my favorite saint, Our Lady of Perpetual Laundry, In his pockets, there are fruit rollup wrappers, cereal bar wrappers, pistachio shells, and once a straw included. Pieces of his social life hide in his pocket, with notes. "I swear to God I have 11 'Lord of the Rings' books," "How do you get to the next level in Super Smash Melee?" and "See if I can come over this week" are just some of the exposed missives that lurk in those murky depths.

Not every pocket yields vicarious romance for a bored housewife — a great deal of the pockets' treasures are administrative in nature. There's often a school banking receipt, or the little wrist wallet that is the perfect place to carry lunch_money.

Seasonal changes show up in his pockets, too. It's easy to tell when the school playground has been freshly mulched. It must smell too good to leave on the ground; four or five pieces often poke slivers into my finger before I remember to proceed more cautiously into the pockets that once yielded a cicada carcass. Colorful maple leaves are perfect autumn treasures, and one June, I received a bouquet of dandelions daily, except for the one or two that wilted in his pockets. Pencil stubs, crayon bits and pencils carry evidence of scholarly work. They are overlooked at our peril, and once, everyone's clothes had splotches of cerulean blue on them.

Treasures travel in his pockets, too, sometimes so valuable that all the laundry goes from the basket to the floor while he hunts down the pair of pants where they might be hidden.

Currently on the "never be, without" list are Ribby and Alex. a tiny plastic frog and an alien with a bow on top of her head. They apparently meet up each day with two pals who inhabit another Preteen brother Christopher's pockets are nowhere near as exciting; he is an enigmatic person, and his pockets go to the hamper disappointingly empty of clues.

Chris Sr., seems to have too many pockets, all of which he empties each day into a baseball cap placed upside down on the dining room table. A handkerchief, coins - quarters, mostly, and a few Euros as a reminder of a recent trip — a comb, a couple of pink "While You Were Out" slips and a crush of lottery tickets. A small stack with credit cards and a driver's license, keys, and disappointingly few bills of any ilk.

My pockets have changed as the children have grown. When the boys were small, and our life took us along the sidewalks of New York, there was likely to be money, a Chap Stick, keys, personal paraphernalia, and the leg from Flippable Head Power Ranger Tommy.

Life is less exciting now; we live in an upstate suburb, and I can put the things I need in a purse, to carry from the house to the car to the store. I no longer need to worry that I will reach, into my pocket for money to pay for something at the newsstand, and present the shy Pakistani man with a feminine hygiene item.

Stuffing things into my pockets also gives me a little insight into my younger son, who likes to carry his world with him. It's funny to see what he holds on to, and I can only hope that his pockets will be so deep all his life.

Planners recommend denying variance to funeral home

By JOSEPH A. PHILLIPS

Bethlehem's planning board voted last week to recommend that the town board deny a rezoning request from Meyers Funeral Home in Delmar. The town board will take up that recommendation at its meeting tonight.

The recommendation is one of two rezoning requests scheduled for consideration by the town board at its 7:30 p.m. meeting. It will first conduct a public hearing on the request by developer Lee Rosen to rezone parcels at the intersection of Feura Bush Road and Elsmere Avenue, currently designated AA and AB residential, to create a new planned residential district.

Rosen proposes a 92-unit duplex development called Waldenmaier Estates for the site.

Funeral home wner Ben Meyers said that in order to remain competitive with other funeral operations, he hoped to expand his existing building at the intersection of Delaware Avenue and Longmeadow Drive.

Banks, he maintained, are reluctant to provide financing for improving a property with a restricted use like his, currently zoned AA residential but operated as a funeral home under a special exception granted almost four ·decades ago. He sought rezoning to CCC commercial.

But in discussing the request at the planning board's April 2 meeting, member Joseph Rooks expressed concern about the impact of an expanded funeral operation, or other potential commercial ventures permitted under that zoning designation, on the numerous residences near the funeral home.

"No matter how you cut it, the intent here is to make a commercial venture capable of attracting more business and more traffic — a larger building, more pavement, more of everything which the existing system of control through the non-conforming use process is designed to contain," he said.

The board considered creating some sort of a buffer between the property and nearby residences or granting rezoning conditional on the business remaining a funeral home. But chairman Doug Hasbrouck questioned whether the board would be "on solid ground" if it did so.

the authority to try to reinterpret or redesign that part of the code in any way," Hasbrouck said. "If we vote to change this to a CCC zone, that's what it becomes" and any restrictions would be of questionable legality.

He also warned that granting Meyers' request ran the risk of violating legal strictures against spot zoning.

"This is not something I like to do," Hasbrouck said. "I don't like to tell an applicant they can't do what they want to do. I just think it would be a bad precedent for us. I think it's risky for the town."

At board member Marcia Nelson's suggestion, the board voted unanimously — with only Howard Engel, abstaining - to recommend rejection on the grounds that Meyers' proposal was "not in accordance with the comprehensive plan for the general welfare of the community" embodied in the current zoning code.

That recommendation is scheduled for tonight's town

"I'm pretty sure we don't have board agenda. To consider of the project. overriding it would require setting a public hearing. Concurrence would not - and the rezoning request faces an uphill battle before the town board.

Both Supervisor Sheila Fuller and board member Doris Davis are on record as opposed to the request when first presented two years ago, and board members Dan Plummer and George Lenhardt expressed reservations.

Also on the planning board's agenda last week were several residential subdivision proposals. The board took a first look at Troubadour Estates, a proposed 12-lot subdivision of 61 acres on Route 9W at Church Road. Owner Bernice Ott seeks to convert the former farm site to ranch-style single-story residences.

Another presentation concerned a two-lot subdivision of a plot at Adams Street and Palmer Avenue in Delmar. Board member Brian Collier, whose family owns the plot, will recuse himself from future consideration applications.

It also began review of a revised subdivision plan for the 61-acre Cedar Hill Farms subdivision on Route 144 at Dinmore Road, originally proposed two years ago with 9 lots.

A revised plan submitted last month now calls for 14, including 12 to be developed for sale and two retained by the current owners, who plan to restore a 1790's Dutch farmhouse there and reactivate the property as a working farm. The revised plan also included a proposed parcel to be donated as park acreage to The board tabled both the town. But the board recommended further research on the usability of the proposed "pocket park" and consultation with the recreation department on the proposal.

> The planning board's next meeting, on April 16, is likely to be devoted entirely to residential development, including continuing consideration of the proposed 50-lot Meadowbrook Section 3 on Blessing Road, 17-lot McCormack's Hollow on North Street in Slingerlands and a twolot subdivision on Werner Avenue.

Tattletale signs

It was only a matter of time, even though we'd like to think it couldn't happen here in Bethlehem. But happen indeed it did - the "water police" have surfaced, anonymously, of course.

Rick Schrade of Schrade Insurance in Delmar received a phone call complaining about the recent power washing of his building on Delaware Avenue. The caller left a message that said he was uncertain about whether or not to "turn in'

Schrade to the town water department.

Whatthe caller didn't Editorials know was that Schrade had hired an outside firm from Niskayuna that used no Bethlehem water to clean the building.

Whatever happened to "love thy neighbor" or at least "respect thy neighbor and give thy neighbor the benefit of a doubt" before making anonymous calls with implied threats. This is not the wild west, and the age of vigilantism is long past.

Many of our residents frequently tout the town's special ambiance and its reputation of being friendly and welcoming.

The self-appointed water police sully this image. Shame on you, water police, for jumping to conclusions that were completely erroneous.

Just imagine what will happen this summer when innocent residents fill their pools — with outside water — and get turned in anyway for violating water restrictions. And heaven forbid, what if overly moist flower beds are discovered and reported, even if the culprit is using water from a private well?

Let's hope things will not degenerate into such pettiness. Let's hope Bethlehem's image as a friendly town will prevail.

Most people we've talked to understand the town water restrictions and offer helpful water conservation suggestions for us to pass on to our readers. Most folks, we believe, will willingly comply with the restrictions without the unwanted "assistance" of the water police. We urge the water police to turn in their badges and tap into some common courtesy.

Before pointing fingers, check out the facts. Rick Schrade asks that next time the water police phone him, the caller should leave a name and number. The 43-year town resident said be happy to get back with an answer promptly.

We doubt, however, that Schrade will ever get that call. Anonymous callers tend to cave when asked to fess up and admit who they are. It's a little like letter writers who don't sign their names. The Spotlight's policy is to give these letters no consideration at all.

State holds loaded gun at districts

By ALAN McCARTNEY

The writer is superintendent of the Voorheesville school district.

Taxpayers in the town of New Scotland, along with others in the state of New York, will find their tax bills much higher than usual this May when presented with their annual school budget.

A combination of flat state aid, changes in reimbursement for construction projects, state mandated services and late state budgets have created a fiscal crunch for school districts that's not been seen since the recession of the early 1990s.

According to a recent poll by the New York State School Boards Association, districts are confronting an average tax hike of 12 percent if there is no additional state aid.

The recovery effort in the wake of the World Trade Center terrorist attack will put a major strain on state coffers. This reality is not going to change no matter much time passes. how Therefore, it made sense for the Legislature to engage sooner rather than later in serious discussion and reasonable compromise and pass an on-time budget. It is obvious now that this will not come to fruition.

An on-time budget would have allowed us to make more realistic decisions about what level of program we can afford to deliver. We would have a more accurate estimate of revenues before we finalize our budget to take to voters in May.

Decisions about whether or not to add new programs or delete existing ones would still be tough and emotional for our community, but at least those decisions could be made with solid financial data as opposed to guesswork. Our voters expect the tax rates that we quote them in May to be reasonably accurate. But how can they be when state aid is such an unknown factor?

If we estimate state too generously (and the tax rates turn out to be higher), we face the wrath of our taxpayers who retaliate by voting down budgets. Yet if we estimate too conservatively (and make unnecessary educational sacrifices), we face the disappointment of our students and the unhappiness of our parents and teachers. Either way, our children suffer.

The state's "bare-bones" budget of last August and a 'supplemental budget" of October essentially ignored the funding formulas that have been used to determine school district aid.

This "freeze" for all practical purposes was a reduction. Our district lost nearly $186, 562 as a result of flattening our payments for BOCES aid, excess cost and revenue we are able to generate from investments. In our case, we are anticipating that amount to be $90,000 less that usual.

• Health insurance costs continue to skyrocket. Our increases are in the neighborhood of 8 percent to 10 percent.

There is also a rash of state laws and mandates that make it difficult for schools to constrain costs. Students who score low on reading and math tests must receive Academic Intervention Services from certified teachers above and beyond the "normal" school day.

Services for handicapped students are regulated by both the state and federal governments. These regulations stipulate the amount and types of services that must be provided and the staffing that is required.

> Aid for these services has been expense-driven. However, last year, the state's late budget flattened the payments, and this is expected to happen again this year.

> Schools must run fingerprint and background checks and will be required per period. The total financial impact of Schools Against Violence in Education legislation and the new federal No Child Left Behind legislation has yet to be fully felt. All of these whims, wishes and mandates have a price tag

The combination of increased mandates and loss of state aid has greatly impacted the Voorheesville school district. The total effect to date is well over a halfmillion dollars. The loss in state aid totals $430,560 by itself.

This is equivalent to a 10 percent reduction in state aid. This loss in aid is equivalent to a 4.5 percent tax increase. A district our size cannot absorb that kind of financial setback without making cuts and changes in our program.

We have struggled these past months to find a vast array of cutbacks to bring our projected tax increase down. We have worked hard to protect core courses and those needed for students to fulfill state graduation requirements. The bottom line is that all courses and services have been evaluated in terms of need and efficiency. We have been asked by the state over and over again to do more with less, and in many cases have had to borrow from one place to make another work. We can do no more with less and the places we borrowed from do not exist any more.

transportation aid. These are maintain attendance by student payments that were due for services already rendered, and are payments we expected to receive based on current aid formulas.

Rather than risk overestimating state aid and making mid-year cuts, we are planning for little help from the state. Therefore, along with other districts, we have no choice but to work on a worst-case assumption: that the state will repeat its move this year to balance its own budget shortfall by passing the problem on to local communities through the manipulation of state aid formulas. In addition to the specter of a flat state budget, there are plenty of other reasons for our revenue woes, including:

 The state this year is forcing districts to re-amoritize long-term debt by stretching out the length of time it takes to reimburse districts for capital construction projects, which means many schools will get smaller payments over a longer period of time. The major impact of this legislation is on existing debt and will cause us to lose $244,968 of our total building aid in 2002-03. Pointing to Sept. 11, insurance companies have raised liability rates for school districts and other institutions. Our rate increase is estimated to be between 15 percent and 20 percent.

Your Opinion Matters Retired engineer blasts Earth Tech report Senior Services

Editor, The Spotlight:

The seven angled wells proposed by Earth Tech will be a complete waste of money.

Iron hydrate will precipitate in the pore spaces of the sand aquifer surrounding the well screen causing a decrease in well yield. The horizontal wells can not be unclogged with hydrochloric acid without major releases of acid to the ground and Hudson River waters.

The lawsuit will have to be resumed. It will take years to settle the lawsuit, and there is no guarantee that the $20 million in damages can be recovered.

The town should negotiate with the defendants in the lawsuit, turn the Clapper Road system into an industrial water supply, take water from the river and settle the lawsuit as soon as possible.

It is illegal to take drinking water from the class C Hudson River and the clogging of the aquifer sands with iron hydrate makes it impossible to obtain 6 million gallons of ground water per day. If this water supply continues to be classified as a drinking water supply, the Clapper Road water system will have to be shut down.

All of the damages, including the $10 million invested in the treatment plant and pipelines, will have to be recovered from the lawsuit. Drinking water purchased from Albany will have to be used for cooling water. The water woes will continue for years.

If it is an industrial water supply only, industries will have a reliable source of filtered Hudson River water that can be used for cooling or other industrial uses. The $10 million invested in the pipelines and the treatment plant can be fully recovered.

The Earth Tech report clearly shows the collector pipe in the 1,000-foot-long infiltration gallery is clogged with iron bacteria and that the aquifer sands immediately adjacent to the gallery are clogged with iron hydrate. Earth Tech agrees with Clearwater for Bethlehem's February 1995 petition to DEC to revise or revoke the permit.

The large amount of hydrochloric acid required to unclog the gallery makes it impractical to restore the gallery to its original 1996 yield. Earth Tech's report shows that the vertical well constructed by the defendants in 1998 is also clogged with iron hydrate.

The dissolved oxygen, color and turbidity in the ground water from the December 2001 pump test of the angled well also clearly shows that iron hydrate is precipitating and clogging the pore spaces in the aquifer sands near the 65-foot-long, essentially horizontal well screen.

If hydrochloric acid is fed into the well over the 65-foot-long length of the screen, the heavy acid will flow down through the bottom of the screen the same as for a perforated horizontal pipe

Mr. John Decker of Waste community. Management seems to be very eager to share his plans with us now that his plans have finally been made public.

His concern for the integrity of the public review process comes on the heels of a few civic-minded individuals with real integrity working from the grassroots level to inform the community about Waste Management's plans, demanding a full public review and an explanation as to how they got as far as the planning board process with serious zoning issues unanswered.

His statement that, "We have maintained an open door policy and welcome input into the project design in order to address legitimate public concerns" is belied by the fact that the project has been before the planning board since February last year without notice to the immediate

WM's door was 'closed' until letter

Waste Management has been free to share its plans with the community from the start and has chosen not to. Will Waste Management educate us and tell us which of our many concerns are legitimate and which are not? As far as all the wonderful things that Mr. Decker promises to bring to the town of Bethlehem, he has conveniently left out 77; garbage trucks. 300 Dumpsters, operating hours of 4 a.m. to midnight, seven days a week; a 10,000-gallon above-ground fueling station and 60 vehicular trips per hour. He is right in saying that, "In reviewing this project, the public should ask itself whether such benefits would be proposed by any other future developers of the site."

We hope not.

Mr. Decker claims that his opponents have misrepresented the facts to further their agemda and yet he continues to misrepresent the facts himself.Will this project bring significant employment to the town of Bethlehem? From Waste Management's own EAF (Environmental Assessment Form), it claims that 145 existing jobs will be brought to the site as a consolidation project. No new permanent jobs will be created. Who is misrepresenting the facts?

The people who brought this to the light of day? If this was such good news for the town of Bethlehem, why didn't Mr. Decker write this letter back in early 2001 trumpeting all the good news?

In additon, for Mr. Decker to imply that Waste Managenment would not get a fair review of its project in the town of Bethlehem is outrageous.

French-American Varietals

Developed between 1880 and

1950 by French scientists, these grapes combine the taste of Vitis vinifera grapes with the hardiness of native grapes, those discovered by Viking explorers and which led them to name America "Vinland."

Whites of this varietal include Cayuga, which was developed by Cornell University and released in 1972 and which produces a medium-bodied wine; Seyval Blanc produces a lighterbodied wine similar to Chardonnay; Vidal, an acidic grape sometimes used to produce late-harvest wines like ice wine; and Vignoles, another acidić, aromatic wine, balanced with sweetness to produce dessert wines.

Baco Noir, a versatile red grape of this variety, sometimes is used to make Nouveau-style, medium-bodied wines.

Vitis labrusca

Usually crossed with other species, Vitis labrusca was the native species that began the New York wine industry. These grapes are resistant to disease. and hardier than European grapes.

Today, only the red Concord grape is believed to be a "pure" Vitis labrusca. It produces a sweet wine and is used to make ports, sherries and Kosher wines. Its flavor is that of Concord grape jelly and the grape juices also made from it.

White grapes of this variety are the Catawba, a crisp grape used in sparkling wines; Delaware, which is a red grape whose skin is discarded to make white juice for sparkling wines; and Niagara, a sweet, aromatic grape also used for juice.

Parents asked for help

Editor, The Spotlight:

INE SPUTLIGHT

Since 1991, parents of seniors at Bethlehem Central High School have established a tradition of giving the senior class a drug and alcohol free, all-night party following graduation.

The Graduation Celebration is a memorable, highly attended event for the graduates, filled with games, entertainment, food, prizes and the opportunity to spend one last time together in their school setting.

Preparation and planning for the celebration is well under way. Traditionally, the parents of graduating seniors plan the celebration and parents of juniors work on the night of the celebration as volunteers.

This year, the Celebration Committee is seeking volunteers from parents of all BCHS students to help out at the event. Contact Ginny Coulon ar 475-1668 or Joann Dawson at 475-0207 if you can devote some time on the evening of June 28.

The funding for the celebration is one of the biggest challenges. The Fund-raising Committee has already requested donations from senior families, area businesses, community organizations, professionals and religious leaders. Contact Lisa Plummer at 439-6516 or Gary Oliver at 439-4856 to make a donation.

The support of the entire community in the past has made the Graduation Celebration a memorable and successful event. Please help us this year to provide a fun and safe night for the class of 2002.

Don't miss hearing on development plan

Editor, The Spotlight:

Since the only notice the public is given is hidden in the back of the paper, this letter is to inform people of the public hearing about the latest project that Lee Rosen has in store for us, on April !0, at 7:30 p.m. at town hall in Delmar.

Rosen wants to cram 90-plus condos on the farmland on the corner of Feura Bush Road and Elsmere Avenue. This requires a zoning change.

When I first moved here 23 years ago, Feura Bush Road was mostly farmland and single family homes on at least an acre of land. It remained like that until the developments came. Each one was designed to cram as many units into each parcel of land.

I unfortunately live right next to Rosen's last project (Haswell Farms). We have endured $40,000 dollars worth of damage to our property as a result of this project and the water damage that they admitted to causing and the five-plus years of a constant parade of dump trucks, concrete trunks and construction equipment from 6 a.m., six days a week.

The reason for zoning is to protect the character of the neighborhood, not to change it into another Clifton Park.

See you at the public hearing. Art Ceas

Girl upset by pesticide use

Editor, The Spotlight:

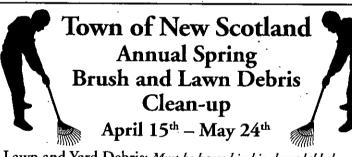

I rescued a dying bird recently. It lost all use of his legs. We took him to a woman in Selkirk who works for an animal rescue, who kindly took him in. She said that the bird probably lost use of its legs from lawn pesticides

This really upsets me, because animals such as birds, deer, chipmunks and rabbits are poisoned, and many are dying from the poison. It's not always direct contact, but sometimes from eating poisoned insects and plants, that these animals are seriously harmed. All animals in the food chain are dying because people are careless, and don't know the dangers of using hazardous chemicals. They care more about the perfect lawn than the great environment around them.

That poor robin might not ever be able to use its feet again. If the robin can't use its feet, it can't fly. Animals can't read warnings and precautions on the lawns, so they think the lawn is safe. Your lawn isn't as important as the earth.

Kids get a glimpse of careers for future reference

By KATHERINE McCARTHY

The future came a little bit closer for Bethlehem's 435 seventh graders last Friday, as nearly 70 community members talked about their work during career day at the middle school.

Monica Bush and Trish Henning, family and consumer science teachers, organized the. day.

"Part of our curriculum includes covering different careers," Bush said. "We've done this for the past six years. We ask the students to invite people family members, neighbors, friends - and this year we had an overwhelming response. Nearly 70 people came to talk with the kids.'

Each student attended four 40minute sessions, and speakers ranged from horse trainer Marc Hockenberry to District Attorney Paul Clyne. Some of the multitude of guests included surgeons, nurses, engineers, police officers, accountants, lobbyists and professors.

Computer programmer Kevin Cleary, whose daughter Casey is a seventh grader, was one of the participants.

"It's important for kids to get ideas about jobs and their futures," Cleary said. Cleary had worked for Metropolitan Life in Pennsylvania, and is currently a computer consultant.

"I talked about working conditions, since I've worked everywhere from my own great office to the loading dock," Cleary said. "Given the times, I also talked about the ups and downs of the job market." Diane O'Brien has taught many different subjects of nursing at several of kids huddled in the cold as Hockenberry talked about how he got to be a horse trainer, work he describes as "a dream come true."

Hockenberry gives private lessons to people with their own horses, one of whom is seventh grader Erica Wegrzyn, who is sure she'll always work with horses.

"I talked about the different colleges that have equine help them start thinking about. degrees you can have to get into science," Wegrzyn said. "This is my life.

O'Brien, whose daughter Sarah "a career path found the day useful and interesting.

> It's good to see what choices there are, and learn about careers," Amanda Nasner said of the day.

"The nurse was really nice, and Outside the building, a group it sounded like she had fun with her work," Justine Prior said.

"I enjoyed the nutritionist and the insurance person," Brittany Downing said. "I never thought about insurance before." Getting the kids thinking about things they might not have before is one of the goals of the family and consumer science curriculum in seventh grade.

"They do an interest inventory to consider," Bush said. "I'm already looking at in seventh grade," Bush said, "to things they like, and things they're good at. We explain that Other students not yet set on they will probably change their minds many, many times before they settle in to a career. Sometimes they have one thing set in their mind, and the interest inventory might come back with something different."

> In fulfilling the state-mandated curriculum by focusing on careers, kids start to focus on more immediate concerns, like their educational path.

> This, Bush said, is the main reason that it's good for kids to get exposure to specific careers at such a young age.

> "Kids need to start thinking about what education they need for the careers they might want

New line on IRS form could cause confusion, delays

Many early filers this year have instructions. made an error related to a new line is for the Rate Reduction Credit, which taxpayers use if status.

This credit is the only new line on the basic tax forms — line 47 on Form 1040; line 30 on Form 1040A: line 7 on Form 1040EZ.

Read its instructions carefully so you get the proper benefits. Errors can delay processing of refunds.

Some taxpayers are putting their Advance Payment amount on the credit line, when they should be leaving the line blank. If you have already received the maximum amount for your filing status, just skip the Rate Reduction Credit line on your tax form. The maximum amounts are: $300 for a single person or a married person filing separately; $500 for a head of household; or $600 for a married couple filing jointly or a qualifying widow(er).

Other taxpayers, who should claim a credit amount, are leaving the line blank. These people received less than their filing status maximum amount as an Advance Payment and their 2001 income — generally higher than it was in 2000 - entitles them to claim the credit on their return.

The credit and the Advance Payments are how the new tax law gives one of its main benefits for 2001 — a 10 percent tax rate. Instead of having people wait until -they file their 2001 tax returns to get a larger refund, the law provided for Advance Payments to be made last year, based on the returns for 2000. If the 2001 income and filing status would give a larger benefit than the Advance Payment, the taxpayer may claim the difference as a Rate Reduction Credit on the 2001 return.

Dependents were not eligible for Advance Payments or the Rate Reduction Credit, but they may get the benefit of the lower tax rate by completing the "Tax Computation Worksheet for Certain Dependents" in the tax Taxpayers who made an error line on the federal tax form. This related to this credit on their returns should wait to see if the IRS catches it during processing. they did not receive last summer's If the IRS does not contact them Advance Payment in the by the time they receive their maximum amount for their filing refund, they should file an amended return to correct the error.

> Here are some of frequently asked questions about about the Rate Reduction Credit and the Advance Payments:

• How can I find out if I can claim the rate reduction credit? Use the Rate Reduction Credit Worksheet in the 2001 tax return instructions to find out if you are eligible to claim the credit and. if you are, the amount of the credit.

• What do I do if I need help in completing the worksheet or want additional information about the Rate Reduction Credit? For help in completing the worksheet, call 1-800-829-1040. For more information about the credit, call TeleTax at 1-800-829-4477, press "3" to listen to recorded tax topics and choose topic 609.

· How do I know the amount I received as an Advance Payment of my 2001 taxes?. The IRS sent taxpayers a notice informing them of the amount they would receive and the date to expect the check.

• What do I do if I don't remember the amount or misplaced the notice? Call TeleTax at 1-800-829-4477 and follow the easy instructions. Follow the prompts for a touchtone phone, then choose English or Spanish. You will be asked to press "1" if you want to know the amount of your Advance Payment, more commonly known as "rebate." Continue to follow the instructions — entering your Social Security number, filing status and number of exemptions on your 2000 return — and you will be told the amount of your Advance Payment.

• What do I do if my Advance Payment was the same as the maximum amount for my 2001 filing status? You won't have to do anything — just leave the Rate Reduction Credit line blank on your tax return. The maximum You should have received a notice amounts are $300 for a single filer married person filing or separately, $500 for a head of household and $600 for a married couple filing jointly or a qualifying widow(er).

• What if I did not receive the full Advance Payment that I believe I was entitled to? Use the Rate Reduction Credit Worksheet to figure what, if any, credit you may now claim. Enter the result, if more than zero, on Line 47 of Form 1040, or Line 30 of Form 1040A, or Line 7 of Form 1040EZ. If you, or your spouse if filing jointly, can be claimed as a dependent on another person's 2001 return, you cannot claim the credit.

 I did not get any Advance Payment because my 2000 income was too low and I had no tax. Will I be able to claim the Rate Reduction Credit? Perhaps, check the Rate Reduction Credit Worksheet to see if your 2001 income and filing status qualify you for the credit. If you still have no taxable income, you can't claim the credit. You also don't qualify if you, or your spouse if filing jointly, can be claimed as a dependent on another taxpayer's 2001 return.

 I file my own tax return and my parents claim me as a dependent on their return. May I claim the Rate Reduction Credit? No, dependents cannot claim the credit and were not eligible for Advance Payments. But they may get the benefit of the tax rate cut completing the Tax bv Computation Worksheet for Certain Dependents in the instruction book for the form they use. If you were a dependent on another taxpayer's 2000 return but were not a dependent for 2001, complete the Rate Reduction Credit Worksheet to see how much, if any, credit you may claim.

 What if I did not receive my Advance Payment because I still owed money on a previous tax year? You still received the benefit of the Advance Payment even if all or part of it was withheld to pay back taxes, other federal debts, or past-due child support you owed.

explaining any such offset. If your Advance Payment amount was greater than the offset, you should have received the remainder in a check. You cannot claim the Rate Reduction Credit to recover the offset amount.

· I moved last year and never received my Advance Payment check. Now I'm told the government can't send it to my new address. What can I do? The law provided for Advance Payment checks to be sent only until the end of 2001, so it's too late for the Treasury to send one now. You can get the same tax cut benefit by claiming the Rate Reduction Credit on your 2001 tax return.

My tax situation has changed since 2000 and my Advance Payment would have been less if it had been based on my 2001 return. Do I have to repay the extra amount I received? No. Even though your income may be lower or your filing status changed in 2001, the law provided that you would not have to pay back any resulting "excess" payment.

come together, so I'm used to seeing deer here, maybe as many as two or three of them at a time. But I never expected to see a whole herd of them, running down the middle of the road, and coming at my car.'

"This winter, there have been a lot more deer than there were in previous winters," said Bob Kelley, a resident of Weigand Lane in Delmar. "We've had 14, 15" deer standing in our backyard.

"It's been amazing this year. And we've found that they're eating things they've never eaten before. They're eating my next door neighbor's yucca plants, basically a cactus. They're eating five-needle pines. They've never done that before.'

In Bethlehem, deer are here to stay, in greater numbers - and increasingly acclimated to residential development. They browse in family flower gardens, drink from backyard birdbaths and wander in public roadways and driveways.

"They've scared the hell out of me," said Kelley. "I walked around the house, and there was an eightpoint buck looking back at me."

The exact dimensions of the problem are unclear. The state Department of Motor Vehicles has gathered statistics on animalrelated accidents for years, but only in January did it establish a separate statistical category devoted especially to deer.

Bethlehem police department's annual statistical digest lists no specifics either, but the number of car-deer accidents reported in town are believed to be on the rise — including a number not far from core residential neighborhoods.

'Deer are losing a lot of habitat," said senior wildlife pathologist Ward Stone of the state Department of Environmental Conservation, whose lab is mental Education Center. "The Bethlehem area has an awful lot of development. If you come down toward my lab through Delmar, along Orchard and Fisher Boulevard, the loss of habitat is tremendous.

"If you look back at the changes since I came here as a pathologist in the summer of '69, it was all cornfields out here. The fields were not growing up to menu in his neighborhood - and some pole beans too high for the deer to graze.

State and federal wetlands protections and the practical considerations of building in-Delmar's uneven terrain leave plenty of interconnected ravines for the animals to traverse. The rise of stringent animal control laws has also "been very helpful to them," Stone said. "With leash laws, the habitat is there, but the dogs are not." And in suburbia, they need not fear hunters.

"Here, you've got deer who've gotten used to the sounds of suburbia," Stone said - and grown less fearful of traffic. "It's not unusual to have deer dash across the road down that whole patch of Delaware Avenue," he said.

Unright's encounter, she said, came shortly after 2:30 p.m. on Wednesday, March 27. As she drove westbound on Delaware, what she estimated at 10 animals emerged from a field adjacent to Verstandig's florists and bolted into the road.

"It happened so fast, I didn't think I could outmaneuver them,' she said. "One deer looked like it was going to smash right into my driver's side window. But at the last minute he jumped up, like a reindeer flying. I saw a hoof as it passed by the window, and then I heard a scraping noise across my roof."

The animal then joined others heading for a wooded lot near Bethlehem Public Library - an undeveloped parcel owned by Henry Klersy and known to harbor an assortment of foxes, skunks and other wildlife.

"I was so scared," Unright said. "I thought I was going to die, honestly."

There is no way of knowing the number of unreported accidents or near-misses, like Unright's, but 30 accidents have been reported to Bethlehem police throughout the town since Dec. 1, with December the peak month. Fortunately, only two have involved serious injuries to motorists or passengers.

Deer tend to be most active with the onset of winter, when typically deprived of forage; the winter of '01-'02 has been comparatively mild, or it might well have been worse. Accidents occur mostly after dusk and before dawn — but they have occurred this winter at the height of rush hour and around noon, in spots like Kenwood Avenue and Route 85.

Multiple car-deer collisions were reported this winter on Route 85 in Slingerlands, from Blessing Road north to the inruway overpass; on River Road, near Clapper, and near Maple Avenue in Selkirk; on Fisher Boulevard near Route 85, an area of heavy residential development; on the Delmar Family Owned and Operated Since 1968 Bypass near Elsmere Avenue; on Route 9W near Jericho Road, where an off-duty Bethlehem policeman struck a deer while attempting to avoid two others on March 21; and on Route 32 near Mead's Lane — where three accidents were reported in less than four days around New Year's.

Unright's near-miss is no fluke, either, in the heavily-trafficked, residential core of Delmar, roughly bounded by Delaware, Kenwood and Cherry avenues. At about 6:50 p.m. the day after her encounter, another motorist struck a deer on Kenwood near Gardner Terrace, also near the Klersy lot — the sixth reported Kenwood car-deer accident this winter.

In December, police and DEC officials confirmed the existence of a herd apparently frequenting the Klersy woodlot. On Dec. 11. residents of Weigand Lane spotted a female whitetail deer, with a hunter's arrow in its face just below one eye, roaming the woods. After other sightings, one by a resident armed with a video camera, concerned neighbors contacted police.

That brought a team of DEC officers and police to the woodlot on Dec. 22, organized by Stone and town animal control officer Richard Watt. With a handful of neighborhood volunteers, they conducted a "deer drive" to corral the wounded doe.

Luring it into the clear with bait, they shot it with a tranquilizer gun, and tracked it into the woods. Stone removed most of the arrow shaft, and the deer was treated with antibiotics, tagged with a livestock tag, fitted with a radio collar to track its movements and revived.

Neighbors — who Kelley said dubbed the doe 85, its tag number, or Arrowhead observed her in the ensuing weeks as its behavior became disoriented and sluggish. The doe was finally destroyed by Watt on Jan. 22 near Weigand Lane, where it was first spotted. Later DEC examination revealed an infection in its brain.

DEC senior wildlife pathologist Karl Parker, who also tracks deer in the Albany Pine Bush, said insufficient data was gathered on the doe to draw many conclusions about its movements — except that for well over a month, it apparently remained stubbornly in the same small patch of woods.

"We only got two or three fixes on the deer from the time we put the collar on to the time it was destroyed," said Parker. "I hesitate to say very much with just the little information we have. but contrary to my expectations, it didn't move a whole lot. It appeared to have a very narrow home range. There are little ravines and patches of woods that suspect deer are inclined to use out that way."

Also found in the Klersy woodlot during the deer drive was a dead eight-point buck — hit twice by cars. The team also flushed out numerous live deer.

"It would be interesting to study these suburban populations and see what's going on, but these deer did not act like the deer I knew when I grew up in Columbia County," Stone said. The normally highly-developed flight response "There's a reason they're called whitetails," Stone said -was lacking in these, which merely milled about where directed.

Kelley's observations support that. "I really do think they're losing their fear, maybe because of their numbers," he said. "Even when the dog's in the backyard, they don't run away, they just move off into the shadows."

Kelley's nearly daily visitors, whom he said have worn a path through one corner of his yard, "all look skinny, small this year." Understandable, said Stone. "That was an awful lot of deer for a little patch of woods there," he said. "And there's very little for them to eat in that patch of woods."

So they roam the ravines and dart out into the roadways.

"Any time you have wildlife that is acclimated to people, being around residences, they tend to relax their guard and get used to people being around," said Parker. "In my experience and opinion, the thing that tends to keep deer more wary and more wild is hunting activity." But, as Stone pointed out, these deer are "non-huntable populations, except by archers."

Which raises a question about the late Arrowhead: Are bowhunters roaming her narrow Delmar range? "God, I would hope that is not the case, that nobody is hunting in those woods," Stone said. "But there's no way of being certain of that."

A more immediate concern: "Now, besides other cars, drivers have to watch out for wildlife," he said. As for backyard gardeners fearful of losing their zinnias or concerned about insects bearing Lyme disease or West. Nile — he recommends planting species that deer won't eat, like forsythia and lilacs.

"People should enjoy the fact that here in America, there are many kinds of wildlife so near at hand," said Stone. And he means that as a point of policy: When the town planning board sought the input of regulatory agencies recently on the environmental impact of an application concerning the Waldenmaier Estates development on Elsmere Avenue, DEC took the critters' part, urging provisions to avoid displacing deer from the Dowerskill.

Does Kelley mind them in Delmar? "Only when we plant the garden," he said. Yet despite losing his tomatoes every summer, "I love seeing them out there," he said.

That sentiment may be lost on motorists. "What are they going to do about it?" said Unright of her near-miss. "It's getting really bad. it's not just an Now inconvenience. It's getting dangerous.'

Albany. And, Fuller said, "People seem to forget that the place where we usually get our supplemental supply every summer (Albany) we've already been drawing on at higher than normal rates for months" --- so additional supplemental water above those purchases won't be forthcoming this summer.

So, with virtually no snow pack to melt this spring, a full restoration of Vly Creek's volume before the onset of the summer months, when that volume traditionally begins a steady seasonal decline, depends on a rainier-than-average April and May - or identification of other water sources.

Secor noted that the town has already written the state Department of Environmental Conservation regarding its Stage III

Diversion system, which draws to the reservoir rainwater runoff and overflow from Helderberg Lake which might otherwise run off to Onesquethaw Creek.

Under an agreement with DEC dating back to 1980, the town is barred from using Stage III during the months of May and June, largely due to seasonal environmental concerns like trout spawning.

But on March 28, the town requested that DEC lift that seasonal restriction.

We will continue to work with DEC to try to get this approved prior to May 1," Secor wrote.

In the meantime, Fuller said, the town will have to wait and watch before changing any of the restrictions.

"Hopefully, we'll have a raimy April," Fuller said. "And we'll keep a close eye on the reservoir."

Bethlehem's track and field teams finally have the facility they've been waiting for.

The new track at the football field saw its first meet last Thursday when the Bethlehem girls team hosted Burnt Hills-Ballston Lake. The boys team was scheduled to make its home debut yesterday (Tuesday)⁻ against squads from Columbia and Saratoga.

"It's been a tremendous help to practice and not worry about people stepping in holes and hurting themselves," Bethlehem boys coach David Banas said. There were spots (on the old track) that were like potholes. We had to paint circles on the track to warn the kids."

The new track surface was installed last summer as part of a refurbishing project that included a new storage shed and new fencing around the track and football field.

"I think overall they're real good," Banas said of the new facilities. "The jumping areas are laid out in a much better location. There's more of a natural flow for athletes to go between running and jumping events."

Bethlehem will reap the rewards of its new track. It will host the Suburban Council girls championship meet May 14.

Maintaining an optimistic outlook may extend your life. In fact, researchers found that an optimistic outlook can reduce the risk of heart disease by almost 50%. While other studies have linked heart disease to negative emotions and stress, this is the first study to link optimism with the onset of heart disease. The study involved 1,300 healthy white men, average age 60, who completed a personality test designed to assess levels of optimism/pessimism. Then, health information was gathered on most of the men for ten years. At the end of that time, it was found that those with high levels of optimism had a 44% lower risk of developing heart disease than the men with high levels of pessimism.

It's not always easy adopting a positive outlook but certainly it's one of the best antidotes to stress and unhappiness. At Good Samaritan Lutheran Health Care Center, 125 Rockefeller Road, our staff is energetic, supportive, and experienced in offering encouragement and professional care for those who come to us for services. Spring blooms carry special meaning

By KATHERINE McCARTHY

Daffodils in Delmar have become a sure sign of spring, ever since the Bethlehem Garden Club and the Community Appearance* Committee organized town-wide bulb plantings a few years ago.

This spring, a dozen very[<] pecial daffodils will join the blooms that turn their heads upward to greet the warming sunof the new season.

Six bulbs sit in patriotically decorated clay pots in Town. Supervisor Sheila Fuller's office; another six are at Hamagrael school. The bulbs are just a few of one million daffodils planted in New York City last fall as a tribute to the victims of Sept. 11.

"I was blessed to receive these, and thought that right around the six-month anniversary of the tragedy, it gives people who aren't able to get down to New York City a moment to reflect," said Delmar resident Janet Griffin, who, donated the bulbs to the town and Hamagrael Elementary School. Griffin also donated six bulbs to Gov. George Pataki's office.

Griffin, who now works for New York State Higher Education, is the former director of planning for the New York City Department of Parks and Recreation in the Bronx.

"I was so honored to receive the bulbs, and I wanted to spread the wealth," Griffin said.

For Fuller, the honor is hers.

"I was surprised to get them," Fuller said. "They're still in my office, with their tall green leaves. After they bloom, we can put the flowers in the senior citizens office, and the bulbs can go into the ground out front. It's an honor to have a little bit of ground zerd right here." Hamagrael Principal Cynthia D'Angelo is also pleased to have the bulbs.

"We're waiting for the ground to warm to present them to the kids," D'Angelo said. "We'l probably raise them in school then plant them in our peace garden.'

"I think the peace garden, and these bulbs, are a hopeful thing, D'Angelo said. "I'm sure ou: student council will plant then and take care of them. They'l probably come up with a grea idea to make them stand apart."

hile the upcoming school vacation break would be an ideal time to get outside with the kids after a not-as-snowyas-usual-but-still-bleak winter, the odds are that April showers will interfere with outdoor plans on several days next week.

But, whether it rains or not, Steamer No. 10 Theatre in Albany is an ideal place to spend part of spring break, without breaking the family budget.

Based in a former firehouse at 500 Western Ave. that has been turned into a performing arts space, the nonprofit company has been presenting a wide variety of quality children's entertainment, with an emphasis on classic literature and local history, for 11 years. Next week's programming is no exception.

This weekend (Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m., Sunday at 3), Steamer No. 10 kicks off its holiday schedule with "Clinton's Ditch — The Saga of the Erie Canal.'

This original production takes a present-day student who falls asleep in social studies class through the whole story of the Erie Canal, the most impressive American civil engineering accomplishment of the early 19thcentury and the key to New York becoming the Empire State.

For the five weekdays of the actual vacation, April 15 to 19, Steamer No. 10 offers a different show every day.

On Monday, the Little Theatre of the 'Rope Stories, Spinning Yarns with Rope" will be presented by the National Theatre of the Deaf at the Steamer 10 Theatre during the school break.

"It's a spectacular production," said Ric Chesser, Steamer No. 10 artistic director.

On Tuesday, Professor Putter will perform "Magical Machinations," his unique magic show based on imaginative inventions.

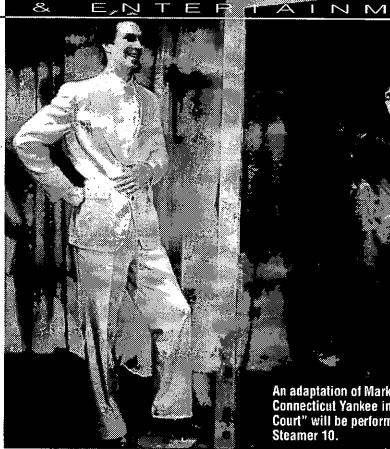

"He's a kind of mad scientist/ magician," Chesser said.

On Wednesday, Alice Eve Cohen presents her one-woman show "The Parrot." Using acting, puppetry and music, Cohen tells a fairy tale about a wily parrot who outsmarts a wicked king to help a peasant girl.

On Thursday, Steamer No. 10's own production of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" brings Mark Twain's popular fantasy to life on stage.

perform 24 repetitions of a skill for Hogan in order for the student to have their name inscribed on the card.

"Part of the beauty of the program is it is self rewarding. Students can explore an area of interest like unicycling and then start practicing on the skatebike. They can progress through competence levels to mastery on the skatebike at their own pace,' Hogan said. The student can then start exploring and practicing with the more difficult unicycle.

"Part of any public school physical education program includes balance training, usually on a balance beam" said Hogan. Beams are 8 to 13 feet long, four inches wide, and only eight inches off the floor for elementary level training and progresses to heights over four feet for older students. The circus program teaches students a variety of ways to balance, beyond what is possible with the beam, while the body is performing different motions.

"It has been a great experience," said Hogan. "They have taken it farther than I expected they could go,' speaking of the skills students developed in the program. "We just created the opportunity and they seized it. At the end of the first year of the program, the students unanimously voted to continue it for another year."

The performers provided halftime entertainment this year at two Bethlehem Central varsity basketball games and received rousing applause from an appreciative audience, according to Hogan. The community is in for a real treat at the big top performance Friday, he said.

"I couldn't ask for a better situation to retire on," said Hogan who will retire after 29 years service to the district, all at Elsmere Elementary School. "It is a crowning achievement for these students, and they will always benefit from the skills acquired in this program.'
