School receives budget windfall

Board will use some of the funds to offset tax increase

By JIM CUOZZO
cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

Bethlehem's newly adopted 2007-2008 school budget will now have a tax increase of just 3.96 percent instead of 4.61 percent, due to a $900,000 windfall of revenue from the state.

The new revenue, which is a result of the state budget adopted during the weekend of April 1, was revealed less than one week after the district had already approved a school budget.

How to best use the new found funds was the one and only topic of discussion at a special meeting of the school board Tuesday, April 3.

"We have the special problem this evening of more state aid than expected," announced Superintendent Les Loomis. "This is a wonderful experience."

The "wonderful experience" quickly turned into a 90-minute discussion highlighting a series of scenarios ranging from using all of the money to lower taxes this year or setting some of the money aside for next year's budget.

One frequently asked question from many school board members was whether the current school fund balance is adequate. Steve O'Shea, assistant superintendent of business, said the district currently has a $1.5 million fund balance without the extra money, representing 2 percent of the district's overall budget.

Board member Warren Stoker asked if the extra state aid will appear again next year.

Debate continues over using county versus private water supply

By WILLIAM R. DEVOE

As municipalities address water issues — either as a means to provide better utilities, curtail price or control growth — they are faced with one important decision: Hire a private water company or do it themselves.

Recently, the debate has centered in Saratoga County.

The county water plan calls for tapping the Hudson in Moreau Lake State Park and piping water along a 28-mile route through the Northway corridor that will in part follow the Zim Smith trail right-of-way. Towns and private buyers along the route will be able to purchase water.

In February, the county approved a business plan calling for the Saratoga County Water Authority to have contracts to sell 3 million gallons per day before construction starts. Since then, the towns of Wilton and Ballston have signed contracts, with the Saratoga Economic Development Corporation (SEDC) expected to sign one by month's end on behalf of Luther Forest Technology Campus tenants. Together, those contracts will total 3.2 million gallons a day.

Initially, the $67 million county project's primary customer is expected to be Advanced Micro Devices at the Luther

Republicans see opportunity in Egan's resignation

By JIM CUOZZO
cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

It's been a blue year or two for the Bethlehem Republican Party, with Democrats sweeping into office on both a statewide and local level. However, with the recent departure of Theresa Egan, Democratic town supervisor, and the possible appointment of Albany County Legislator Jack Cunningham, D-Delmar, as interim supervisor, Bethlehem Republican Party chairman Art Scheuermann said he believes the full slate of candidates will be on the ballot this November.

"There has been more interest in members of the party to run since Terri resigned," said Scheuermann, who has been chairman since 2005. "More people are becoming involved and interested because they don't like things the way they are going."

The Bethlehem Town Board currently has two Democrats, Kyle Kotary and Daniel Plummer, and two Independents, JoAnn Dawson and Sam Messina. Cunningham, who is expected to replace Egan, is also a Democrat, and would serve through the end of the supervisor's term, which is up for election in November.

A special town board meeting is scheduled for Thursday, April 12, where the board is expected

CSX worker charged with starting fire

A CSX employee is being charged with arson by the Bethlehem police department for starting a fire in February that damaged the roof of a Selkirk CSX building.

Anthony Nataro, 32, of 33 Raymo St., Albany, was charged with second degree arson and criminal mischief, both felonies.

Nataro turned himself in to police on March 30 after a one-month investigation and an arrest warrant was issued.

According to police, Nataro allegedly threw two flares that landed on the roof of the CSX diesel repair shop on Bell Crossing Road. The flares then triggered two separate fires to the building's roof on Feb. 22.

Both Selkirk and Delmar

fire departments responded to the fire. The fire was extinguished and there were no injuries. The estimated cost of damage to the roof was $2,700. Fire officials said they believe the fire started in the chimney after the flares were thrown.

Navarro was processed and arraigned in Bethlehem Town Court. Bail was set at $1,000, and he is scheduled to reappear in court on April 17.

Albany man no-show in court

A 24-year-old Albany man is in Albany County Jail after failing to make his court appearance.

Eric Henn, of 14 Barclay St., was arrested on a bench warrant by Bethlehem police at his residence. He was charged with failing to show up for court for a prior DWI arrest.

Henn's bail has been set at $20,000. He has a new court date in Bethlehem Town Court on April 17.

Twisted wreckage remains, above, of a big box truck lay under the Delaware and Hudson overpass on New Scotland Road after the top of a truck driven by Jeffrey Bulich of Catskill was sheared off, below, because the truck was higher than the 11-foot-2-inch overpass. There were no injuries in the accident.

bridge clearance,

By JIM CUOZZO

A man driving a big box truck with the name Big Top Rentals found out how big his box top really was Tuesday, April 3, when he sheared off the entire roof after trying to drive under the low-hanging Delaware and Hudson rail bridge off New Scotland Road on Route 85.

"This happens all the time," said nearby Mullens Road resident Bill Bray. "I usually hear it first."

This time, Bray heard a loud screeching noise he said sounded like nails on a chalkboard but much louder. Then from his vantage point he spotted the driver, 38-year-old Jeffrey Bulich of Catskill, trying to make it under the old bridge with the remainder of his vehicle hitting a few rails along the side.

"He made it all the way through," said Joseph Tanner, state Department of Transportation Engineer from Region One in Albany County called to the scene with a co-worker to shore up the side fence and guard rails left damaged from the accident.

Tanner recalled the time in 2006 when a driver knocked a bulldozer off the trailer bed because the vehicle was too high for the 11-foot-2-inch overpass.

"The driver came down with a bulldozer and knocked the bulldozer right off back of the trailer," Tanner said.

Bethlehem police were called to the scene to close off the road about a quarter mile north and south of the accident near the traffic light by Tollgate Plaza.

Bulich was ticketed for speeding and disobeying the height restrictions by exceeding the posted clearance, according to Bethlehem Police Lt. Thomas Heffernan.

Tanner said there are several low overpasses in Albany County including another in Voorheesville on Route 85A and one in Delmar next to the CVS building on Elsmere Avenue. The height of the bridge is marked at the top of the overpass as you drive by.

"There's also a sign up the road that tells the bridge height," said Tanner.

Bulich, who drives for West Tents out of Cairo, left the scene shortly after the accident and was uninjured. Gary's Towing and Recovery out of Albany arrived to collect the debris left behind from the twisted wreckage of the box top.

Eagle swoops in under bid

Estimated costs for new school are $330,000 below expected

By JIM CUOZZO
cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

The eagle may fly high, but contract bids for the newly named Eagle Elementary School in Bethlehem came in well below the anticipated price tag.

Of the nine bids received for site work, general construction, and other interior work, the total cost came to about $7.5 million. That figure is well below the anticipated $7.8 million original price tag.

"The overall project came in $330,000 under budget," said Rudley Lewis, Sano Rubin construction manager overseeing the entire $90 million dollar Bethlehem Central School District construction. "We're quite pleased."

The new school includes a two-story building with a two-station gym, full-size cafeteria and kitchen to accommodate future expansion, and a library and media center. The front of the new elementary school that will consist of brick masonry will face the entrance of Van Dyke Avenue across the street from the Bethlehem High School football field.

Superintendent Les Loomis said both Collins/Scoville architects and the Sano Rubin construction team has been an excellent fit for the overall districtwide project.

"We have had exceptional performance from contractors and construction managers from start to finish," said Loomis. "We have been able to deliver projects ahead of schedule."

The new school is being built to accommodate the growing district, which has seen steady enrollment increases the past two decades. A contest to name the new school was held last fall with students across the district settling for the name Eagle Elementary, based on the eagle school mascot.

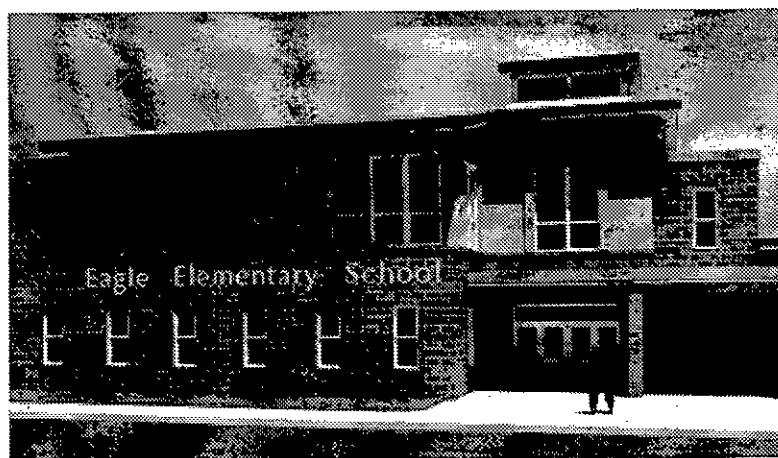

Sixty-one total bids were reviewed for the school with nine contracts awarded. LeChase Construction was awarded the general construction contract with a $3.27 million bid. M. Sullivan construction will handle the site work for $969,000. The building will also be environmentally friendly with some of the materials recyclable.

"Windows will face due north and south instead of east-west to control light, glare and heat buildup," said Richard Peckham of Collins/Scoville.

Skylights will be placed in the lobby to bring in natural light and a "daylight harvesting" project may also be included in one of the bid packages.

"Daylight harvesting includes a photo sensor in each classroom, and when more sun comes in during the day the sensor will automatically turn off the indoor lighting," Peckham said.

Work on Eagle Elementary will begin as soon as the weather permits. The new school is expected to be ready to be occupied by the beginning of September 2008.

A rendering reveals what the design of Bethlehem's newest school, Eagle Elementary, will look like when complete in the fall of 2008.

Make your mark at the new St. Thomas playground with a personalized paver

Two upcoming fundraisers are now in the works to secure funding for a state-of-the-art playground at St. Thomas the Apostle School in Delmar.

The school has raised about $24,000 to date for the project, which will include a traditional playground, a basketball court, kickball diamond, four-square and tetherball areas and a complete repaving of the school parking lot. Currently, at recess, students play on the blacktop of the parking lot.

Next up are the sale of personalized pavers, which will form the playground walkway, and a "Race for Education" by St. Thomas students to raise the bulk of additional funds. In addition, larger naming opportunities for corporations or individuals are available.

A car raffle drawing held earlier this year netted $14,000, and a portion of the annual Winter Wonderland Auction also has been designated for the playground. Additional gifts have brought the total to about $24,000. However, another $50,000 is needed to complete the drive.

"Buying a paver is a great way to help the kids, and at the same time to have a permanent, public acknowledgement of your generosity," said Denise Grant, campaign chair and mother of three St. Thomas students. "Pavers can be engraved with an individual or corporate name, or commemorate a special event, such as a graduation or First Communion."

For $100, a donor will get a 4x8 inch paver. A $500 donation gets an 8x8 inch paver, and gifts larger than $500 get a 4x8 inch paver, as well as your name on a permanent plaque. The Race for Education will be held on May 25. Every student is expected to get sponsors for their participation.

"The race is a fun way to get our current students involved, and we think it will be very successful," Grant explained.

For information or to make a donation, call 478-0148.

When you gotta go, go in style

Editor's Note: "From Robin's Nest" by Robin Shrager Suitor will return next week.

By BILL GIERING
askthetravelguy
@spotlightnews.com

You may choose golfing destinations by your favorite course designer or architects.

Maybe you love target courses, desert courses like those in Scottsdale, or the romantic views of Hawaii.

Perhaps you go for the wonderful warm personalities that glow from the faces in Ireland or Scotland.

Maybe you dig ocean courses or tracks that wind through vineyards like those in California.

That's not how my family did it.

My dad was a worldly guy, bright, kind, respected in his field and a pretty good golfer so, as kids, we were lucky.

His big hang-up, hidden deep in our family closet, was that he simplified the world into two categories: places with clean bathrooms and all others.

Our family lived, grew, golfed and traveled exclusively in the world of immaculate bathrooms.

Many weekends in the '60s and '70s, we would pile into our station wagon and off we would go to discover the vivid new colors and wrinkly old faces of New England. The roads and choices were different then, and with a growing, impatient family, we had to make a lot of pit stops.

The four of us would enter roadside restaurants together, and then stand near the entrance door as Dad walked straight to the men's room.

After his inspection, we would anxiously watch his facial expression when he exited.

A slight stern nod meant all was well with the world and we could dine there. Oh, but the dreaded look of partially closed eyes staring at the floor and the slightest movement of his head from side to side meant: back to the car, this spot doesn't meet our standards. That's just the way it was.

As a kid, I assumed this was the way the whole world operated. No matter how urgent our bathroom emergency, if the washroom didn't get my father's approval, well, we just had to hold it until the next one was hopefully declared acceptable by my father.

Didn't all families who cared, do this?

And what about those brightly colored roadside motels with wonderful "free in-ground" pools? You know, the kind with diving boards and water slides.

Nope.

There was no checking in for our family, at least not until my dad checked out the motel office and the office bathroom.

Our noses would be smushed against the car window, eyes locked and loaded, pulling on our bathing suits waiting and praying for his positive exit nod. YES, we can stay here: These people have clean bathrooms, they are our kind of people, life is good.

Before I understood Republicans and Democrats, indeed way before the Yankees and Red Sox were on my radar, I thought the universe was divided (like Gaul) into two parts: those with clean bathrooms and the dreaded others.

Aunts, uncles and family friends were all classified in one group or the other.

My Aunt Helen had a great oceanfront bed and breakfast inn on the Cape, but when we visited, we stayed at a lesser motel just down the road because ... well, you understand.

We were trapped by "THE CLEAN GENE."

I never really understood Dad's criteria for "clean." Our family didn't discuss these things. We just quietly continued to enable Dad to continue his odd behavior. This was long before the days when families held interventions. But I'm proud to say that the obsession with bathrooms was not passed along. That clean gene passed away with my dad a few years ago. Thankfully, I can travel, dine and golf wherever I want.

My dad would have loved to wash up in the 24-karat gold washbasins "The Donald" has installed at Trump National Golf Club in his Bedminster, N.J.

I think it's cool, but I only go there because of the restaurant and the course. Really.

In August, during horse-racing season, I love Saratoga Springs. Next to Pinehurst I think it's the best golf community in the Northeast.

Restaurants, entertainment, wonderful hotels and B&B's and, of course, Saratoga National, a world-class golf course with a sprawling luxurious club house.

How luxurious? So luxurious they have flat-screen televisions over every urinal in the men's room.

That's class. In the fall, I love the changing seasons and colors of Wisconsin.

The views from Kolher Resort's Whistling Straits Golf

Course is an annual ritual for golf photographers. I am partial to the scene of the raised washbasins in the washrooms, with pictures of Whistling Straight baked in the porcelain. And the shower towers in the locker rooms. Ah, the pure clean water pouring from six shower heads that soothes and refreshes your body after a round. And, oh, yes, there is a fireplace in the locker room as well.

Don't get me wrong, the course is nice too.

It's not that I'm the Ebert & Roeper of bathrooms, and I don't insist that there is a right way and wrong way to put toilet paper on the roll, I just think it's better when it comes over the top, not underneath.

And occasionally I will fold the paper into an arrow shape for the next guy, but that's just me being friendly.

Did I tell you that at Duane Hagadone's golf course in northern Idaho, the Coeur d'Alene, in order not to spoil the views, all the on-course bathrooms are underground?

I love that. It's a great Scott Miller layout, but underground bathrooms make it definitely worth the trip.

Oh, never mind, you choose your golf destinations your way, and hang the toilet paper any way you like.

This is America, after all, home of the free, the brave and the two-ply Charmin extra absorbent, now available with soothing lotion for that extra-soft touch.

I'm sure if my dad could read this he would be so proud of me.

Voorheesville board discusses cost of Tech Valley High

52 percent of district's costs for a student will be reimbursed

By ROB IRWIN
irwinr@spotlightnews.com

At a meeting on Monday, March 26, the Voorheesville Board of Education heard a presentation from Dan Liebert, the principal of Tech Valley High School, which will open its doors to 40 ninth-grade students in the fall of 2007.

The board discussed the merits of approving $18,000 into the 2007-2008 budget to finance the attendance of student Mackenzie Campbell, one of 40 students selected from 38 different districts to go to the school. The board voted 4 to 1 to include the $18,000 in its 2007-2008 proposed budget. Approximately 52 percent of the upfront costs would be reimbursed the following year.

For its first year, Tech Valley High, a venture between Questar III and Capital Region BOCES, will host its 40 students in office space obtained from the MapInfo corporation.

According to Liebert, the school will focus on teaching students fundamental skill sets that are valued for employment in the field of technology. Those skill sets include group collaboration, presentation, defending work, thinking across varying disciplines and creativity. Liebert said the school would focus on "interdisciplinary thinking."

To start, the school will employ four teachers, all of whom carry credentials in multiple fields. Liebert referred to the staff as "very credentialed."

The school fielded 300 applications before narrowing chemical engineer, agreed.

"I think it's a great investment for the future," said Bates. "I know the skills he's talking about here, are exactly what we look for."

"I know the skills he's talking about here, are exactly what we look for."

Gary Bates

Liebert said the school will be founded around a community of respect, responsibility and trust and that students would benefit because the school would "teach them how to learn, teach them how to cooperate and teach them how to think."

According to Liebert, 97 percent of graduates from similar schools across the country have looked back favorably on these types of educations following graduation from college.

School board president David Gibson said he thought the school could provide a valuable experience, but said the school district should use the experience as an opportunity to expand its teaching methods.

"The key then, if we do it, is to learn as much as we can from it," said Gibson.

Board member C. James Coffin also voiced his opinion on the school.

"I support this," said Coffin. "I think a lot of work went into this."

Not all board members showed their support.

"I'm skeptical," said Kevin

Kroencke, who voted against the addition of the money into the budget. Kroencke didn't think Liebert adequately addressed his questions regarding the school, including its physical education program and space issues in the future. He expressed the desire to wait until the school had proven success rather than participate at its ground level.

Theresa Gallagher, who serves on the advisory board for BOCES criminal justice program, agreed.

"We know where every dime is going, what every student is learning," said Gallagher. "I just didn't get that from (Liebert)."

Mackenzie's father, Jim

Campbell, said that through the decision-making process, more information had been made available to him in regard to the schools plans for the future and the means in which Tech Valley High would attempt to fulfill his daughter's educational requirements. He said changing schools, and leaving friends and familiarity behind is not easy for someone his daughter's age, but thought it was a well-informed decision.

"She's willing to take that risk, as a parent, I was proud she was able to make that decision," said Campbell.

Information on Tech Valley High can be found its Web site at www.techvalleyhigh.org.

Matters of Opinion Spotlight

Let the leaders know where you want to go

Jews and Christians celebrated Passover and Easter last week. In many ways, the holidays are about leadership. Moses led the Jews to freedom; Jesus' rising from the dead leads Christians to eternal life.

Even in today's secular world, we seek leaders. In New York, we watched state government closely last week, wondering if Gov. Eliot Spitzer could lead people to an event so rare in the Capital District that it might be considered a miracle: an on-time budget.

Our elected leaders kind of hit the mark. But the budget that passed has a lot of kinks to be worked out, and came with a lot of "messages of necessity," features that let items get approved without spending the required time in legislators' hands.

The passing of this year's budget also makes us question some aspects of leadership style. Character education and anti-bullying programs are the order of the day in our schools, but our leaders sometimes behave in ways we instruct our children to avoid.

We've heard stories of verbal threats, screaming matches and, what's late winter in Albany without the usual round of backroom deals among the state's top leaders?

Do the ends justify the means? Does the good done with an on-time budget beat the ill will incurred in crafting the state's fiscal document for the coming year?

With a budget in place, roads can get built; school districts can properly plan their tax rates for the coming year; and the people's business can get done efficiently.

We in the Capital District — many of whom earn a living in state jobs — take Albany behavior for granted.

But don't forget that we the people choose our officeholders. While election season may seem a long way off, it's never too soon to know how our elected representatives are working for us.

In this online era, it's easy to keep track of our representatives and be in touch with them. Google your town to find out who your town board members are, and how to reach them. The state Assembly is online at www.assembly.state.ny.us. So is the state Senate, at www.senate.state.ny.us. If you don't know who your representatives are, both Web sites let you find them by entering your ZIP code. You can also look up legislation on the Web sites.

There's no need to feel resigned to matters. Pick up the phone, or hit the keyboard. Let our leaders know what you think, whether it's good or bad.

Teach your baby the sign of the times

By KIM TAYLOR-DILEVA

The writer is a resident of Latham and a certified presenter with Sign2Me, a company that teaches babies to use American Sign Language.

Have you been in a public place and heard a parent say to an adorable infant who has become a screaming, crying baby, "I just don't know what you want?" Maybe you have even been that frustrated and embarrassed parent. Does the baby need a diaper change, to eat or are they hurt? Wouldn't it be great if the baby could just tell his or her parents what's wrong rather than cry out in frustration? Well, they can! Using American Sign Language to communicate with pre-verbal hearing babies has become one of the fastest-growing parenting trends in North America.

Research has shown that long before infants can talk, they can use sign language to express their needs and wants. Research from Dr. Joseph Garcia in 1986 demonstrated that infants who were shown signs as a part of their daily routine could then use these signs as a way of expressing themselves as early as 6 to 12 months of age.

I wish someone had told me about this research four years ago. My son had a speech delay and at age 2, he could only say two words. Because of the frustration he felt from his inability to tell me what he wanted or needed, he had severe temper tantrums. They would last so long that we would both sit on the floor and cry. We had no way of communicating with each other. Had I known about Dr. Garcia's research and book "Sign With Your Baby," I would have had a tool to help us both. Since then, he has started a national company called Sign2Me, which works to spread the word about using American Sign Language as a tool to communicate with babies.

Think of the possibilities of having more people knowing how to communicate through American Sign Language. Children, adults and the elderly could communicate with their doctors, nurses and family after having a procedure that has eliminated their speech while in recovery. The elderly would have a way to communicate with family and friends even though they are losing or have lost their hearing due to age. School-age children who are having trouble learning can learn much easier with the visual and kinesthetic emphasis incorporated by using sign language, which helps to increase their interest in learning as well as their self-confidence. Children with Down's syndrome, speech delays, apraxia of speech, and other learning or developmental delays, can have another tool to communicate. Adopted children from other countries or children who speak another language can also communicate much easier this way.

Laura Biggs from Austin, Texas, used American Sign Language with their adopted daughter and found success.

"We just brought home a beautiful 2-year-old girl from China. We began using a few signs one day after we had adopted her (while in China), and we have had a blast communicating in this way. She picked the signs up very quickly, and we believe we have avoided a lot of frustration using them," said Biggs.

Garcia and other researchers have shown that communicating with babies and toddlers through the use of American Sign Language has significant benefits. They can communicate before they can speak, experience less frustration, and have accelerated verbal language development (which means that using signs does NOT delay a child's speech development).

Toddlers who can sign actually have larger vocabularies (50 more spoken words than non-signers at the age of 2), they have temper tantrums less often, and can be understood by their parent even if their speech can't be deciphered.

Kelli Goble, from Tracy, Calif., said she was grateful that signing helped her know that her daughter was in pain.

"My daughter had severe earaches, but the doctor said her ears were fine. I insisted that she was signing P-A-I-N by her right ear. He thought I was nuts, but ran some further tests ... and found that 90 percent of her inner ear was full of fluid, causing a 35 percent hearing loss. Without her ability to sign to us, the specialist said we would not have known about the fluid in her ears," said Goble.

Childcare centers benefit from using American Sign Language as well. Signing helps to lower noise levels, it minimizes stress and frustration for caregivers, it significantly reduces problems with biting (as children use signs to solve their problems), and signing adds fun to daily routine, circle time, and music activities.

With all of these benefits, especially for children, why doesn't everyone use the third most used language in the United States? Although signing with hearing children has been gaining in popularity, a large part of the parenting population still hasn't heard of it.

I only learned about it six months ago while looking through books about infants at the library. Another hesitation is that some people think that they will have to learn an entire new language to be able to sign with their child. But Garcia encourages parents to use single signs to reinforce single words as they are spoken. For example, if you say to your baby "Would you like more?" all you have to do is sign "more" as you say the word. Even if you've had no prior experience with ASL, it only takes a minute or two to learn a few signs. Once you get comfortable using those signs, you can learn additional signs at a pace that works for you.

If you're interested in signing with your baby, toddler or child, check out "Sign With Your Child" playgroups, workshops and presentations in the Capital District. Attendees are taught the benefits of signing, how to begin and continue with signing, as well as some basic signs. At 2, my son could only say two words to me (one of which was "mama"). At 10 months of age, my daughter is now signing two words to me ("all done" and "more") and is saying mama. I have better communication with her already. In my opinion, if I can give my child the gift of any of the above mentioned benefits, then it's worth the minimal effort it takes on my part to try.

If you'd like to know more about attending a playgroup with your child, or hosting/attending a parent or teacher workshop, please call 438-8036 or visit this Web site www.kimssigningsolutions.com.

Bethlehem needed 'makeover' spirit

Editor, The Spotlight:

Your editorial, "Good Job, Capital District" made me think of what was happening in our town of Bethlehem during the same time period as "Extreme Makeover: Home Edition" was in the town of Colonie.

Four young Bethlehem women, who have graduated from special education programs and accomplished so much in their short lives; one remarkable organization, Living Resources; and the law were all tabled with a motion by town board member Dan Plummer, and an affirmative vote by fellow board members Kyle Kotary, JoAnn Dawson and Sam Messina. The dreams, hopes and most importantly, the law: tabled.

Notification and information had been sent to the neighbors of the house under contract. Some took the time to become informed, two did not, but brought it to the town board meeting. Listening to Mr. Plummer, Mr. Kotary and Ms. Dawson say they wanted more information themselves before they voted approval, which was automatic under the law, leads me to believe they too did not "do their homework" before the meeting to answer any questions or concerns the public might have had. These board members preferred to be very public without concern for the four young women. They showed no understanding, concern for the people involved or knowledge of the law.

Bethlehem school district has long been a pioneer in special education in the Capital District. We have more than 11 percent of the students identified as needing some type of special education. Never are names given at public meetings. The school district has done its homework, but we can assume that the town board has not.

"Extreme Makeover" went to the town of Colonie to "make over" a house while the town of Bethlehem put a scarlet letter on a house in Bethlehem.

We were once the leaders of inclusion and I firmly believe that the town of Bethlehem is still a town of inclusion, not exclusion, as our town board portrayed.

Do you want hunting at Five Rivers?

Editor, The Spotlight:

After many years of careful planning, the state Department of Environmental Conservation is about to launch a comprehensive management plan for the Five Rivers Center. That plan includes an expanded center for environmental education for students and better trail markers and viewing areas, in addition to other facility changes. The center will certainly become more user-friendly.

Parents may be interested to learn, however that the unit management plan submitted for discussion includes a provision that would allow hunting and trapping, but not fishing, on a portion of the land owned by Five Rivers.

If you believe that this use is not compatible with an environmental education facility that is used by large numbers of children and unarmed adults, you should write to Craig Thompson, director, Five Rivers, Game Farm Road, Delmar 12054 and express your opinion. A copy of that letter should go to Laurel Remus, DEC, 625 Broadway, Albany 12233 no later than May 10.

Make groups easy for everyone to join

Editor, The Spotlight:

The Spotlight's March 7 article, "Girl's Guide To The Future: Groups Aim To Send Young Women Off In the Right Direction" offers a positive enthusiasm and promise to the future of young women in the Capital District to get involved in fields that women from years past never would have dreamed of.

Although it is encouraging to see that organizations like Girls Incorporated and Girl Scouts of America are so actively and positively involved in the life of many girls locally, we must make sure all girls are involved.

Years ago, a young girl dreamed of being in Brownies. Her cousin gave this girl her old Brownies uniform, which the girl tried on every day in anticipation of going to a local meeting and signing up with her mother. But when that day came, all dreams were taken away, since there was no room in Brownies for her; she lived "too far away."

I wonder now, if this is still an issue today; can you live too far away? Can you be turned away because you have a disability? Can you be turned away because there are too many girls signing up? Can you be turned away because you cannot afford any part of being a Brownie or Girl Scout?

According to the article, "Girl Scouts of America provides a sense of community," it is in high hopes that this is an accurate statement and no girl will ever feel ostracized for any reason.

It is only when all girls are included, despite different abilities, income and other life features that Girls Incorporated and Girl Scouts of America can achieve their goal of helping girls become more involved in their community and work in fields such as science and technology. The article says for itself that girls "feel empowered."

As for that one young girl, it has been almost 20 years, and that Brownies uniform still hangs in the back of her closet, unused.

Flag bearer explains meaning of Monday night vigils

Editor, The Spotlight:

A recent letter writer took issue with the weekly peace vigils sponsored by the Bethlehem Neighbors for Peace at Delmar's Four Corners. The writer specifically referred to an American flag sometimes displayed at the vigils, as a "desecration." That flag substitutes a peace symbol (which is a real, not a "so-called" symbol) for the 50 stars. I purposely chose this flag as one way to express my opposition to the illegal and devastating invasion of Iraq initiated and perpetuated by the Bush-Cheney administration.

I also chose a flag because of the pervasive use of the American flag as a political prop by too many politicians and right-wing types who have little or no interest in the freedoms and justice the flag symbolizes. These self-proclaimed "patriots" typically manage to stay far away from the battlefields of their wars and military fiascos. Like many Americans, I want to reclaim the flag from those who act as if they have a monopoly on patriotism merely by displaying a flag on their lapels. George Bush, his cronies, cynical politicians and the war profiteers are the ones who are desecrating the flag, not citizens peacefully assembling to express their views. All too often, scoundrels wrap themselves in the flag as they raid our treasury and eliminate our freedoms.

One purpose of the vigils is making sure that, for at least a brief period, those who pass through the Four Corners are reminded that Americans and Iraqis are dying and being mutilated every day. Only our soldiers and their families are making sacrifices for this invasion and occupation of a country that did no harm to us. I hope the letter writer who faults our vigils has also demanded that taxes be raised to pay for the war and for the lifetime of medical care that will be required by its thousands of casualties. I hope the writer has been angered by the fact that our soldiers were sent to Iraq on the basis of false information, without competent planning, without proper equipment and without knowledge of the country they were invading and occupying, that so many of the injured have been denied adequate health care and that secret prisons and torture are official American policy.

And, it is not war protesters who have harmed this country abroad or lessened the chances for peace. George Bush has managed to do that — without any assistance from peace advocates.

The American government's deceptions and failures in Iraq have been public knowledge around the world since the onset. As for the writer's reference to an "ultimate victory" — I can only wonder exactly what would that be in light of what has transpired thus far.

Are we "anti-U.S."? Ronald Reagan once told the 1980 Republican National Convention that, "I will not stand by and watch this great country destroy itself." Well, neither will I and thousands of other Americans who continue to speak out for peace, justice and accountability of our government.

Y needs more sidewalks

Editor, The Spotlight:

The new YMCA in Bethlehem is a great facility and a wonderful asset for the community. My family and I have become frequent and happy users of all it has to offer. As the weather has started to slowly improve I have noticed an increasing number of residents walking to and from the facility. I am particularly aware of more teens walking to and from the Y. A lot of kids go after school and it is a perfect place for them. My concern, particularly around dusk, is it is difficult to see them and the driving speeds of residents once they pass the high school increases and that is unlikely to stop. Add to all this the difficult terrain and blind hills of Delaware Avenue and I fear a terrible accident is almost unavoidable.

I know there is little room on the sides of Delaware Avenue in this area and that there are many steep drop-offs on that stretch of road. I am not an engineer, but we must at least look at the feasibility of a sidewalk on at least one side of Delaware Avenue and any crosswalks needed to insure the safety of our children and to allow community members to walk to the Y if they would like.

Small businesses were also extreme

Editor, Spotlight:

I am a proud resident of the town of Rotterdam. Hats off to the many volunteers and business people of my community, such as DelGallo Country Pools, White Birch Nursery, Mariaville Fence, Mike's Painting and Home Repair and Amedore Homes. There's also Roman Villa, which provided food to all the volunteers. They have all donated material, time and talent for a wonderful cause for the "Extreme Makeover: Home Edition."

This is not something that happens in your community a lot. This is extremely exciting.

Town encourages use of special needs registry program

The Albany County Sheriff's Department has a program designed to assist the special needs community during an emergency, manmade or natural, within Albany County.

Registrants should be physically or mentally unable to evacuate themselves from their residence without assistance.

Applicant information is entered into the County's E-911 system for retrieval during an emergency. Local police departments will have the information, as well, and this information allows emergency responders to instantly identify the special needs of callers from their residences. Prior medical knowledge of the needs of the caller enhances the response time and efficiency of medical care.

"Currently, we have about 1,000 people registered in the program," said Garry G. Horne, director of community and emergency services with the Albany County Sheriff's Department.

"The unique thing about our registry is that it is the first in the state that incorporates information about people with disabilities into the E-911 system. Emergency workers will have valuable knowledge about the person before they arrive, which could be life-saving."

Applications are available online at www.albanycountysheriff.com, www.townofbethlehem.org, by calling 720-8030 or 439-4955, or at the Bethlehem Senior Services Office, 445 Delaware Ave., Delmar.

Capital Rep calls Bethlehem senior to its stage

From Viola in Shakespeare's 'Twelfth Night' to Mary Warren in Arthur Miller's 'The Crucible'

By JILL U. ADAMS
news@spotlightnews.com

Welcome to Tess Avitabile's senior year.

After performing in Bethlehem Central High School's Shakespeare production for the third straight year, the 17-year-old Avitabile landed a major role in Capital Repertory Theatre's upcoming production of "The Crucible."

"I've had other students perform professionally, even on Broadway, but never in as important a role before" said James Yeara, English and drama teacher at the high school.

Avitabile

Equity actor," said Yeara. "It's a coup for Tess. And a testament to how good she is."

"The Crucible" is about the Salem witch trials. The story focuses on five girls who were caught practicing magic in the woods, then accused others of witchcraft to cover their own misdeeds.

"The five girls operate with a gang mentality," said Maggie Mancinelli-Cahill, the artistic director at Cap Rep. "Mary Warren is an essential character because she walks the line between being an accuser and being a victim. She's the one who has the conscience."

What this means to Avitabile is that she has to perform emotional breakdowns on stage, multiple times per show. Unlike the high school productions she's been in, in which students perform over a weekend or two, Cap Rep will present 31 performances over five weeks.

"Enthusiasm can get you through a weekend or two," said Yeara. Five weeks? "That's tough. That's where the training comes in, the resolve."

Avitabile said she is excited but nervous.

"I'm pretty terrified," she said with a laugh. "This is my first professional production. I hope I can live up to what they saw of me in the audition."

Avitabile's acting journey began with children's acting camps and proceeded to high school Shakespeare productions. Last summer she attended a summer conservatory for actors at Yale University.

Then, serendipity, when Avitabile's father saw the audition call in the paper. Avitabile missed the first round, so began with a monologue while other actors were moving on to the callback phase.

"After that (the monologue), we did some group improvisational exercises," she said. "All the girls auditioning for the crying out — we basically had to do a group hallucination. It was really stressful."

Since learning that she got the part of Mary Warren, Avitabile has been memorizing her lines in preparation for the first rehearsal, practicing them as she walks to school.

Additional work on her character is guided by techniques she learned at Yale.

"My acting teacher taught us to break down scenes [into parts]: the historical background, the immediate past, and the present stimuli," she said. "Also, the perceived weaknesses and strengths of my character and my relationship with the other characters."

Yeara, who had a role in Cap Rep's recent production of "Metamorphoses," said it's an eye-opener for a high school actor used to standing out to get professional theater experience.

Of Avitabile, he said, "Tess is a tough professional. It'll be fun for her."

The director is likewise confident of Avitabile's ability.

"I know that I can push her in terms of acting," said Mancinelli-Cahill. "She has great maturity, which is an important aspect of working with young actors. They have to be mature enough to understand the play and to understand the incredible discipline of theater."

Capital Repertory's production of Arthur Miller's "The Crucible" opens Friday, April 27, and will run through Saturday, May 26. For tickets and performance times, call 445-7469 or visit www.capitalrep.org.

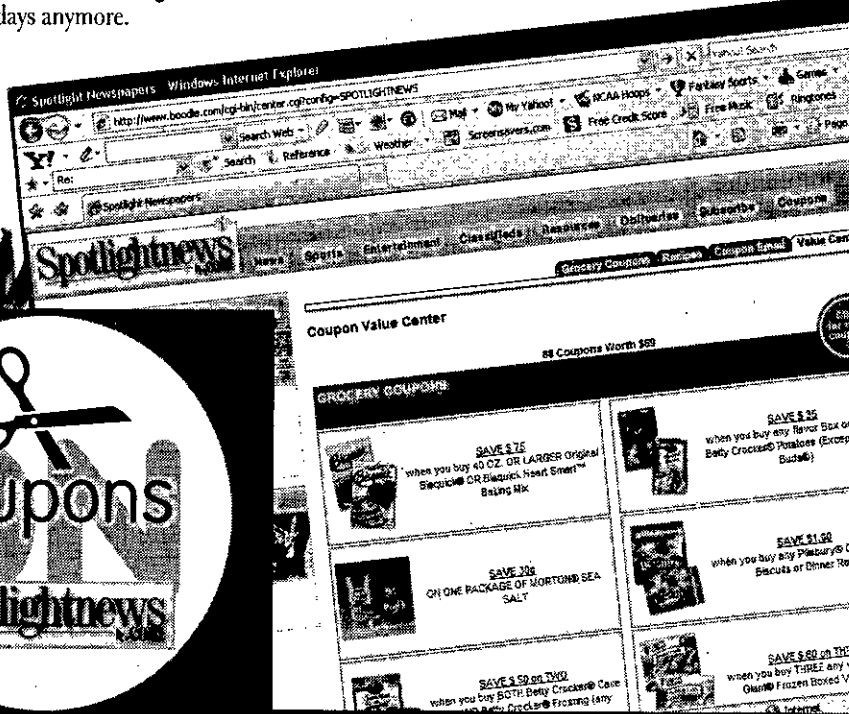

Editor's Note: Tess Avitabile is spotlightnews.com's newest blogger. Below is her description of "Enter Stage Left."

— "There's a mug in the green room with my name on it. I get my weekly paycheck from Capital Repertory Theatre. I'm also a senior at Bethlehem Central High School. I lead a double life, studying physics backstage and memorizing lines on the way to school. In my spotlightnews.com blog, "Enter Stage Left," I'll share my thoughts about my break into professional acting." —

Former BCHS student acts up

Member of renowned NYC theater troupe to perform in 'Jane Eyre'

By JIM CUOZZO
cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

Finding just the right role for a struggling actor or actress can sometimes be "Much Ado About Nothing." Kelly Curran, a 2002 Bethlehem Central High School graduate, is finding the opposite to be true. She is as a member of a prominent theater group of New York City, The Acting Company.

Curran, originally of Slingerlands, is a recent graduate of the Fordham University/Lincoln Center and a member of a company that counts Kevin Kline and David Ogden Stiers as alumni.

"We try to attract those we consider to be the very best young actors who go to the very best theaters in the country," said

Gerry Cornez, communications director for The Acting Company.

Curran and the current nine-member troupe will be performing Charlotte Bronte's "Jane Eyre" at Bard College's Sosnoff Theater at Annandale on the Hudson at 7 p.m. Wednesday, April 18.

"Kelly is in her first year with us, and the entire group is a wonderful company," Cornez said.

Curran plays four different roles in the story: Abigail; Helen Burns, Jane's close friend; Adele, Jane's pupil at Thornwood; and Mary Rivers, Jane's cousin.

"This is a wonderful adaptation," said Curran, who has already performed in a variety of places, including Burlington, Vt.; Durham; Ogdensburg; Detroit; Windsor, Ontario; and theaters in Louisiana, Georgia and Florida.

"It's so nice to be paid to do what you want to do," said Curran who is a full-fledged member of the actors union.

"It's great," said Curran. "You work consistently and you get health insurance and required breaks."

Curran was the youngest of 14 professionals who studied classical theater with the New York Public Theater's Shakespeare Lab in 2005. She has also worked in the Piper Theater production of "Much Ado About Nothing" and has performed in the Off-Broadway comedy "Girls: A Two-Act Play About Men."

Curran was most nervous when James Yeara, her former theater teacher at Bethlehem, came to see one of her performances last summer.

"He saw me in 'Much Ado About Nothing,' and I was so nervous," said Curran, who fondly recalls the time she spent performing Shakespeare at Bethlehem High.

"He was very inspiring," said Curran of Yeara. "He taught me so much."

The Acting Company was formed in 1972 by John Houseman and Margot Harley and has received a Tony Award; an Obie Award; Los Angeles Drama Critics Circle Award, and Citibank's Excellence in Education Award.

"Seventy to 80 percent of our actors continue to work in the theater, and that is a very high rate," Cornez said.

Tickets for "Jane Eyre" at the Bard Theater are $15 to $30 and can be purchased by calling (845) 758-7900.

IN BRIEF

Host families needed for exchange students

Host families are needed for 39 American Field Service (AFS) foreign exchange students who will be coming to the Capital District for the 2007-2008 school year. Students from countries all over the world will attend local high schools and participate in all aspects of family, school, and community life.

Interested families who apply early this spring will have the best opportunity to view applications from students with special interests that match theirs, such as athletics or music. Local AFS volunteers provide family orientation and student support, as well as social and educational events for students, host families and host siblings.

For information about hosting, or about intercultural opportunities for U.S. high school students to study abroad for a summer, semester or year, contact Happy Scherer at 439-0016 or happy12054@aol.com or call 1-800-AFS-INFO.

Hospice offers grief support for children of The Community Hospice of Albany County helps children "ride the waves of grief" in a caring environment. Tuesdays at 6 p.m. starting April 17 through May 22, the program of peer support groups, for children in grades K through 8th grade, will take place at the Hospice office at 445 New Karner Road in Albany. For information, please contact Sue Emanuele at 724-0200.

The Wave Riders program

In these group experiences, children develop skills to help them cope with the losses they may encounter throughout their lives and build self esteem.

According to Candice Van Roey, director of the program, "It is important that children be able to recognize their normal feelings of sadness and grief, and have the opportunity to express them in a safe and comfortable setting. When they share with other grieving children, they feel less isolated."

A program for pre-school children, ages 3 through 5, called "Big Hurts/Little Tears," will take place at the Community Hospice offices at 159 Wolf Road, Albany, on Saturdays at 10 a.m. through March 31. For information call Lauren Savage at 377-8846.

Group hosts concerts to benefit local charities

By JIM CUOZZO

cuozzoj@spotlightnews.com

The Sons of the American Legion in Delmar will be rockin' and rollin' with a series of benefit concerts to raise money for local charities throughout the spring and summer beginning at 7 p.m. on Friday, April 13.

Homegrown Delmar band the Del Martinis will be first up on the American Legion stage, performing music from the '50s through today to benefit the Bethlehem Festival Fund.

"We play everything from Elvis to Weezer, the Goo Goo Dolls and Jethro Tull," said Greg Jackson, leader of the band. "We're all between 40 and 50 years old, and the six members were either all in bands or wanted to be in bands."

Group members have day-time jobs but still take the time to practice every Friday night in the basement of drummer Brian Costigan's home.

"We play because we like it," said Jackson, who is also president of the Bethlehem Festival Fund. The fund began in 1948 from donations given at holiday performances in Delmar. Through the years the concerts stopped, but an organization that raises money for needy children

Steve Haggerty, the local activities commander for the Delmar Sons of the American Legion, said, "This is our second year of concerts, and most of the bands formed because the members all played together in high school or growing up and now they are reforming bands. Most older groups are excited about another venue to play and looking to have fun."

Other charities to benefit from the concert series include Habitat for Humanity, the National Bone Marrow Foundation, the Homeless and Traveler's Aid Society, and the Capital District Loan Fund.

Jazz and blues trio the Fraydys Kats will perform May 18. Playing with Fire appears on stage June 29. Other bands to perform in the summer and fall include Element V, and Band of Gold.

Cost of admission is $5 for each concert. The Nathaniel Adams Blanchard American Legion Post No. 1040 is located at 16 W. Poplar Drive in Delmar. For information, call 462-2993.

and their families who are enrolled in the local school system remains.

"We get many requests from school social workers and nurses," said Jackson. Four requests came this past week to fund field trips, for instance.

state?" asked Stoker.

Answers to that question were mixed, depending upon point of view. Board members Richard Svenson, James Dering and Stoker said they believe the new state aid windfall means next year's overall base state aid for the district will increase by that $900,000 figure, resulting in a lower projected tax increase for 2008-2009 than expected.

However, Loomis cautioned that the district should not be spending more money than it may receive.

"You never want to be expending more in the fund balance than you can replenish," said Loomis. "Poorly managed districts get tempted to do that to drive taxes down in one year."

The board ultimately decided to use $300,000 of the extra state aid to offset any tax increase in the 2007-2008 budget and set aside the remaining $600,000 for the 2008-2009 budget. The district is projecting the 2008-2009 budget will be harder to balance because of debt service and a new elementary school that needs to be staffed.

"The 2008-2009 year is the toughest hurdle to cross, and we are projecting a 7 to 8 percent increase," said Loomis.

Average tax rates in the Bethlehem school district over the past 10 years have been about 5.12 percent. Loomis said the overall financial picture is more stable for the district after 2008-2009.

"The future is bright, debt service goes down, staffing for the new school will be set and enrollment levels out," Loomis said.

Board member James Lytle said each year is a unique for state legislators when passing a budget, and expecting the unexpected is more probable.

"It's a year-by-year decision," Lytle said. "The Legislature is free to go in a completely different direction next year."

ed to officially name Cunningham to the position.

Three Republican candidates have expressed an interest in running against Cunningham in November. Scheuermann said an announcement regarding the party's candidates is expected by the end of the month.

"We are still interviewing people and have been since the last election," said Scheuermann, who would not reveal any names. "We are looking for somebody who has a strong sense of community involvement and somebody who knows the town and how it operates."

Meanwhile, Bethlehem Democratic chairman Matt Clyne said current town planning board member Thomas Cotrofeld is the choice of town Democrats to replace Cunningham as county legislator.

Cotrofeld's appointment is subject to the approval of the Albany County Legislature.

Local races up for election this year include supervisor, town clerk and highway superintendent, all two-year terms; along with the two seats on the town board held by Dawson and Plummer. Republican incumbent Nancy Mendez is expected to run for receiver of taxes again this year, and the town justice position currently held by Paul Dwyer will also be up for election.

Scheuermann said Republican fundraising has begun, and candidates will hit the streets early so people can find out what they stand for.

Scheuermann said the big-box development popping up on Route 9W and the ever-increasing tax burden are just a few issues Republicans will be able to sink their teeth into.

Scheuermann said he believes the opposition party will have problems when Egan is gone because of her strong leadership role in the town Democratic party the past three and a half years.

"Their most effective candidate is no longer there, and now the party apparatus will control town government," said Scheuermann.

He said he believes the Republican process at the town level is much more open.

"I believe there should be

"There has been more interest in members of the party to run since Terri resigned."

Art Scheuermann

a dialogue within the party," Scheuermann said. "Did they (Democrats) really have a fair process in their own party?"

Scheuermann also questioned the town board's appointment of JoAnn Dawson in January. He said not everyone was interviewed for the position, including some eligible town Republicans.

"When you have a transition in government at any level, the appointment goes to the party in power," said Clyne, referring to Dawson's appointment and Cunningham's expected naming as supervisor. He added that the Democratic party would be derelict in its duties if it did not quickly name a replacement for Egan.

"The reality is this is a full-time job, Bethlehem is a large town and duties have to be tended to now," Clyne said.

Gala to benefit Equinox

Nonprofit agency uses fundraiser to bridge
the gap in grant money

By JILL U. ADAMS
news@spotlightnews.com

Famous for its Thanksgiving Day Community Dinner, Equinox is not just about turkey. Throughout the year — day and night — its staff and volunteers help people in crises.

Equinox is a human services agency providing shelter, counseling, advocacy and prevention services. The nonprofit organization will hold its annual gala fundraiser, the Equinox Celestial Celebration, later this month. Called "All That Jazz," the event will take place from 7 to 11 p.m. at Franklin Plaza in Troy on Friday, April 20.

"It's the major fundraiser of the year," said Chari Leader, who is on the board of directors for the agency and co-chairs the event with past-president — and her husband — Larry Kelley. Because Equinox is "pretty much a grant-funded organization," unrestricted funds from the gala help sustain operations between grant cycles.

Leader said she expects about 300 people to attend, including volunteers, financial contributors, community leaders, college faculty and chamber of commerce members. "The community is very responsive. It's a very nice mix of people," she said.

Kelley agreed. "It's a way for people to help out, to give back, to support the mission of Equinox."

The co-chairs said they hope to surpass last year's event, which netted $70,000. The money comes from tickets, which range from $80 to $125, a silent auction, and corporate sponsors. Excelsior College is donating $10,000 and Media Logic and Hannay Reels, Inc., are each putting up $5,000.

Up for auction will be roundtrip airfare, a weekend at a country lake, time-share accommodations, and a trip to Ireland. Leader emphasizes that many of the items up for donation are from local businesses, especially restaurants.

"The organization reaches out to improve lives within the community," Leader said, and as a result, Equinox improves the community itself.

"We target domestic violence, we do youth outreach, and we have counseling programs that assist families and people struggling with alcohol and drug addiction," she said.

Kelley mentioned some statistics to illustrate Equinox's impact on the community. For problems with addiction, the organization held 720 group sessions and nearly 2,000 individual counseling sessions last year.

In addition, Equinox provided safe shelter to 223 women and children escaping domestic violence situations and "bed nights" to 167 teens, often adolescents who have been kicked out of their homes.

With Equinox's new 18-room shelter that opened last October, said Kelley, "We can provide safe haven for those living in fear day-to-day."

And still, the numbers on counseling sessions or shelter stays don't tell the whole story, said Kelley, because staff members are also fielding phone calls from women in crisis, as many as a dozen a day.

"It's not unusual for a 13-year-old girl to knock on the door in the middle of the night to escape a violent situation," said Leader. In such cases, Equinox provides shelter and helps clients gain access to help and resources from other agencies.

"The advocacy element can't be overstated," Leader said, stressing that Equinox has good working relationships with social service agencies. "It's an important resource."

The gala is geared toward fun with live music provided by the New York Players and a dance floor. The fundraiser is more about celebrating than networking.

People are very friendly at Equinox events, said Leader, whether it's the Thanksgiving Day dinner or the gala or the awards dinner.

"You can meet people and feel like you belong," she said.

Library offers piano recital

Pianist Morey Hall will play music of Chopin, Beethoven and Schubert at a recital this Sunday, April 15 at 2 p.m. Hall is a regular recitalist in several music series, including the Donnell Library Concert Series in New York, Feestelijk Bethlehem and Kinderhook's North Pointe. His 30-year career as a performer and teacher has been highlighted by recitals at Weill Recital Hall in New York, the Arts Center in Troy, and colleges and universities in the Capital District.

Hall pursued graduate music study at the New England Conservatory and Juilliard. He has recorded three CDs: the Weill performance, an all-Beethoven program, and Playing for Time. He maintains a private studio in the Albany area.

The concert is free and open to the public.

Business in the Spotlight

Education should be an ongoing life process

At the end of March, as I mentioned when last we chatted, Spotlight Newspapers' staff was off to the New York Press Association's annual conference in Saratoga Springs.

Over the course of the two-day event, we attended a number of seminars, tailored to our areas of expertise and interest, about the Internet, technical support, editorial content, writing, management and of course, sales techniques. It was a cornucopia of educational tools for all aspects of the newspaper world.

As a relative newcomer to the newspaper side of the business, over the past years, I have found many of the seminars to be enlightening and educational. Too, with any conference of this size (almost 600 participants)

Notes from the
Advertising Desk
Bill Kellert

and scope, many classes make one stop and give pause as to why they are being offered or, egocentrically, why wasn't I asked to give this particular session? On the whole, the experience is positive, giving one the opportunity to network with others in the same situation, learn some new tidbits to help improve one's game and importantly, realize that in many ways you are ahead of - or at least in - the game. The things you are doing are "spot on."

All of that leads me to question: What do businesses do for our staff on a regular basis in terms of educational advancement? What do we do for ourselves for self-advancement? Education is a lifelong event. It does not end when we receive our diploma. In today's fast paced world, it can't end there or we will be run over and lost forever. It is in the best interest of our businesses — I dare say the obligation in order to successfully grow our businesses — to see to it that our staff is regularly exposed and encouraged to learn and grow. More importantly, for self-preservation, continuing education is not only vital, it is imperative.

I question, in today's world, how many push to educate themselves on a regular basis and how many managers help in that process. Often, in our weekly sales meetings, I am accused by my sales staff of being a frustrated teacher having "reading times," passing on articles that I feel are of value, book excerpts, etc. ... I find that accusation to be remarkably satisfying.

Movement around the area begins to step up with the onset of spring (though the weather man seems to belie this notion). Capital Communications Federal Credit Union has announced several new hires and promotions; Richard Bazar is commercial relationship specialist, Diane Bennett a newly hired credit risk associate, Michele Chavers financial analyst, Mike Peteani human resources specialist; Barbara Rustin fills the training specialist slot; and Sarah Jones has received a promotion to loan officer ... congratulations to First New York Federal Credit Union on the successful completion of its MDA Shamrocks First campaign which raised over $600 for the Muscular Dystrophy Association ... Berkshire Bank opened its eighth location on March 30 with ribbon-cutting festivities at the Shaker Pine Plaza locale at 151 Vly Road in Colonie ... Kira Griffis comes on board Albany IVF as patient liaison ... Northeast Health has named Peter Gernet-Dott, Ph.D., as director of referral and admissions for the Eddy and Sunnyview Rehabilitation Hospital inpatient programs ... The Capital District Chapter of the Women's Council of Realtors recently honored the area's top realtors. Among those to receive kudos was Julie Bonacio of Roohan Realty as second highest sales in the region. Additionally, Janet Besheer of Roohan has been selected as the organization's president-elect ... Roohan continues its growth with the addition of sales associates Chris Benton, Ellen Ritchie and Maggie Snyder ... Brad Littlefield and Julie Littlefield have joined the staff of Weichert Realtors-Northeast Group's Guiderland office ... That about clears the clutter from my desk for a few weeks.

Remember, learning is a lifelong process. Whether you have to be proactive and teach yourself or are in the position to teach something to others, not only is learning imperative for growth, it can be a fun adventure as well.

Be sure to check out my online blog for updates or catch me right here. As always, if you have anything you'd like to see in the column, feel free to e-mail me at kellertw@spotlightnews.com. We can't guarantee it will all get in, but we'll give it our best shot.

Students to get ride of their lives

Safety Bug demonstrates the perils of impaired driving

Car crashes are the No. 1 killer of teens in the United States. At Bethlehem Central High School, the students of the Students Against Destructive Decisions club (SADD) are doing their part to increase teen awareness to the dangers of unsafe driving.

On Wednesday, April 18, students will take part in "Lookin' Out Day," during which they will have the opportunity to gain real-life exposure to the perils of impaired driving — without being put at risk themselves.

Throughout the day, nearly 300 students (100 licensed drivers and 200 passengers) will drive and ride in a custom engineered car called the "Lookin' Out" Safety Bug. A trained mentor in the front passenger seat controls settings, which causes the car's steering to lose its finesse and prompt braking mechanisms to become unpredictable. The result is an unsettling experience for the teens who gain a firsthand glimpse of what it feels like to drive under the influence and to be a passenger in a car with an impaired driver.

Initiated by Bruce Whiting of Whiting Insurance Agency in Glenmont, "Lookin' Out" is a national safe teen driving awareness program that is sponsored by Erie Insurance Group. Funded by a $2,000 grant from Erie Insurance, the "Lookin' Out" program is part of a yearlong effort by the students to continually remind their peers to drive responsibly.

"I really feel this makes a big difference," said Whiting. "If it affects one life,

"I really feel this makes a big difference. If it affects one life, it saves one heartbeat."

Bruce Whiting

it saves one heartbeat." Jarrett Bastow, co-president of Bethlehem SADD said, "We're all excited to have this opportunity for people to experience the realities of unsafe driving decisions without the real consequences for poor judgment or decision-making."

Bethlehem High joins Cossackie-Athens as the second area school with which Whiting Agency and Erie Insurance have partnered to promote safe teen driving.

For more information regarding Bethlehem's "Lookin' Out" program, visit www.WhitingInsurance.com or contact Bethlehem Central High School at 439-4921.

Strokes of healing

Volunteers from the GE Plastics plant in Selkirk spent March 22 painting colorful murals of toucans and tropical fish to be donated to Parson's Child and Family Center and St. Margaret's Center in Albany as part of GE's "Planet PaintFest" event. GE volunteers, together with the Foundation for Hospital Art, held the event at more than 100 GE locations around the world to help support FHA's goal of comforting patients by donating one mural to every hospital on earth.

ASO connects with Kennedy for prize-winning concert

By JAMIE D. GILKEY
news@spotlightnews.com

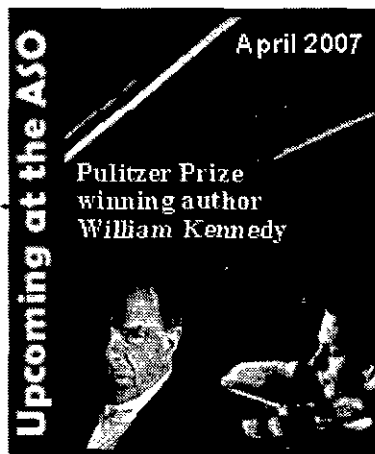

A couple of centuries ago, a European composer named Antonio Vivaldi took the music scene by storm when he unveiled the "Four Seasons," a lyrical tour de force praised to this day for its extraordinary use of stringed instruments to evoke images of nature in all its beauty.

Today's music aficionados still regard it as one of the finer symphonies of any era.

Symphonies don't always have to reach back through the centuries or elicit the soaring sounds of spring. Instead, the gritty hustle and bustle of the city have also drawn attention from well-regarded composers with pieces that speak to the cares of modern life.

While drawing the listener in, these pieces provide a commentary on society, helping us look at who we are and where we have been.

Combining the clarity of the well-written word with the touching sounds of an important musical work is one way to give an audience an extraordinary experience. On Friday, April 20, at 7:30 p.m., the Albany Symphony Orchestra will bring that unique experience to the Palace Theatre stage when they team the powerful spoken words of Pulitzer Prize-winning author William Kennedy with the powerful and touching composition of a violin concerto by Kevin Beavers.

"We are going to be playing a violin concerto written specifically for Bill Kennedy's book 'Roscoe,' and Bill will read portions of his book to underscore what is being played," explained David Alan Miller, the ASO's conductor. "This is a pretty unique idea, which will combine our most celebrated local literary talent with a symphony written specifically for him.

"To have Bill's work as the centerpiece of the evening, both in the form of his own writing and a concerto inspired by his literary work will give the audience a really special performance," Miller said. "I don't think something like this has ever been done before in our area before."

The Palace Theatre performance is just one in a series of events taking place throughout the Albany area as the region celebrates the latest novel produced by the Capital District's only Pulitzer Prize-winning author. As part of the activities, Kennedy will hold a reading of his award-winning novel "Legs" at the Albany Institute of History and Art on Sunday, April 15. He will also be available for a noon discussion with patrons at the main branch of the Albany Public Library on Washington Avenue on Thursday, April 19. The month-long celebration of Kennedy's work will be capped off with a staged reading of his work at Albany's Capital Repertory Theater on Monday, May 7 at 7 p.m.

Along with winning the world's most famed prize for literature, Kennedy, a former newspaper reporter and Albany native, has garnered widespread praise from critics during his three decade-long career as a novelist. Each of his gritty novels has been built around characters tied to aspects of Albany's legendary history; its powerful political machine, mobsters like Jack "Legs" Diamond, and the Catholic Church. In doing so, he has built stories based on his own North Albany boyhood with its strong Irish roots and helped revive contemporary interest in the American novel. He has also done more than any other author to focus worldwide attention on what life was like in the Capital District's largest city during the days of Prohibition and the Great Depression.

Kennedy's latest work is "Roscoe," a novel set in the days after the end of World War II. Following the life of Roscoe Conway, a fictitious political operator and son of a retired former city mayor with ties to the local Democratic Party's machine, it looks into the heart of how Albany worked for decades. In one section, which Kennedy will read during the concert at the Palace Theatre, Roscoe's father Felix, a former mayor in the novel, elaborates on the best way to keep a corrupt political machine in power over the long haul.

"It is just so gritty and says so much about what Albany was, and is, that Bill really touches on something quite important with his work," said Miller.

For more information on the upcoming concert, contact the Albany Symphony Orchestra Box Office by calling 465-4663 or visiting the Web site at www.albanysymphony.org.

"We are going to be playing a violin concerto written specifically for Bill Kennedy's book 'Roscoe.'"

Driving costs are the same this year as last

Consumers feeling pinched by increases in day-to-day living expenses can take some comfort in AAA's annual study of driving costs recently released. According to the nation's largest organization for motorists, the cost of owning and operating a new vehicle in 2007 remains basically unchanged from a year ago at 52.2 cents per mile, or $7,823 per year, when driving 15,000 miles annually.

"While costs for some items such as insurance and financing increased from the start of 2006, a lower cost for fuel at the end of last year offset these expenses, resulting in no net increase in the average driving expense for 2007," said Tammy Melo, spokeswoman for AAA Hudson Valley.

The average fuel price dropped slightly from 9.5 cents per mile to 8.9 cents per mile compared to one year ago. Fuel prices in the study are based on the fourth quarter 2006 U.S. price for regular grade fuel, which averaged $2.25 per gallon as tracked in the AAA Fuel Gauge Report, www.aaafuelgauge.com.

"The costs of maintenance and repair, tires and depreciation remain unchanged from one year ago. However, minor increases in the costs of insurance, financing and licensing, registration and taxes offset any savings consumers might have realized from lower fuel costs," said Eric Stigberg, spokesman for AAA Northway.

AAA's "Your Driving Costs" looks at operating and ownership costs of five top-selling models in three popular size classes: small, medium and large sedans. The results clearly show that consumers do have an opportunity to save substantial sums of money by switching from larger models to smaller vehicles.

For example, AAA's research shows the average annual cost of driving a small sedan is $6,219 per year, while a large sedan costs almost 50 percent more to own and operate at $9,373 per year. Smaller, but still significant, savings can be realized by driving a minivan instead of a larger, more expensive and less fuel-efficient SUV. AAA estimates the annual expense of owning and operating a typical minivan at $8,639 per year based on 15,000 miles of driving. An SUV driven the same distance costs an average of $9,997 per year, AAA reports, which is more than 15 percent higher.

AAA's estimated average driving costs are higher than the Internal Revenue Service's allowance for 2007 business mileage of 48.5 cents per mile. The IRS has never allowed full reimbursement of all expenses associated with automobile ownership and use. AAA first began publishing research on driving costs in 1950.

AAA's study calculates the average costs of all expenses associated with owning and operating a vehicle over five years and 75,000 miles of driving using small, mid-size and large sedans. Covered expenses include fuel, maintenance, tires, insurance, license, registration, taxes, depreciation and finance charges. Driving costs in each category are based on average costs for five top-selling models selected by AAA.

By size category, they are:

- Small sedan: Chevrolet Cobalt, Ford Focus, Honda Civic, Nissan Sentra and Toyota Corolla.

- Medium sedan: Chevrolet Impala, Ford Fusion, Honda Accord, Nissan Altima and Toyota Camry.

- Large sedan: Buick Lucerne, Chrysler 300, Ford Five Hundred, Nissan Maxima and Toyota Avalon.

Though not part of the AAA composite average, SUV and minivan information has been included to help buyers estimate operating costs for these types of vehicles.

- SUV models include: Chevrolet Trailblazer, Ford Explorer, Jeep Grand Cherokee, Nissan Pathfinder, and Toyota 4Runner.

- Minivans include: Chevrolet Uplander, Dodge Grand Caravan, Ford Freestar, Honda Odyssey and Toyota Sienna.

Upon request and subject to availability, consumers can obtain copies of AAA's Your Driving Costs from AAA Hudson Valley office in Albany, Troy and Hudson, AAA Northway offices in Schenectady, Amsterdam, Saratoga Springs, Queensbury and Plattsburgh, and on AAA's public affairs Web site, www.aaexchange.com.

Smelling up the road

Scented tires will remind you to pay attention to the place where the rubber meets the road

How often do you check your tires for wear and proper air pressure? If you're like most Americans, not often enough. A September 2006 survey by the Rubber Manufacturer's Association (RMA) found the majority of motorists are not paying enough attention to the only component that keeps a car on the road: the tires.

According to the survey, only 15 percent of drivers properly check their tire pressure regularly, inflating them to the vehicle manufacturer's recommended pressure; 26 percent of drivers mistakenly believe the best time to check their tires is when they are warm after being driven several miles; and only 36 percent of drivers know where to find the recommended tire pressure for their vehicle. That information is in the owner's manual, and also usually printed on a tire information decal attached to the driver's door jamb.

In an effort to raise awareness and promote driving safety, Kumho Tire USA of Rancho Cucamonga, Calif., recently launched a line of aroma tires. The tread of the Ecsta DX tires are embedded with heat resistant oils to ensure lavender remains in the air for thousands

"If putting scent into the tires makes drivers notice their tires more often when they get in and out of the car, then it will be a good thing for consumers."

Rick Brennan

"Consumers don't check their tires enough," says Rick Brennan, brand director for Kumho Tire USA. "If putting scent into the tires makes drivers notice their tires more often when they get in and out of the car, then it will be a good thing for consumers."

Checking tire pressure frequently isn't the only safety measure you should take with your tires. You should also regularly:

- Inspect tires for uneven wear patterns on the tread, cracks, foreign objects, or other signs of wear or trauma. Remove bits of glass and other foreign objects wedged in the tread.
- Make sure your tire valves have valve caps.

- Check your tires' tread depth.

- Rotate your tires every 5,000 miles to get the longest life out of them.

The aromatic Ecsta DX tires are designed for such touring sedans as the Honda Accord, Toyota Camry, Subaru Outback and Chrysler Sebring; and lavender isn't the only scent they come in. The tires are also available in neroli (orange) and jasmine. But sorry guys, the scents you requested while the company was doing research - barbecue, hot dog and popcorn - won't be available anytime soon.

The right oil mix helps your car

Many people don't know how to select motor oil that will help them get optimum performance out of their car. People often just select the oil their father used, or they may take the suggestion of a counter person at an auto parts store.

Things can get even more confusing because of ads that use slogans like "formulated for stop-and-go driving." Stop-and-go driving should be the most basic functions that oil should assist.

There are meaningful differences in motor oils and choosing the right one can have a major impact on how well your car runs. Selecting the right oil is often the quickest and cheapest way to improve your car's performance and reliability.

Two components determine how well motor oil will perform in your car. One factor is the base oil, and the other is the combination of chemicals (additives) that are added to the base oil.

Base oils

The two primary types of base oils used are mineral and synthetic. Mineral oils are by-products of refined crude oil. Refining helps to reduce the impurities but leaves molecules of all shapes and sizes. Synthetic oils are manmade compounds whose molecules are all the same size and shape; consequently, synthetic oil has less friction and performs significantly better than mineral oils.

There's been sizable growth in the use of synthetic oils over the years. In fact, synthetic oils are often what the factory uses in many new performance and luxury cars.

Get an insurance policy that suits you

Just as there are many differences between makes of cars, there are many differences between auto insurance policies, although you have to look more closely to spot them. Choosing a low-cost auto insurance policy may end up costing you thousands of dollars, for instance.

Familiar money-saving pitches obscure complex coverage issues that may have you paying much more in the end.

Your liability exposure

Many auto insurance policies have low liability limits, which don't reflect an individual's true worth. In fact, in several states, the recommended limits are as low as $25,000. Because every auto insurance policy is different, it's best to read your policy carefully and make sure you're not part of the up to 50 percent of drivers who are underinsured. If you are in an accident with someone who is uninsured or underinsured, you could personally be responsible for medical expenses, lost income and other damages.

"Using a cookie-cutter approach is simply not appropriate for buying auto insurance, especially if you have significant assets to protect or specific needs," says Don Soss, chief underwriting officer for Fireman's Fund Insurance. "You need a custom assessment of your risk profile when selecting car insurance. It's critical to go through an agent who understands and can respond to your individual situation."

Sales reps vs. insurance agents

An independent insurance agent will be able to give you details on what a policy covers, and make recommendations on what is best for you, based on your lifestyle. This differs from a telephone sales representative who is often working from a script, and is only able to quote prices, not make recommendations. When talking to an independent agent, it's important to discuss the extent of your assets and net worth; your views about asset protection and insurance; and your expectations if you have a claim.

The replacement gap

Many carriers often fall short in insuring full replacement value for your car in case of a total loss. They usually pay settlements for total losses based on the actual cash value of your vehicle, not on the replacement cost of the original. If you want to purchase a comparable vehicle after a total loss, you'll probably have to cover the gap out of your own money. A few policies feature coverage, which protects you against depreciation in case of a total loss. Such a policy pays the full purchase price for your car, including taxes and license fees, if you total the vehicle during your first year of ownership. Even the deductible is waived. Each year thereafter, the company locks in the car's value as determined by the industry's standard "Blue Book."

Multi-car owner penalty

Car owners who have more cars in the family than drivers can be shortchanged by mass-market insurers.

"Most insurers don't expect customers to have additional cars that aren't regularly driven by a household member," says Soss. "Most insurers assume that those extra cars are being driven by undisclosed teenage drivers who would otherwise cause the customer's premium to skyrocket."

In reality, many people acquire additional vehicles for recreation or collecting that actually are not being driven on a regular basis. In that case, it's best to find an insurance company that can customize rates, offering deep discounts for additional vehicles that other insurers can't match.

"In effect," adds Soss, "mass-market carriers penalize their clients for additional vehicles, whereas specialized insurers reward clients."

Small things add up

The items covered - or not covered - by the fine print in a low-cost policy may appear small when you first sign up, but they can assume a larger significance when you have a loss. For example, mass-market coverage for repairs often provides incentives for policyholders to use "in-network" repair shops, while more specialized insurers allow you to pick the repair shop you want without a cost penalty. Which do you choose? If you're not sure about the extent of your current auto coverage, look at the declarations page of your policy. Your agent can also help you decipher the fine print and make a true comparison between your current coverage and a more comprehensive product.

Since an independent agent is not employed by a single carrier, his or her first responsibility is to the client. Your agent has a legal and fiduciary responsibility to provide proper coverage.

Additives

Regardless of the base oil used, chemicals must be added to give motor oil the characteristics needed to do its job. Typical additives that may be added to base oil include detergents to reduce the formation of residue, defoamants to deter absorption of air, anti-wear agents, antioxidants and others.

Although additives are typically only 15 to 25 percent of motor oil, they can impact a lubricant's performance much more than the base oil. For instance, mineral based motor oil with a very good additive package can easily outperform synthetic motor oil with a mediocre additive package.

There is no easy way for a consumer to determine the quality of motor oil's additive package. Price is often an indicator of quality since the more advanced additives cost more to produce. Performance is the ultimate measure of additive package quality.

Advances in lubrication

Some of the biggest technological advances in lubrication are now coming through advancements in chemical additives. These breakthroughs have been developed by a handful of companies that specialize in high-performance lubricants, as opposed to major oil companies whose primary focus is refining and selling crude oil by-products like gasoline and other fuels.

What to choose

The easiest way to select motor oil is to follow the good, better, best model:

- Good: Mineral-based (regular) motor oils. These are the cheapest and most widely available oils. They typically use standard additive packages that provide minimum levels of performance and protection.
- Better: Synthetic motor oils. These man-made oils are more expensive than mineral-based oils but are still widely available. Their performance advantages come predominantly from the synthetic base oil used. They have a longer service life and offer some improvements in protection. They typically use the same additive packages found in mineral-based oils.
- Best: High-performance synthetic motor oils. These motor oils are the most technologically advanced oils. Although they significantly outperform mineral based or synthetic motor oils, they are about the same price as standard synthetic motor oil. They are typically only available through auto parts stores and select oil change centers. These oils primarily differ in their use of more advanced, proprietary additive technologies.

Still confused? For a used car with little life left in it, stick with the cheap mineral-based motor oil. For a car you plan to keep for a few years and want to get a little better performance from, you should at least upgrade to synthetic motor oil. To get the most performance out of your car, truck or RV, or to protect a vehicle you really care about and want to last, upgrade to a high performance motor oil.

Cars need to get in shape for spring

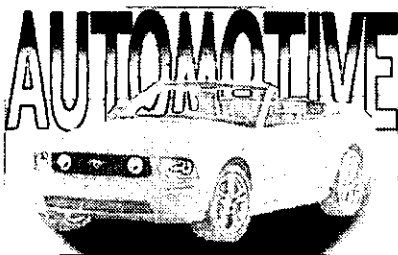

When cold weather begins to warm, motorists may think their driving cares have melted away with the winter ice and snow. Not so.

"Spring brings its own set of challenges for safety-conscious drivers," says Jim Sinclair, vice president of service for Subaru of America, Inc. "Many drivers underestimate the need for control that all-wheel drive provides in slick rainy conditions - after the snow and ice have melted."

Just as you winterized your car with an eye to safety last fall, it's time to begin work on your spring automotive safety checklist. Here are some hints for ensuring your car is in top condition for safe spring motor-ing:

- Rain is a common spring driving hazard. While most people think of ice or snow when cautioned about slippery roads, the truth is, wet roads can be just as slick. Tires can hydroplane on a layer of water, losing contact with the road and causing the vehicle to skid. Rain lifts oil and other slippery fluids, dripped by passing autos, creating a slick layer on the blacktop. Flooded roads can flood out engines. Slow down on wet roads. Consider buying a vehicle with features like all-wheel drive and electronic stability control.

- Start out with a safe car. Studies show that all-wheel drive and electronic stability control significantly reduce the risk of being involved in a crash. Automakers are beginning to offer the technologies on more models. Subaru offers both as standard equipment on models like its B9 Tribeca that has earned the top safety ratings from industry watchdogs such as the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (www.safercar.gov) and the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety (www.iihs.org).

- Replace worn tires. Your tires are what keep the car on the road. Worn out treads provide less traction and greater chance to slide. Likewise, make sure tires are inflated properly according to your vehicle's owner's manual.

- Spring showers bring May flowers, but let this be a reminder to also check and replace worn wiper blades. Poorly maintained windshield wipers can hamper visibility in poor weather. After a long winter of salt and other road residue on the windows, wiper effectiveness is greatly enhanced by cleaning the glass with a strong glass cleaner that can remove the oily film. And don't forget the inside of the glass. Removing the film on the inside can help the defroster clear faster and reduce moisture build-up.

As part of its National Car Care month in April, the Car Care Council recommends checking tire treads and windshield wiper quality in preparation for spring driving conditions.

"In our research of vehicles brought in for their April check-up, close to one-fifth of vehicles (17 percent) had front windshield wiper failures and 12 percent of vehicles needed service on their rear wipers and/or washers," says Rich White, executive director of the Car Care Council.

Spring rain can also dampen visibility so it is important to check all vehicle lighting including headlights, taillights, back-up lights, turn signals, parking lights and brake lights. These lights are important not only because they help you to see, but also serve as a way to help you communicate clearly with other motorists.

Take advantage of safety resources. Throughout National Car Care month, many dealerships offer free safety screenings to motorists who drive the brand of car sold at the dealership. For example, starting in April and continuing through spring, participating Subaru dealers will conduct free professional diagnostics on all Subaru models. The inspection includes a check up of all major operating systems and drivers receive a written report of the vehicle's condition. Visit www.subaru.com to find a dealer in your area.

Catch some air and admiring looks

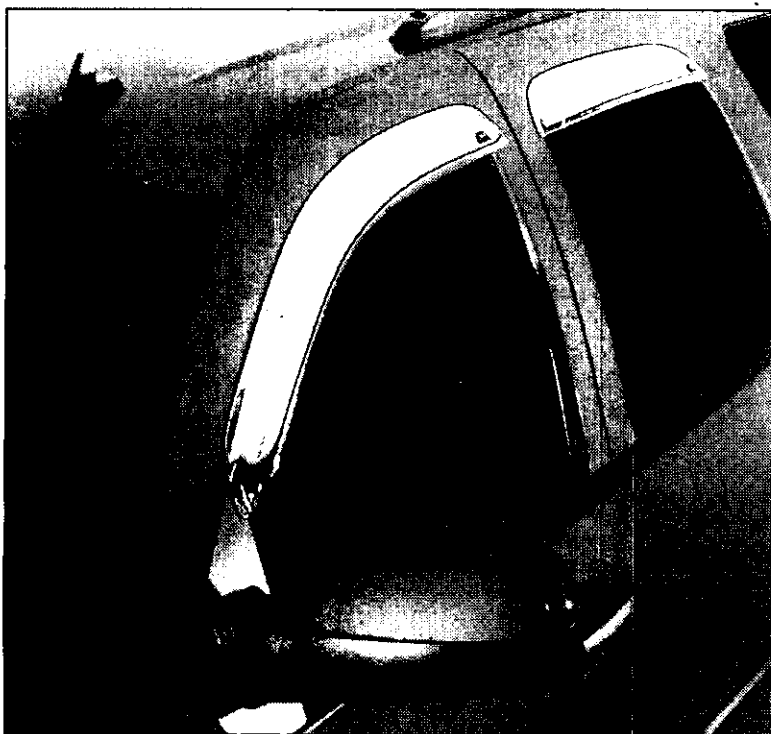

Remember what it was like to go cruising with the windows down and the wind blowing through your hair? Now that we've made it through the long, harsh winter, it won't be long before you can do it again; but along with the warmer temperatures and that carefree attitude comes a drawback you may have forgotten about.

Unless you keep your car parked in a garage or in the shade all the time, when you first get in, it's going to be downright hot. But there is something you can do to keep your car cool throughout the spring and summer months: Add window vents.

These "eaves" installed above your car window offer a number of advantages. Not only do they allow you to leave the window open a crack in the summer to let in fresh air without worrying about a sudden thunderstorm, while you're on the road, they can decrease wind noise for a more pleasant driving experience. And they offer an opportunity to customize your ride.

Window vents are available in a number of styles. AVS, a brand name known for its quality line of car customizing accessories, offers three window vent styles that you can install yourself with strong automotive grade tape.

The original Ventsvisor installs directly above your windows. Another installs inside the window channel, giving your car a sleek, streamlined appearance. Both come in a stylish smoke tint that can be painted to match your vehicle. There's also a chrome-plated vent visor which gives a stylish look from inside and outside the vehicle. The window vents are made from heavy-duty acrylic, and available for both the front and rear doors.

"We introduced this practical and durable accessory 70 years ago, and it is one of our most popular items," says AVS spokesperson Jay Lusignan. Hundreds of custom applications are available, including many for older models.

In addition to window vents, AVS offers a variety of ways to improve both the functionality and the look of your vehicle. From hood shields to hood scoops and door sill protectors to light covers, you can find everything you need to customize your ride.

So this spring and summer, spend your days enjoying the weather - both outside and in your car.

Safe cars can mean safe teen drivers

Parents, are you protecting your teen driver when she gets behind the wheel? Traffic crashes result in 44 percent of teen deaths, the leading cause of teen fatalities in the U.S., according to the National Safety Council. But driving and insurance experts agree that parents can play a big role in helping their teens stay safe.

"Parents should monitor their teen's driving habits and the condition of the vehicle they drive because drivers are responsible for the lives of their passengers and everyone else on the road with them," says Charles Valinotti of General Casualty.

Boring can be safer

Putting your child in a safe vehicle helps protect her and could also lower your insurance rates. Valinotti recommends slightly older, sturdier vehicles in good condition and equipped with safety features. Most vehicles up to 10 years old come with standard safety features, such as airbags, head restraints and anti-lock brakes.

Avoid vehicles with performance features such as turbo-charged engines and high-performance tires, which encourage more aggressive driving.

Maintain a safe vehicle

"A lot of teens don't realize vehicle maintenance is just as important as its make and model," says John Blodnick of Unigard Insurance Company. "It's your job to make sure the vehicle is running properly — not just to give them gas money."

In addition to routine oil changes, Blodnick says, pay special attention to these items to keep your teen driving safely:

- Tire condition. Make sure tires have good tread, especially in the winter months.

- Tire pressure. Check pressure regularly, especially in colder weather. Air compresses one pound per square inch (PSI) for each 10-degree temperature drop. Check tire pressure when the vehicle hasn't been driven and fill to the PSI levels listed on the tires.

- Brakes. Test brakes regularly. Educate your teens about warning signs, such as squeaking, the need to apply more pressure to stop, or longer stopping time.

- Window washer fluid and blades. A clean windshield increases visibility. Make sure fluid levels and wiper blades are adequate, especially during snowy conditions.

- Headlights and taillights. Check to ensure they're clean and functioning. This increases visibility and can help avoid traffic citations or accidents.

Put it in writing

Before you hand your child

the car keys, Valinotti recommends discussing responsibilities and drawing up a driving contract containing their responsibilities for vehicle maintenance and driving safely, including:

- Obey the speed limit and traffic laws.

- Wear a seatbelt and ensure passengers buckle up too.

- Do not drink or use drugs or ride in a vehicle operated by someone under the influence.

- Follow applicable graduated licensing laws that limit the number of passengers.

- Don't be distracted by cell phones, iPods and loud music.

- Tell parents where you're going and when you expect to return.

- Budget enough travel time. Call to let parents know you're running late instead of speeding and risking an accident to make up time.

- Obey the nighttime driving curfew.

Also, discuss the consequences if the rules are broken. These could include loss of driving privileges and paying fines or repair costs. Both parents and teen should sign and date the contract.

"Laws help teens drive safely, but parents can help ensure their kids obey them," says Valinotti. "You can set a good example when you're driving and set appropriate limits to ensure safe driving."

Safety leads to savings

Following traffic laws and avoiding citations also help keep insurance rates down. Your teen's insurance will increase — even double or triple — if she is ticketed for driving under the influence. General Casualty, Unigard and other providers offer savings of 10 to 20 percent if your child gets good grades and maintains a "B" or 3.0 grade point average (on a 4.0 scale).

If your child is involved in an accident that damages your car, your insurance rates could increase and end up costing more than the repairs, so keep this in mind when reporting a fender bender. If you can afford to pay for the repairs yourself instead of reporting the claim, you may save money in the long run.

Customize your wheels

The last time you purchased a vehicle, why did you buy a truck instead of a car? The draw was likely its functionality. Trucks handle better on long hauls, can tow pretty much anything, and offer enough space to transport lumber, garden supplies, furniture — pretty much anything you may need to carry.

When you bought your truck, you likely followed the dealer's advice to protect the cargo bed with some kind of liner. So how is it standing up to the elements? With another change of season upon us, now is a good time to inspect your truck bed to make sure the liner is still doing its job.

If you have a drop-in liner, lift it up and check to make sure the truck bed hasn't started rusting because of trapped moisture, or gotten scratched since drop-ins tend to shift or vibrate. If you see any of these signs of wear, you may want to consider a spray-on bedliner. But this time, instead of choosing traditional black, how about spicing things up with a little color?

New in time for spring 2007, Line-X Corporation is now offering Line-X Xtra, the only color composite truck bed coating fortified with DuPont's Kevlar. Soon to be widely available throughout a network of more than 500 professional Line-X application centers throughout the U.S. and Canada, Line-X Xtra can be applied in any color, from a vehicle's factory-original paint color to contrasting shades for a personalized look.

Want to show your love of country? Transform your red truck into a rolling American flag by spraying the truck bed blue and the grille white. Or maybe you'd like to boast the team colors of your favorite sports or race team. And business owners have a new opportunity to customize their fleet of pickups with the company colors. The possibilities are endless.

Just like its standard protective coating, Line-X expects Xtra to quickly become popular for a wide variety of applications that extend beyond bedliners and grilles. Line-X Xtra opens up new opportunities for many other commercial, industrial, agricultural and marine applications, especially among brands and products that have specific signature color themes. Such applications include, but are not limited to:

- Agricultural equipment such as tractors, utility vehicles and ATVs;
- RVs and motor homes;
- Trailers: boats, horses, personal watercraft and work equipment;
- Marine applications: boat hulls, decks, ramps and cargo holds;
- Sound system applications: speaker boxes for vehicles, studios and sound stages;
- Farming: feed containers, storage tanks and silos;
- Construction: non-skid flooring, decks, foundations, retaining walls and roofs;
- Outdoors: playground and park structures, ponds, dog runs and kennels.

Line-X has more than 550 retail locations worldwide. For information and dealer locations, log on to www.linex.com or call (800) 831-3232.

Ways to save on car, driving expenses

Insurance rates, car maintenance expenses and fuel prices continue to rise. Thankfully, you don't have to alter your driving habits or buy a new car to get some relief. Here are some quick, inexpensive, easy ways to save money with the car or truck you already have.

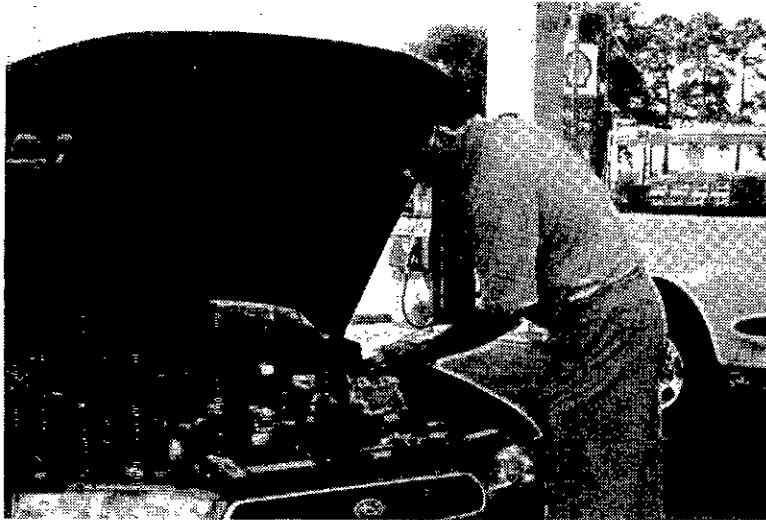

- Get slick to reduce maintenance costs and to save fuel.

There are high performance motor oils that can make meaningful improvements to your car's fuel economy and engine life. For instance, numerous independent studies have documented that high performance lubricants have been proven in independent tests to increase horsepower and dramatically reduce heat, wear and emissions.

Using a high performance synthetic motor oil, as opposed to conventional oil, also allows for more miles between oil changes. This reduces maintenance costs and the amount of time spent on maintenance. You'll pay a little more for premium motor oil but the savings in fuel and reduced maintenance costs more than make up for the higher price.

- Mind the air to save money on fuel.

The U.S. Energy Department reports that under-inflated tires can increase fuel consumption by up to 3 percent. One study estimates that 50 to 80 percent of the tires rolling on U.S. roads are under inflated. Astonishingly, we could save up to 2 billion gallons of gas each year simply by properly inflating our tires.

Second, a clogged air filter can increase fuel consumption by as much as 10 percent. Air filters keep impurities from damaging the interior of the engine, so replacing dirty filters will save gas and protect your engine. More tips to save money on fuel are available at www.fueleconomy.gov.

- Reduce your insurance costs by doing your homework.

One of the simplest ways to reduce insurance costs is simply to shop around. Prices vary from company to company, so it pays to do your homework. Get at least three price quotes. You can call companies directly or access information on the Internet. Your state's insurance regulator may also provide price comparisons. Other ways to reduce insurance costs can be found by visiting the U.S. Insurance Information Institute's at www.pueblo.gsa.gov/cic_text/cars/autoinsu/autoinsu.htm.

An astute consumer can save hundreds of dollars a year on automotive expenses without buying a new car or changing lifestyle. All it takes is a little time and research, and the good sense to choose better-performing automotive products.

And you thought airbags were enough

According to the National Highway Safety Administration, motor vehicle accidents in the U.S. resulted in 2.9 million injury cases and 42,636 deaths in 2005, the most recent year statistics are available. In addition to the human toll, such accidents cost an estimated $7,300 per second. That's $230.6 billion dollars a year, or about $820 per person in the U.S.

And yet, when in the market for a new car, many still believe that standard seatbelts and airbags are a car's primary safety features. But today, remarkable strides are being made in automotive innovations, with vehicle technology designed to make driving safer by helping to prevent accidents from happening in the first place. Luxury automaker Lexus has even launched an entire ad campaign on the subject for its 2008 RX 350 SUV, which highlights the benefits of the vehicle's active safety systems.

So if you're in the market for a new car, here are a few features to look for to help protect you and your precious cargo:

Handle with care

Every driver knows the feeling of swerving to avoid an accident or skidding to a screeching stop. How well your car's stability control system handles these situations could mean the difference between a safe outcome and an accident. Many automakers have designed systems such as their Vehicle

Find a spring break getaway in your own backyard

Spring break is upon us, and this year a lot of people are planning road trips. Have you decided where to go yet?

If not, log on to www.firestonelegendarydrives.com to get some ideas. Whether you're thinking about a cross-country trip, or just looking to take a quick afternoon drive, you'll find information about stretches of road that are true "destinations."

"Firestone Legendary Drives was created to provide travelers with fun and interesting alternatives for excursions across the country," said Christine Karbowiak, vice president of public affairs, Bridgestone Americas Holding, Inc. "And we're excited to present some new elements on our Web site. Whether you're interested in automotive museums, history or great local restaurants, Firestone Legendary Drives offers a little something for everyone."

The Firestone Legendary Drives Web site features details about all the major highways you'll find in the 50 states, as well as noteworthy drives. Here's a sampling of some of the drives featured in different parts of the country:

West Coast

If you're looking to take a trip along the West Coast, one of the prettiest drives is the Mount Hood/Columbia River Gorge Loop in the northwestern part of Oregon. The 194-mile drive, which begins and ends in Portland, Ore., and circles Mount Hood, features majestic mountain views, a mighty river and misty waterfalls. The drive can be done in as few as four hours, but there's so much to see, most people spend several days exploring this wonderland.

Central/Western U.S.A.

If you want to explore the central part of the country, one of your best bet is to travel along historic Route 66, which covers more than 2,000 miles as it makes its way through eight Central and Western states. Route 66 starts in Chicago, Ill., and heads south to St. Louis, Mo., then through Oklahoma to Amarillo, Texas, on to Winslow, Ariz., and from there west all the way to Los Angeles.

East Coast

If you'd like to take a road trip along the East Coast, a drive through the Great Smoky Mountains National Park is a must. The 40-mile trek along Tennessee's Newfound Gap Road from the Sugarlands Visitor Center to the Oconalufee Visitor Center in North Carolina will reveal some spectacular scenery. Along the winding road, you'll see great mountain vistas, the highest peak in the park and a river gorge. There are also be several pull-offs where you can take short hikes to waterfalls.

Northeast

Ranked by many as one of the 10 best roads in America to drive, Route 100 stretches from the southern edge of Vermont to that state's northern border. One of the drive's biggest attractions is the Stowe Hollow covered bridge, a 50-foot span made of wood, built in 1844. It's one of 107 covered bridges in the state.

Stay safe on the road

If you weren't before, you've probably now been inspired to take a road trip this spring, but before venturing out be sure your car is in good working order. Bridgestone Americas offers the following safety tips:

- Before you set out, have an automotive technician make sure the vehicle is travel ready by checking the battery, fluid levels, exhaust system and windshield wipers. If you'll be traveling in a cooler climate, have the defrosting and heating system checked as well.

- If you'll be doing a lot of highway driving, it is important to keep the gas tank at least one-half full at all times. The fuel reserve will be important to avoid being stranded in heavy traffic.

- Examine the tread on your tires once per month and before every long trip. Your tires should have at least 2/32 inch of tread depth. You can easily determine if your tires are due for replacement with the "penny test." Insert a penny in several spots on the tire's tread, Lincoln's head down. If you can see the top of Lincoln's head in any of those spots, the tread is worn and the tire probably needs to be replaced. Have it checked by a tire professional.

- Tires can lose one pound per square inch of air pressure for each 10-degree drop in temperature. Improperly inflated tires will lessen the gripping action because the tire tread will not meet the road surface as it was designed to do.

- Prepare for inclement weather by storing emergency supplies in the trunk. Important items to have on hand in case of a storm are: a properly inflated spare tire, flashlight, blanket, extra clothing, candles/matches, bottled water, snacks, any necessary medication and a cell phone with a car charger.

For more safety information, and details about drives worth checking out in other parts of the country, log on to www.firestonelegendarydrives.com. The site features picturesque drives in each of the 50 states.

Stability Control (VSC) to help enhance a vehicle's handling, particularly when there's a loss of traction control during a turn.

For example, the VSC in Lexus' new RX works in tandem with Traction Control to sense the onset of a loss of traction in a turn and react immediately. Responding to input from sensors that analyze wheel speed and steering angle, it detects when a wheel may be spinning too fast and helps apply the right amount of brake pressure to the specific wheel that needs it, or reduces the throttle if necessary. In effect, it reacts to danger before you can.

To see or not to see

Good visibility is a significant factor in preventing accidents. It's no wonder that the auto industry has been focusing on headlamp innovations. Among the most advanced front lighting systems is Lexus' available Adaptive Front Light System (AFS). When negotiating a turn, a driver's eyesight naturally goes in the direction of the turn, but this isn't where the typical headlamp casts its light. The automaker has addressed this issue by offering headlamps that rotate and cast more light in the direction of the turn. The system takes into consideration the car's speed and position of the steering wheel to calculate up to a 15 degree rotation for the left headlamp and up to 5 degrees for the right headlamp in the direction it is turning.

Rain, rain go away

The minute those rain drops pelt your windshield, know that your visibility will be immediately affected. An often underappreciated feature on any car, a good windshield wiper system can help ensure a safe trip during bad weather. Today, blades are made to last longer and do a better job cleaning your windshield, vastly improving visibility. So when buying a new car, try out the wiper blades and make sure they function properly and work at various speeds. Lexus has taken wiper blades one step further by developing an available rain-sensing system that detects and automatically responds when water drops accumulate on the windshield. On the RX 350, for example, a rain sensor located behind the rearview mirror detects the presence of rain on the windshield. When it senses moisture, the sensor activates the wiper blades at the appropriate speed. When the rain intensifies or diminishes, the sensor adjusts the wiper speed accordingly.

The pressure's on

According to a poll conducted by AAA, 85 percent of motorists do not know how to check their vehicle's tire pressure. But the amount of tire pressure can greatly affect how your car grips the road. So over- or under-inflated tires can impact vehicle performance in acceleration, handling and braking, all the things that need to be at their peak to help avoid accidents. Make sure the car you're looking for comes with a tire pressure system that is proactive. Sensors in each tire should constantly monitor the air pressure and transmit the information to the onboard system's computer and alert the driver when pressure is critically low.

Our service (and our customers!) speak for themselves.

We'd love to tell you about how advanced our Digital Cable service is. How fast our Road Runner High Speed Online is. Or how convenient and reliable our Home Phone service is.

But without our reliable team of local professionals backing your service up 24/7, none of it would be possible. And that's what our customers like to talk about.

We would like to commend one of Time Warner's technical staff who went over and above on our behalf to get our cable service restored over the weekend after the recent ice storm."

~Robert, Gansevoort

"It is a pleasure in this day and age to meet service personnel of the caliber like your technician, Lance. He was competent, quick, pleasant and most of all courteous."

TAKING INVENTORY

As the inventory of unsold homes grows, sellers face greater competition than they did a year ago. While it has always been essential for sellers to price their properties realistically, now it is even more important. Whether you are looking for a realistic assessment of the current real estate market or an asking price for your home, sellers should engage a real estate professional to enlighten them and to prepare a comparable market analysis.

In the ever changing real estate market, it is essential to have all the facts in order to make an educated business decision regarding your property.

Remember, as a resident of Bethlehem for 25 years, with 15 years of real estate experience, I am able to assess the local market and price your home realistically and competitively.

By JILL U. ADAMS

Quit blaming the groundhog for the weather. The baby animals at Indian Ladder Farms prove that spring is here.

Indian Ladder's annual spring event, Baby Animal Daze, not only brings smiles to visitors' faces, but also represents the beginning of the farm's growing season. It's a welcoming of new life and a promise of earth's bounty to come.

It's also a favorite with area families.

"It gives kids the experience to get close to animals, to pet the animals," said Liesl Bailey, special events coordinator at Indian Ladder Farms. Animal guides are there to assist, holding the animals for kids to touch.

For first timers — kids who haven't experienced baby chicks or bunnies — it can be "really special," said Bailey. So much so, that kids who've come in the past insist on return visits.

The babies this year are bunnies, pigs, calves, goat kids, lambs, and assorted poultry chicks. Even turkey chicks, "which are really, really cute," said Bailey, before they grow up and become, well, rather ugly.

Another building hosts a Farm Animal Learning Center with hands-on exhibits about domesticated animals and products that come from them, as well as how to feed and care for animals. Bailey said it's "where you can learn about the co-dependence between animals and people."

Baby Animal Daze runs through Sunday, April 22, with special events on the weekends. Also on weekends, pony rides and horse drawn wagon rides will be available.

Companion animals will be featured during the weekend of April 14 and 15. A local adoption agency will bring dogs and cats looking for homes. A new addition to the pets' weekend will be Musher Vick and his Second Chance sled dogs, adoptees trained to work as a sled team.

The Blessing of the Animals will take place Sunday, April 15 at 2 p.m. Visitors are welcome to bring their own pets to the ceremony. A procession around the farm will allow the farm's own animals to be blessed.

Earth Day will be celebrated during the weekend of April 21 and 22. Worm composting, recycling events, and nature walks will be featured, said Bailey, "and Kelly Martin is bringing her raptors."

Another new attraction from April 21 to 22 is a weekend camp, called Wigwam Weekend and led by naturalist and native peoples educator Vince Walsh of the Kawing Crow Awareness Center. Kids enrolled in the camp will learn to harvest tree bark and weave it into the structure using the methods of northeastern woodland peoples, like the Iroquois. Tuition is $85 for the two-day camp, including lunch.

If it's just the baby animals you want, however, Bailey said weekday mornings are the least crowded time (although the farm does host school field trips during this time).

Helderberg escarpment, or hiking the one-mile nature trail through the woods.

"There's a lot of birds and tracks back there," she said.

You can also visit the farm animals, including Rosie the Scottish Highland cow and Eeyore the donkey.

Bailey recommends finishing with a visit to the market, containing "gifts from down the road and around the world." Many visitors won't leave without a bag of Indian Ladder's cider donuts, made onsite.

The Baby Animal Daze celebrates a new season.

"It kicks off spring perfectly," Bailey said.

Indian Ladder Farms is located at 342 Altamont Road in Voorheesville. For information, call 765-2956 or visit the Web site, www.indianladderfarms.com.

Lady Eagles get outside long enough to beat Shen

By ROB JONAS
jonasr@spotlightnews.com

The Bethlehem Lady Eagles had been caged for so long that they almost forgot what it was like to be outside.

With Bethlehem's athletic fields unplayable due to all the inclement weather of the last month, the defending Section II girls lacrosse champions had been stuck inside until last Wednesday's season opener against Shenendehowa.

All that time inside might have made an ordinary team rusty, but not Bethlehem. The Lady Eagles jumped out to an 8-2 lead and cruised to a 13-5 victory over last year's Sectional runners-up on a cold, rainy day in Clifton Park.

"If the girls could tough it out in that weather, then all I can say is with warmer weather on the way, we should be fine," said Bethlehem coach Dawn Austin.

It was Bethlehem's first game since graduating several key players including Halley Quillinan, Emily Szelest and Cate Quinlan, but there were plenty of Lady Eagles ready to pick up the slack. Tee Ladouceur ripped Shen's defense for seven goals, Kayleigh Hines contributed five assists and Rae Mahon stopped three shots in her first start in goal.

"We have a strong returning unit with a lot of young players who provide speed and talent," said Austin.

Ladouceur, Hines and twins Caitlin and Erica Hill will be among the players the Lady Eagles will be looking to fill the void left with the graduation of Quillinan, one of the most prolific goal scorers in Section II history. Freshmen Michelle Primomo, Anna Gray and Stephanie Sica will also be asked to contribute on offense.

The defense is another concern for Bethlehem. Mahon has had limited playing time backing up Szelest, and freshmen Cameron and Kylie Caesar are making the transition from junior varsity to varsity.

The good news for Bethlehem is that seniors Caitlin Nevins and Kira Pannucci are back to help bring along the next generation of Lady Eagle defenders.

"I brought up seven freshmen who played on JV last year as eighth graders so when we lose our nine seniors (after this year), we have their replacements ready," said Austin.

Bethlehem's schedule should also help the seven freshmen get acclimated to the varsity level in a hurry. Beyond its Suburban Council schedule, Bethlehem has a tough non-league schedule that includes games against state-wide powers Penn Yan, Skaneateles and three-time state finalist Fayetteville-Manlius.

"We do that to challenge ourselves," said Austin. "It lets us see where we are, and it shows the girls what they have to do."

Not that Bethlehem's league schedule is any less demanding. As Guilderland proved by beating the Lady Eagles in last year's opener, the gap is closing between Bethlehem and the rest of the league.

"We feel we have a strong unit, but we also recognize the talent of the Suburban Council is growing," said Austin. "The competition is pretty stiff."

Bethlehem will get a good idea of how tough the Suburban Council is over the next week. After playing in Penn Yan Thursday, the Lady Eagles visit Shaker Friday and Saratoga Monday. Then following their home opener Tuesday against league newcomer Burnt Hills-Ballston Lake, they welcome Guilderland to Bethlehem Thursday, April 19.

Austin is hoping that her team will escape the gym a few more times before entering the heart of their league schedule.

"All the other Suburban Council teams have gotten outside already," she said.

Golf

hear the TV announcer shout, "Holy smokes! Woods missed it! He is human after all!" If it's such a riveting moment, it should be accompanied by the appropriate reaction. Could you imagine if Al Michaels whispered, "Do you believe in miracles? Yes!" after the Americans beat the Russians in Lake Placid? It wouldn't be right.

- Play something other than random orchestral music during a telecast. How about a little guitar-driven rock or some old time rhythm and blues while showing the previous day's highlights? Golf is supposed to be a sport, not "Masterpiece Theater." No harpichords or oboes accompany any other televised sport.

- Handicap the field. The world's top golfers should start any major tournament with a five-stroke deficit so that other guys have a legitimate shot. That way, we might have more moments like the one I missed Sunday because I fell asleep waiting for it. Does anyone really think Johnson, Ben Curtis or Mike Weir is ever going to win another major without some help? I don't.

- Set up pairings we want to watch. Have Woods and Mickelson play together every round. Let Goosen and Ernie Els battle each other. Get John Daly and Colin Montgomerie together. Why wait to see how they're doing in a tournament? If you want compelling drama or even some high comedy, give us those types of pairings.

- Finally, make hazards actually hazardous. When the ball flies into the rough, it should land in grass as tall as corn stalks (that would have made Johnson — Mr. Iowa — feel really at home). If a ball lands in a sand trap, it should truly be trapped for one stroke. And if the ball lands in some water, there should be a big fish there to eat it. Golfers don't need anyone to go in and fish the ball out anyway. They just take another ball out.

Hey, I'd watch a golf tournament like that.

something we'll work on in practice."

Bridgeport drew even 17 seconds before the end of the second period. Blake Comeau circled around Albany's defensive zone and took a shot from near the blue line that Trevor Smith deflected past Tyler Weiman.

"We don't want to give up goals in the last minute of a period because it might give them momentum, but that's what happened," said Weiman.

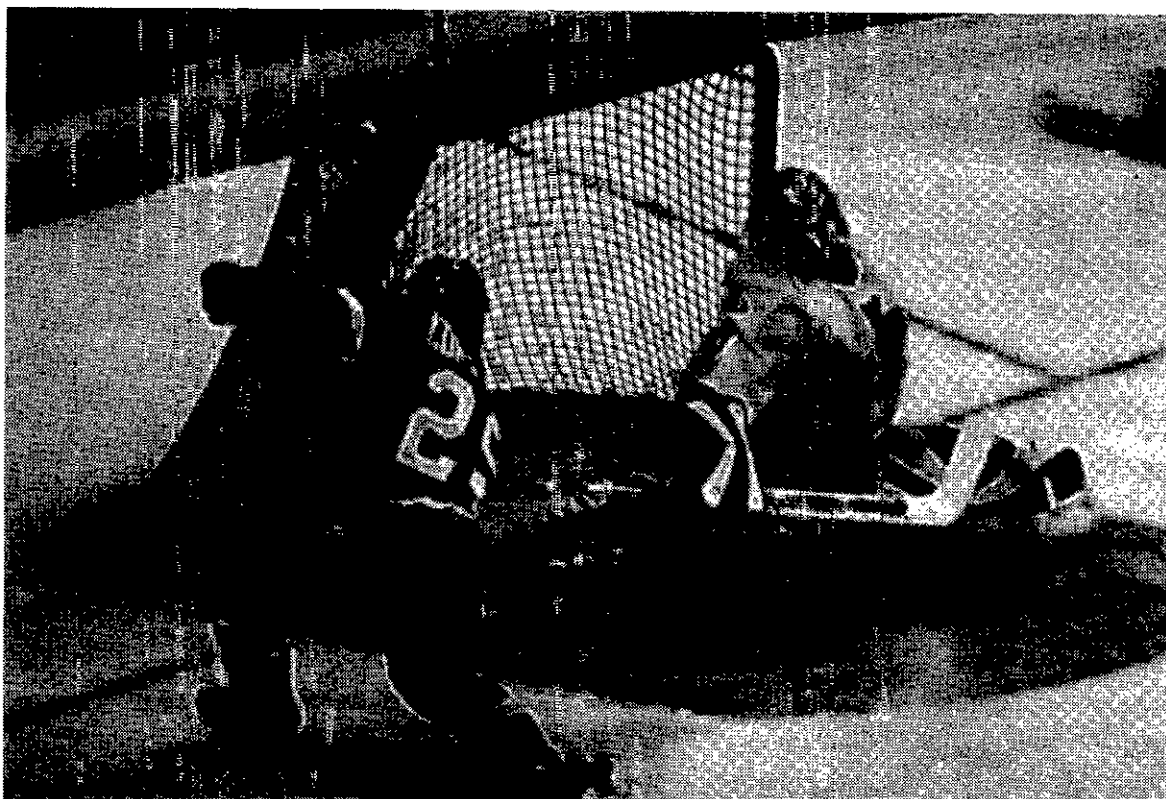

Weiman and the rest of Albany's defense stifled Bridgeport's momentum in the third period and overtime. The Rats limited the Sound Tigers to 11 shots over the final 25 minutes, all of which Weiman handled.

"They did a good job of keeping (Bridgeport's forwards) to the outside," Weiman said of his defenders. "When I made a save and couldn't contain the rebound, they did a good job of clearing it."

"Weiman was unbelievable," said Rowe. "He's a money guy, and I told the guys that he would step up — not that (backup) Justin Peters can't do it, but he's a young guys and this is a tough time to put a young guy in."

Aucoin and Petruzalek helped Weiman out in the shootout by scoring on their attempts.

"A lot of times, I shoot (at the goaltender's) glove," said Aucoin of his shootout strategy. "But what I saw this time was he (Thompson) was really out there, so I decided to go five hole (between the goaltender's legs)."

Gregg Johnson converted on his third round attempt to pull Bridgeport within a goal before Carson sealed Albany's victory by making his shot.

"We watched him in practice, and I told my assistant that if we go into a shootout, he goes in," Rowe said of Carson.

Albany's playoff chances took a hit Sunday with a 5-1 loss at Hartford, but the Rats still hold an advantage over Bridgeport other than the one point separating the two teams — a better schedule. While Bridgeport travels to Wilkes Barre-Scranton and Hartford — two of the better teams in the AHL's Eastern Conference — Albany hosts last-place Binghamton Wednesday and Friday.

The Rats finish the season Saturday against third-place Norfolk, while the Sound Tigers get Philadelphia and Norfolk this weekend. That could lead to some scoreboard watching in Albany and Bridgeport, but the Rats said they will do their best to ignore what's happening in Connecticut.

"The last couple of weeks, we've done pretty good with not looking at the scoreboard until after we finish playing," said Aucoin.

For Albany's long-suffering hockey fans, though, they will be watching the out-of-town scoreboard closely.

Rats make playoff push

Albany leads Bridgeport by 1 point after shootout win

By ROB JONAS
jonasr@spotlightnews.com

A one-point lead for the final playoff spot in the AHL's East Division with one week left isn't much.

But the way the Albany River Rats gained their one-point lead on Bridgeport may mean everything.

Keith Aucoin, Jakub Petruzalek and Brett Carson scored shootout goals to help the River Rats defeat the Sound Tigers 3-2 Saturday night at the TU Center and break a fourth-place tie with Bridgeport.

More importantly for Albany, the win gave the Rats a 5-3 season series advantage over Bridgeport, which gives them the tiebreaker should the Sound Tigers rally in the final week of the regular season.

"I guess it's appropriate that it went into a shootout," said Albany coach Tom Rowe. "We've been battling back and forth all year."

Just the fact that the Rats are in a battle for a playoff berth is welcome news for a franchise that hasn't been to the AHL playoffs the last seven years.

"This is as good for the organization as it is for the team," said Rowe. "We want to get people back in the building, and this is a good way to do it."

It looked for a little while that Bridgeport would gain the upper hand in the battle when Masi Marjamaki scored 6:19 into the first period. The Sound Tigers maintained their one-goal lead until the early stages in the second period when Shane Willis and Cody McLeod tallied to put Albany ahead 2-1.

The Rats had a golden opportunity to take a two-goal lead later in the second period. A five-minute major to Marjamaki and a two-minute tripping infraction against goaltender Billy Thompson gave Albany nearly seven minutes of power play time including 39 seconds of a five-on-three advantage. But the Rats couldn't convert.

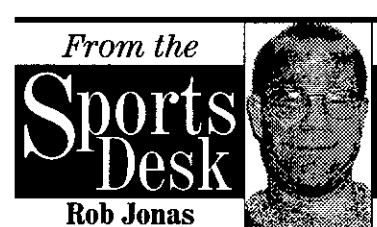

"We can't let five-on-threes go like that," said Aucoin. "That's

It's time to liven up golf telecasts

Once in a while, my dad would tell me how he'd make a sport more bearable to watch.

To give you an idea of his forward thinking, one of his ideas is pitting a team of really big football players against a team of really small football players. The appeal — the small players would run between the legs of the big players. Never mind the fact that when the big players got the ball, they'd run right over the small players. It would still be more interesting than two teams of the same size plowing into each other and going nowhere for 60 minutes.

(Note: this is my dad's idea, not mine. I like football the way it is, even if there are some games where there are more punts than points.)

I'd like to apply my dad's forward thinking to televised golf tournaments. I was so bored watching Sunday's final round of

The Masters that I fell asleep in my recliner. When I awoke, some guy named Zach Johnson received a green jacket from Phil Mickelson. For a moment, I thought they had picked some random guy out of the crowd to fill in for Tiger Woods at the awards ceremony. Turns out, Johnson actually won the tournament.

I've tried to understand golf's appeal. I've tried to figure out how anyone can sit mesmerized in front of a television as announcers whisper about what Retief Goosen is looking for as he lines up a putt for what seems like an eternity. For all the announcers know, Goosen is thinking about what he's going to order for dinner. It doesn't matter to them — they have to whisper something to break the silence we're already enduring.

So using my dad's logic, here's what I would do to make golf on TV more watchable.

- Put microphones on the players. Networks do this during celebrity golf tournaments. Why not place mikes on the real golfers? I'd love to hear Mickelson's reaction to a missed putt or Vijay Singh swear as he drives his ball into a sand trap. It would be a lot more colorful than listening to two guys whisper to each other about which way the green is sloped.

- Put announcers in soundproof booths so they can talk as loud as they'd like. If Woods misses a putt by inches, I want to

Proponents of public water say accountability is key

By JESSICA HARDING
hardingj@spotlightnews.com

Ever wonder where your water comes from and how it gets there? When you pay your water bill, ever wonder where it goes?

For most Capital District residents, their water system is run by the local government, which uses taxes and user fees to pay for its maintenance and upkeep. The local government taxes its residents to pay off the debt to build the system and charges a user fee for any resident hooked to the system.

For example, residents in Guiderland who are hooked up to the municipal water system pay a user fee per 1,000 gallons used, and anyone who lives in the water district pays an Ad Valorem tax equaling $1.01 per $1,000 of assessed property value. The Ad Valorem tax is used to pay off the debt that was incurred while building the water system's infrastructure.

Those in favor of municipally run water systems cite their many benefits, including the fact that those systems are governed by elected officials who are accountable to the residents.

Guiderland water and wastewater Superintendent William West said a privately controlled water system is not a good idea.

"When you have a private company, they are for profit. Private companies are only accountable to the stockholder, and the customer doesn't have any recourse if they aren't doing a good job. The town board is more accountable to the public and the public can show its displeasure through public hearings and voting," West said.

According to Ballston highway and water Superintendent Joseph Whalen, another benefit to publicly run systems is that the local government knows exactly what it is getting; where the water lines are, exactly what goes into the ground and who is responsible for checking it.

"Sometimes you don't know what is in the ground unless there is good record keeping. In municipal systems there is good record keeping. You know what you use and you know what you are billing for," said Whalen.

Clifton Park, which is in the process of deciding whether public or private will provide the town's water in the future.

The Clifton Park Water Authority is choosing between the Saratoga County Water Authority and Veolia Water North America, a private company that controls water systems for the city of Schenectady. It's also considering, along with other options, including funding its own system.

Saratoga County Supervisor Anita Daly, a Republican, one of Clifton Park's representatives on the county board, has publicly spoken out against using private water.

Daly has said her research shows that privatizing water in Clifton Park would be detrimental for the town.

The Saratoga County water plan would draw water from the Hudson River in Moreau State Park and pipe it along the Northway to the southern end of the county. The plan will cost $67 million and depends on a $4.8 million loan from the county general fund. Saratoga County taxpayers will be paying for the system regardless of whether their municipality buys water from the Saratoga County Water Authority.

Clifton Park Supervisor Philip Barrett said his town makes up 20 percent of the county, so a large chunk of that money will be coming from Clifton Park residents.

Charlton town Supervisor Alan Grattidge, also on the Saratoga County Board of Supervisors, supports the county water plan even though Charlton has no plans to hook up to it.

"This is a much better plan than the private plan the town of Clifton Park was floating. This is going to be county-wide water, which will take care of the Northway corridor of the county for the next hundred years."

Grattidge said water should be under public control.

"Water is a utility that is beneficial to be under the control of the public sector. It is one of these essential services you aren't trying to make money with it you are trying to provide a service to your people," Grattidge said. "A private company is trying to make the most out of the product and make a profit. You might get savings on the initial investment but they are there for the purpose of making profit, while we are there to produce and essential service at the lowest possible price."

Barrett said he isn't against using a private company like Veolia Water North America to get water to Clifton Park from Schenectady.

"Everything comes down to bucks," Barrett said. "However the water authority can get the best product at the best price is the right decision."

Ripples

Forest campus in Malta. The state and AMD in March signed an agreement that would see a $3.2 billion plant constructed between 2007 and 2009, but the company hasn't signed a water purchase contract.

A few dissenting voices have come out against a countywide water system.

In Clifton Park, town Supervisor and Saratoga County Board of Supervisors chairman Philip Barrett has entertained the possibility of having a private company supply water to Clifton Park.

"Basically, Veolia Water North America approached the Clifton Park Water Authority a few months ago and said, 'We know you are looking at options, and we'd like to make you an offer,'" said Barrett.

The water company offered to supply water from the City of Schenectady, where the company already runs its treatment plant. No deal has been put on the table, Barrett said, but it is one of several options the town is looking at.

"An unexpected option came about — something that is promising enough that the authority decided to take a serious look at it," he said. "The only thing that I've ever said to the county water authority is I want the best product at the best price."

Since The Clifton Park Water Authority heard Veolia's presentation, fellow Saratoga County Supervisor Anita Daly has announced that she backs the county's water plan and does not support her town's efforts to purchase water from Veolia.

Daly said research led her to believe that privatizing a water supply would be detrimental for Clifton Park in the long run and mentioned several activist groups that are against putting public water systems in the hands of private companies as she made her case against Veolia. Private water companies, she said, have a history of safety and quality concerns.

"This is a health and safety issue," said Daly.

Barrett said some people are simply afraid of privatization.

"We aren't afraid of privatization nor should anyone be," said Barrett. "We live in an area so dominated by government that folks get scared with privatization. If the price is right, if they can do it, if it ends up being best product at best price and we can structure an agreement that would help Clifton Park, we aren't going to shy away because it's a private company. If the price is good, then there is certainly no reason to fear privatization"

Daly's health and safety concerns are unfounded, Barrett said.

"We have plenty of control over the water system. The City of Schenectady is supplying the water, and it comes from the same source they have been using for God knows how many years. It is a proven water source, which is regulated by Schenectady and other agencies," said Barrett. "The City of Schenectady would make sure the water they are providing is good, and Veolia's only involvement would be the management of the pipeline."

Barrett also said that with a publicly funded water system, the taxpayers foot the bill whether it fails or prospers.

"If anything goes wrong, the county has to go in and make up any shortfalls," he said.

But privatization of the water supply hasn't been so cut-and-dried for some municipalities.

The village of Coxsackie, in Greene County, is a former customer of a private water company. A few years ago, village officials opted to turn over management of their water filtration and treatment facilities to U.S. Filter, now Veolia Water North America, the country's largest water provider, located in Houston, Texas.

"It was purely a matter of cost," said then-Mayor Diane Ringwald. "They said they could do it cheaper than if we did it ourselves."

Ringwald said she spoke with nearby village of Athens officials, who have had Veolia Water North America operate their water and wastewater treatment plants since 1992.

"In a rural community like Greene County, you talk to your neighbors," said Ringwald. "Athens has had a wonderful experience with a private water company, so we decided to check it out."

Problems with turbidity and overall water quality led the village to annul its five-year contract with Veolia in the second year. Ringwald said the annulment wasn't necessarily a result of Veolia's poor management but a lack of familiarity with the village's water system. Ringwald lost a reelection bid in March due in part, she said, to fallout from the water issue and said that Coxsackie's water system was bordering on antique at the time, with wooden pipes found in some sections of the system.

The village now has a sole, village-employed water operator with a working knowledge of the system's history and quirks.

Ringwald said this brings up another issue: Do you want a little government in your private water?

In Coxsackie's case, water system workers were employed and paid by the village and the village was reimbursed by Veolia. This was a unique situation, Ringwald said, because most municipalities with a private water system, the operators and employees are employed by the water company.

"It was hard to get anything done," she said. "It was very hard to work when our operator had ideas and their management had ideas."

The situation also complicated things when Coxsackie terminated their contract with Veolia, Ringwald said. According to the former mayor, Veolia did not reimburse the village for the last six months of payroll expended to the water system. The Village of Coxsackie is now suing the water company for cause and breach of contract to the tune of $149,000.

Veolia officials would not comment on the litigation, but, like Ringwald, pointed to accomplishments made in nearby Athens as an example of their good work. When 1993 sampling revealed that the water plant had exceeded U.S. Environmental Protection Agency regulated levels for lead in Athens, they said in a written statement, Veolia developed and implemented a program that successfully lowered the lead content. The firm also engineered an automation/alarming system for all the major processes at the treatment facilities, which reduced power and chemical consumption and prevents power outages that would cause extended interruptions of service.

Barrett said he isn't concerned that Veolia, an international company, has a lawsuit against it.

"I don't know of any large companies that don't have lawsuits against them," said Barrett.

He gave as an example his own municipality.

"We always have a lawsuit against us, whether it's from someone tripping or what have you," said Barrett. "If we're only going to do business with large entities that don't have a lawsuit against them, I'm not sure we're going to be able to do business with anyone."
