Police find unconscious man, heroin in Wal-Mart bathroom

Police responded to a call about an unconscious man inside the bathroom at Wal-Mart in Glenmont and arrested the man for heroin possession while his wife was shopping in the store.

Alexie Ramos, 36, of Schenectady, was arrested by Bethlehem police on Saturday, April 26, at the Towne Center Plaza in Glenmont for seventh-degree criminal possession of a controlled substance and criminal possession of a hypodermic needle — both misdemeanors.

Police said they received a call of "an unconscious male in the rear bathroom of the store," at Wal-Mart and discovered Ramos there "pale and sweating."

A hypodermic needle was discovered on the toilet dispenser, according to the arrest report, as well as two small plastic bags and a Mountain Dew can with "a cooked substance" on top of the can.

The substance was tested and later determined to be heroin, according to police.

"I went to the bathroom and shot up some heroin," Ramos allegedly told police once conscious. "I have a drug problem."

The arrest report stated that Ramos' wife was shopping in the store at the time of the incident when police found her and informed her of the situation.

Ramos was transported to Albany Medical Center Hospital by the Delmar Ambulance Squad to be treated.

Other arrests

• Kyle M. Nardolillo, 20, of Glenmont, was arrested Monday, April 28, on an arrest warrant for fifth-degree criminal possession of stolen property.

Bethlehem police said Nardolillo was stopped during a routine patrol when he was seen driving north on Route 9W with a temporary 10-day inspection certificate.

A check of Nardolillo's name revealed that he was wanted on an active warrant out of the town of New Scotland dated Oct. 3, 2007, according to the arrest report.

Police said he was taken into custody without incident and that he wasn't issued a citation because his 10-day inspection was valid. His vehicle was towed after he was booked and processed at the Bethlehem Police Department, according to the report.

• Christian F. Damberg, 23, of Watervliet, was arrested by Bethlehem police on Saturday, April 26, for DWI and aggravated DWI, operating a motor vehicle with a blood-alcohol content of 0.18 percent or greater.

He was also ticketed with speeding.

Police say Damberg was spotted speeding on Feura Bush Road and eventually pulled over on Timber Lane in Glenmont. Police smelled alcohol when interviewing Damberg, and he displayed signs of intoxication, according to the arrest report.

When asked if he had been drinking, Damberg told police "he drank one beer at his apartment," the report states, and he failed three field-sobriety tests before testing positive for alcohol.

Damberg was transported to the Bethlehem Police Department, where he voluntarily consented to a chemical test and was eventually driven home by Capitaland Taxi, according to police.

His vehicle was towed and he was scheduled to appear in Bethlehem Town Court on May 6.

Police warn residents about black bear sightings

Animal Control officials say keep garbage and birdseed in check

By JARRETT CARROLL
Spotlight Newspapers

That birdseed hanging outside your home may attract more than a cardinal or robin, and that goes for your trash cans, too; as hungry black bears have become increasingly active and are looking for an easy lunch in the area.

The Bethlehem Police Department has issued a warning to area homeowners: Keep your garbage contained and cut back on the birdseed.

Animal Control officers have recently received reports of bear sightings in the southern end of town, according to police.

"Proper storage of garbage and the removal of bird feeders during periods when bears are active are the two most important steps you can take to drastically reduce nuisance bear problems in your area," stated the release. "Birdseed and garbage are favorite foods for bears. In many cases, bears will choose them instead of natural food sources."

The following are steps that can be taken to prevent bear problems in addition to maintaining safety:

- Store garbage in cans or Dumpsters and keep them in a secure place like in the garage.
- Put garbage out only on the morning of pickup. Burning and composting of garbage may attract bears.
- Feed birds only from Dec.

1 until March 1. During the rest of the year, you may be attracting more bears than birds.

Police cautioned people to remain calm if a bear is spotted, and that "bears are more likely to be afraid of you than you are of them." Never approach, surround, or attempt to touch a bear.

Always leave an escape route for the bear and back away and do not run from the wild animal. If the bear keeps coming back or will not leave, police said, make loud noises such as yelling, clapping or blowing your car horns. "The Adirondack region in the Northern Bear Range is home to the largest black bear population in New York state, between 4,000 to 5,000 bears," according to the state Department of Environmental Conservation. "The Catskill region in the Southern Bear Range contains the second largest population, between 1,500 to 2,000."

The Capital District lies directly between the Catskills and Adirondack regions.

Magic hits the stage at St. Thomas

Students display talents in musical 'Beauty and the Beast'

If you see a fair maiden, a handsome prince, or a hideous beast along Adams Place in Delmar, don't be alarmed. In fact, pull into the St. Thomas the Apostle School parking lot and follow the costumed characters inside for a springtime show.

"La Belle et la Bête," or as it's called here in Bethlehem, "Beauty and the Beast" will be taking center stage at the St. Thomas School on May 9 and 10, and tickets are going fast.

The show starts at 7 p.m. both nights and the St. Thomas school is asking the community to "be our guest."

"They started out with nothing," said the play's director Beth McCarthy, "and ended with something magical."

The classic fairy tale is being put together as a community event with many parents, students and faculty members volunteering time rehearsing, directing, creating stage props and costumes, selling tickets, and, of course, acting in the show itself.

"Everyone has been working so hard on this, and everyone is so excited. It's going to be a great show," said Janet Griffin, of the school's parent committee. "Brenda Dwyer is the art teacher for St. Thomas and is the set and costume designer for the play, but a number of students and dedicated parents helped with painting the backdrops, as well as working on the sets ... especially during spring break."

Two 13-year-old St. Thomas students are playing the leads.

Haley McHugh is playing Belle, the youngest daughter of a merchant who is the love interest of the prince-turned-beast. She breaks the spell put on the beast, turning him back into a prince.

Nick Canovas is playing the prince who is put under a spell and transformed into the beast.

"I love acting," they both said in unison when asked why they wanted to be in the play.

"I've been in other plays before," Canovas said. "It can be scary being a lead, but it's good."

This is McHugh's first lead and first substantial acting role.

"I've only done chorus parts before," she said.

Their dynamic on the stage plays out well. They both said even though they may be a bit nervous, they feel comfortable on the stage, which is apparent to the viewers.

Canovas is keeping the acting tradition alive and well in his family. His older brother, Alex Canovas, is the play's musical director, and as a senior at Bethlehem High School, he recently starred in that school's production of "The Boy Friend."

Other Bethlehem Central students involved in the play include eighth-grader Colleen Bernstein, who is the show's pianist, and several other high school orchestra students will also be on hand.

Griffin described Bernstein as "a lovely, compassionate and graceful young lady," and said it is her third play behind the piano for the school.

Tickets are $5 for adults and $3 for students, and premium seating is available for $15. Reservations are suggested, as tickets are expected to sell out. They can be obtained by calling 475-0201. A limited number of tickets will also be available at the day of the show.

The tulips are up, Mother's Day is here, and the tulip queen finalists are in, which means only one thing: It's time for the 60th annual Tulip Festival in Albany's Washington Park.

This year, out of the five finalists vying to be crowned queen, two area women are competing against three Albany natives.

Both Jessica Engel, 21, of Voorheesville, and Amy LaGrange, 21, of Feura Bush are hoping to become Albany's Tulip Queen on Saturday, May 10, after being selected as finalists in the annual Albany tradition.

Jessica Engel

Amy LaGrange

The nominees for Tulip Queen attend a series of interviews each year, and the finalists were announced in early May. The queen is crowned in a coronation ceremony on the Saturday of the Tulip Festival, which runs May 9 to 11.

Each year's winner receives a $5,000 scholarship, and each court member receives a $1,500 scholarship. All of the finalists will also receive a gift basket of prizes, as well as flowers from Clas Florist, jewelry from Harold Finkle Jewelers and tickets to travel from Southwest Airlines.

There is also a Mother of the Year contest, and the winner will get a pair of tickets from Southwest.

The spring festival touts over 200,000-tulip bulbs that blossom just in time for Mother's Day each year. Some of the historic annual events that take place during the three-day festival include the street scrubbing on State Street, the Tulip Queen Coronation, Tulip Queen and Court Luncheon and the Royal Tulip Ball.

Some of the musical acts scheduled for Saturday include: The Spin Doctors; The Rustic Overtones; The Black and White Years; 28N; Rick Rourke & Lost Waes; Byrds of Prey; and Ten Year Vamp.

For information, go to www.albanyevents.org.

The Tulip Queen serves as an Albany ambassador for a year, and she and her court spend the year involved in various volunteer projects, including Mayor Jerry Jennings' Literacy Campaign, which promotes the value of reading to children. Each queen and court develop initiatives, focusing on education and community, to further their goals, and they attend numerous events throughout the year.

Engel is a senior at SUNY Plattsburgh, majoring in communications with a concentration in broadcast journalism. She said her hobbies include various sports, ranging from volleyball to basketball and added that she loves to golf with her dad.

She has taught Sunday school and currently volunteers for many organizations, such as Ronald McDonald House, food drives, Relay for Life and the Capital City Rescue Mission.

She says her career goal is to become an anchor for entertainment news.

LaGrange attends the College of Saint Rose with a dual major in childhood and

Don't needle me over lack of sewing skills

By ROBIN SHRAGER SUITOR
news@spotlightnews.com

Sewing, like bowling, is something I'm unable to master. I grasp the underlying concepts of both, but I can't implement the techniques.

When I was younger my Aunt Selma told me, "You have to know how to sew."

I only saw her once or twice a year, usually at big family gatherings, so there wasn't much time for hands-on teaching.

My mother wasn't adamant about me becoming a sewer. In our house, my mom hemmed pants, darned socks, secured buttons and mended split seams.

And so, I've stumbled through the years, with limited use of needle and thread.

My sister gave me a small sewing kit when I was heading off to college. It's a rectangular plastic box with a red bottom and a clear top that snaps shut. It came with about a dozen small spools of thread in a variety of colors, a plastic yellow thimble, a couple of needles and a tool for threading needles.

Twenty-five years later I still have the kit, and most of the colored thread. The spools of black and white are nearly depleted. I mostly use my limited sewing ability to reattach or secure buttons; occasionally I close up a hole.

When I was pregnant with my daughter, Aunt Selma tried anew to convince me that sewing was an essential life skill. I remained dubious. Yes, it's handy to know how to sew, and certainly more economical than hiring a tailor, but I believed then, as I do now, that it is possible to have success in life without being a skilled sewer.

Besides, as I prepared to become a mom, I felt that my energies would be better spent improving my ability to tie shoelaces. As it turned out, my husband was the one who taught our daughter Rachel how to tie laces and she quickly became more skilled than I, even though I had 30 more years of practice.

Rachel has also been able to pick up the art of sewing. Not from me, of course, but from the genetics on her dad's side of the family. Well, not only from genetics, but also from a talented and patient Aunt Carol, my husband's sister.

All of my husband's sisters sew. And they do much more than repairs. They actually create things like clothing, curtains and quilts.

I, on the other hand, once used masking tape to handle a skirt hem that had come loose. I'm also a fan of safety pins.

I did once complete a real sewing project. It was back in junior high school. I made a reversible wrap-around skirt and matching vest in home economics class. One side was solid blue and the other side was a floral print with a red background and tiny blue and yellow flowers. I received an award for creating that outfit. It wasn't because it was a complex pattern, but rather because I rose to the occasion and stayed after school until I finished the project.

A few years ago my sister-in-law gave Rachel a sewing machine. When I saw the machine I had flashbacks to that reversible skirt. I recognized the bobbin thingy and the pedal and the spot for your spool of thread, but had no memory of how to make it work. I was so glad Aunt Carol showed Rachel how to use it.

Carol can probably sew in her sleep. She has been my lifesaver for Rachel's last-minute dance costume alterations. She makes it look so easy. Not only that, she says she enjoys doing it!

Maybe if I had listened to Aunt Selma and made some effort I could have acquired some sewing talent. Well, maybe not actual talent, but perhaps at least the confidence to hem pants.

Just recently I was cleaning out a closet and I came across what I believed was a letter from my aunt. The postmark on the envelope was 15 years old.

One item in the envelope was two paper towels sewn together in the shape of a miniature pair of pants. The other item was a sheet of paper with step-by-step instructions on how to make a hem.

You've got to admire this woman's tenacity in trying to help me learn to sew.

Many years ago she tried to teach me to knit. She gave me a set of knitting needles and even demonstrated left-handed, although she is a righty. I could knit a stitch or two in her presence, but once I was left alone I couldn't get the two needles out of their own way.

My daughter, on the other hand, is able to knit. She quickly picks up what her Aunt Carol shows her. She graduated from the thick beginner needles, to a set of thin "grown-up" needles, all from her aunt.

Rachel tells me that knitting is complicated, but it is also fun. She once knit herself a small purse. Some day she will be the aunt or grandmother that sends hand-knit-treasures as gifts.

Aunt Selma knitted several baby sweaters and matching bonnets for Rachel. The sweaters had snaps down the front for easy closure, but also featured decorative buttons over those snaps. The first and smallest sweater to arrive was all white. The next was white with pink trim, and a third was white with purple and green stripes.

Since I don't knit, I'll be saving these items to pass on as family heirlooms.

A few months ago I spent a few minutes sewing. I was helping my mom with some laundry and noticed a small hole near the waistband of a pair of black pants. I decided that I would handle the repair.

But alas, I could not find my sewing kit. Not a problem: I grabbed a needle and a spool of black thread out of a large sewing tin we acquired long ago from my mother-in-law.

I know enough to double up the thread for extra strength. What I don't know and can't seem to judge is approximately how much thread I'll need. I always take an extra long piece. I do this so I will not run short and be faced with threading the needle again.

Instead, I have to keep pulling a ridiculously long piece of thread through the fabric while trying to produce tiny, evenly-spaced diagonal stitches.

My mom grew impatient watching me sew her pants. She shook her head as I struggled threading the needle, then she looked perplexed when I began maneuvering the super long trail of thread. Still, when she examined the finished product she said, "Not bad."

But when we discovered another hole she said, "Let me do it." I threaded the needle, cutting off the thread at the spot she suggested, then I handed it over and she easily mended the pants.

Perhaps I was shortsighted when I ignored Aunt Selma's advice about sewing. Just last week I was having some repairs done to my receding gum line. The periodontist was putting in some stitches and I felt the thread brush my chin. And I thought to myself: Surgeons have to know how to sew! Had I listened to my aunt I might have become a doctor.

I may not have a medical degree, but I do have enough sewing skills to survive. More importantly, I have woven a network of expert sewers to get me through life's more difficult needle and thread moments.

Residents get together for development talk

New Scotlanders hold public forum on moratoria

By NAOMI MILLER

The group New Scotlanders for Sound Economic Development, or NS4SED, held a community meeting on Sunday, April 27, to inform citizens about the meaning of a moratorium and to encourage people to voice their opinions.

The public meeting was at the Osterhout Community Center in New Salem. NS4SED had three guest speakers with varying backgrounds in development.

"We are not an anti-development group," Dean Sommer, an attorney at the Young and Sommer law firm, and NS4SED's master of ceremonies for the night, said. "Our focus has simply been to take a step back. Let's look at the options to see what development we want and what we don't want."

proposal by the Syracuse-based Sphere Development Group to build on the land that was once the Bender melon farm, off of routes 85 and 85A. Sphere's goal is to construct a regional commercial shopping mall that would take up 750,000 square feet. The company has not closed on the property yet.

NS4SED is aiming for a 6-month moratorium on "big-box development, while many New Scotlanders at the meeting were pulling for a full year. NS4SED is quick to mention, however, that after the 6 month period is over, the Town Board can renew the moratorium for an additional 6 months, if needed. According to NS4SED, during the moratorium, the Town Board will review only the town's commercial zones and will not redo all of its zoning laws. It would also appoint community members to serve on a committee that would have a budget, hire a consultant, hold public hearings and give their recommendations to the Town Board to determine what kind of development is right for New Scotland.

Jeff Baker was one of the speakers. An environmental lawyer from the Young and Sommer law firm, he spoke about what a moratorium will mean for the community.

"A moratorium preserves the status quo while the town considers changes to the zoning code," he said. "A one-year moratorium would be better," Baker said. "Six months will require people to work hard, but it's fine."

Baker said that he does not think that the Sphere Development Group has a lot of experience. "They seem to be locked into a model that they're comfortable with, but that model doesn't fit the needs of this town."

Another speaker at the meeting was Nan Stolzenburg, a community planner with Community Planning and Environmental Associates in Berne. Although not a resident of New Scotland or a member of NS4SED, she was invited to speak based on her professional experience.

"The community needs to work together," she said. Stolzenburg said the criteria for New Scotland's current zoning laws is that they be adequate, harmonious, appropriate and compatible.

Stolzenburg said the criteria are too vague. She also gave comprehensive planning tools for the Town Board and the town's Planning Committee to follow, such as having sign regulations, such as design, height and size; and street standards such as the size of roads and the type of pavement.

"Whatever you want, put into your zoning laws," she said.

Town Supervisor Thomas Dolin agrees. "The presentations convinced me even more that I am in favor of a moratorium," he said. Dolin said that he went to the meeting because he was interested in hearing what the speakers had to say. "I thought it was very well done, informative and enlightening," he said.

The other four members of the board were in attendance also, but did not respond to requests for comment before press time.

"We're all in this together," Sommersaid. He said that he thinks the night was a success. "I think anytime you get an opportunity to share reliable information to your fellow community members, it's very important. Public participation is vital."

A public hearing regarding a possible moratorium is scheduled for May 7 at the Voorheesville High School.

Matters of Opinion in the Spotlight

'Give big'

That's what Judy DeMarco has been saying for years.

For the past 13 years, the Feura Bush native and Bethlehem letter carrier has spent a day slogging canned goods and other non-perishable items from doorstep to doorstep, and eventually to her mail truck. DeMarco is a slight woman, young, and some years, she said, she'd have to drag donations to the end of a person's driveway and then come around with the truck because the offerings were so generous.

Not so in recent years, though. Postal carrier Jeremy Curtin said he has heard some people say that they have only an item or two to donate. The National Association of Letter Carriers' annual program, "Stamp Out Hunger," comes at a time when many people are not in the mindset of giving. The program collects food for local food banks and pantries at a time when their inventories are low.

But many families' inventories are low, too. With fuel and energy prices soaring — and those of foodstuffs rising right alongside them — it's difficult to part with something that we work so hard for and that our families need so much.

It's easy to dismiss others in need when we are wanting ourselves, and easy enough to fall into the mindset of leaving others to deal with their hardships as you may have dealt with your own. Chance favors the prepared, you may think, and if you "work and acquire," as Ralph Waldo Emerson put it, you can tame chance and avoid hardship.

Unfortunately, however, the distinction between "have" and "have-not" is only one well-placed misfortune away.

Assistant director of Food Pantries of the Capital District Matt Sundheim says there is a misconception that people who take advantage of these donations are destitute or homeless. That's not the case, he says. Many times they are young families with children who need a meal.

On Saturday, May 10, postal carriers across the region will pick up specially marked bags of non-perishable items from the houses they deliver mail to every day.

Make your house one of them.

If you're still of the mind that people should pull themselves up by their own bootstraps, bear in mind that some of those people are children who've yet to grow into those boots.

And to the mothers of those children, and mothers everywhere, enjoy Mother's Day, this Sunday, May 11.

You deserve it.

The writer is a native of Menands and 2005 graduate of Shaker High School.

It was spring break of my freshman year at Providence College. I went home, sad that I was not going somewhere warm, but happy knowing that I would have a nice relaxing week to spend time with my friends and family — no worries, no homework, no stress.

At least that's what I thought.

I was scheduled for a physical with my new doctor as I was transitioning from the care of my pediatrician, and since I was now an 18-year-old, I told my mom she didn't have to come with me.

I went to the doctor, not thinking anything of it because I knew I was a healthy teenager. I have always been an active person, one my parents would affectionately call a "gym rat." Exercise was a regular part of my daily routine — I played soccer and ran track in high school, am a regular at the gym, and even now am still involved in intramural Ultimate Frisbee, Wiffle ball and volleyball at college. I didn't think the doctor was going to tell me anything except what I normally heard: You look good; everything sounds good; have a good school year. But, boy, was I in for a ride.

March 6, 2006. The day I strolled into the doctor's office with no worries, but left with a laundry list of them. My life as I knew it was going to be forever changed. My doctor heard a slight heart murmur and noticed that my resting heart rate seemed slower than usual. Forty beats per minute. Normal heart rates are between 60 and 90 beats per minute, but I thought mine was low because I was just active, healthy and in pretty good shape. Luckily, my doctor and I had varying opinions. Later that afternoon, she sent me in for a baseline echocardiogram. I thought to myself, echocardi-what? I had never heard of such a thing, but I did what I was told. As I was leaving my appointment, I called my parents to let them know how everything went; needless to say, their heads immediately started spinning.

The echocardiogram was fine, the procedure was simple, and this time, my mom insisted that she come with me. As I lay there, I could see her out of the corner of my eye. With her nurse background, I couldn't fathom what she was thinking, probably analyzing the computer screen, wondering what she would see. I was glad to have her there for support, and I was told that I would hear back from the doctor in a few days. Three days later, Thursday, I called my mom as she was driving home on the Thruway to repeat the news the doctor had given me on the phone. I had a cardiologist appointment at 1 p.m. on Friday, and it was imperative that I be seen before I went back to school. Now, I started to freak out. I thought that after the echocardiogram they were going to tell me I was fine. My thoughts continued to be that I was 18 and living the college life; nothing could be wrong. I am lucky my mom didn't drive off the road when I told her. I could hear that she was in panic mom mode.

I showed up at the doctor's the next day, not knowing what to expect. Sweaty palms, clenched fists, shaking legs, almost tears down my face. I was scared; I had no idea what they were going to tell me in this "emergency visit."

The wait for the doctor felt like 10 years had gone by, but what was even worse were the words that came out of his mouth. I sat in disbelief and shock as I was told, "Erin, you have third-degree heart block, your heart is not getting the signal to beat and your pulse is 40..." The rest was a blur of words. I froze. My mom was speechless. I had no idea what third-degree heart block was, let alone what would come afterwards.

I wanted to scream, I wanted to cry, I wanted to run out, I wanted to be hugged and never let go. I looked at my mom and immediately lost it.

The doctor continued to explain what was going on and my condition. I don't even think I was paying attention. Next thing I knew, there were people in and out of the room, I had an EKG, another echocardiogram, and blood work. I was told that I needed to take a stress test right then, in my sweater and UGG boots, not the most ideal running attire. Our heads were spinning! I heard words like "halter monitor today, appointment with an electrophysiologist and possible pacemaker." What? I felt like I was trapped, caught in a nightmare, and had no idea who would save me or how I would get out. A million things were running through my mind.

Would I be OK? Could I go back to school? What is going on?

I was reassured by my doctors that after a weekend of a halter monitor I could go back to school. I didn't want to. I didn't want to leave the safe haven of home where my parents would take care of me. I know they didn't want me to leave either, especially not knowing what would happen while we were apart. Upon leaving, I was told to find out which friends at school knew CPR and that if I ever felt weak or passed out, I should call 911. Sounds really reassuring! Reluctant as I was, I knew I had to go back to school. I thought maybe by leaving then the doctors and my problem would leave too. If only that had been the case.

Three weeks later, I was home for Easter, and of course, another doctor's appointment. My pulse was 38 and I was told I needed a pacemaker. A what? Yes, a pacemaker, what I always thought old people had. It couldn't be true. Back to school I went, for the rest of the year. I don't know how my parents let me go, but I finished my year with relatively no problems.

When I returned home for the summer, I got a second opinion about my condition. It was very clear that at this point I truly did need a pacer. My current heart rate of 38 was well below the cutoff point where implanting a pacemaker was indicated. Wow. I was shocked. I wasn't 80, I was 18!

On July 10, 2006, I had a pacemaker implanted at Brigham & Women's Hospital in Boston. I walked into the hospital, surprisingly calm. I was lying in a white gown on an uncomfortable bed, my family staring at me. It was the strangest feeling. They just looked at me, and didn't say anything. My nurse asked me if I was ready, and at that point, I could not have been more ready. As I was wheeled away, I had my eyes straight forward. I knew if I looked back, I would cry as my family was watching me, hoping that I would come back safe and with no problems.

The surgery went great. A grueling three hours, but everything went perfectly. In my case, my routine physical saved my life.

I agreed to share my story at the American Heart Association's Go Red for Women Luncheon on Wednesday, May 21, at the Desmond because I've benefited directly from the AHA's research, and I hope others have the same chance I do. I hope you will consider supporting the AHA at this luncheon, which will offer free health screenings by Albany Medical Center, educational sessions, a silent auction and delicious heart-healthy food. Call the AHA at 869-4053 for information or to purchase tickets.

Today, I live a fantastic, normal, happy and healthy life, just the same as any other 20-year-old college student. The only difference is, now I have a pacemaker. Who would have thought? Surely not me.

Walk for women

Editor, Spotlight Newspapers:

On Saturday, May 10, The Bethlehem Community Church will be hosting the Sisters In Service National Walk 4 Moms at the Bethlehem Town Park on Elm Avenue. The walk begins at 10 a.m. with a full day of activities. Many community businesses have graciously donated raffle items, prizes and gifts available for purchase.

The festivities begin with a one-mile competitive race, a fitness trail walk, and great mother's day gifts. Runners do not need sponsors to participate in the one mile run. We will have fun for the whole family: a bouncy bounce for the kids and a DJ spinning the latest hits. Events will be going on until 2 p.m. at the large pavilion.

Sisters in Service is an international organization supporting suffering women across the globe. Proceeds from the day's activities will directly benefit women with their basic needs and provide a better future. More information about this organization can be found by visiting their Web site, www.sistersinservice.org.

The day's activities would not be possible without the help of many local businesses and individuals. The committee has been working hard and is looking forward to a fun filled day for the whole community.

Moratorium right for New Scotland

Editor, Spotlight Newspapers:

Sphere Development wants to site the fourth-largest commercial center in the Capital Region on rural greenfields in the Town of New Scotland.

On May 7, the New Scotland Town Board will hold a public hearing on a proposed moratorium that would help ensure any commercial development happens equitably, sustainably, and with the public's interest at heart—not Sphere's idea.

Big-box development thrives on communities with a disengaged, apathetic citizenry who do not understand the law. The residents of New Scotland are anything but. We understand our constitutionally-sanctioned right to control what happens in our town. We have responded to Sphere's ideas with an incredibly fair request: let's hang on a minute, decide what we want our town to be, and then legislate it.

We also understand our constitutionally-sanctioned right in the event our modest request is disregarded by the town.

The public isn't alone in its support of a moratorium. The Albany County Planning Board advised a one-year moratorium be passed in order to assess impacts on "roadways, stormwater management and adjacent municipalities."

Even Sphere development agreed on Wednesday, April 30, that a moratorium might be right for the Town of New Scotland. Their spokesperson conceded this on record.

This is dangerous ground the town is treading. To ignore the voice of the public and refute the advice of a county legislative body is grounds for an unfavorable response.

We're already talking road widening; it's not long until we're talking eminent domain.

My wife and I are examples of the people New Scotland try and retain if it wants the sustainable future the comprehensive plan promotes: young, hard-working, family-minded. Instead of working with us, they want to drive us away through irresponsible land use and questionable town governance.

Talk about a slap in the face.

Race founder says thank you

Editor, Spotlight Newspapers:

On behalf of the Moshier Family I would like to extend my deepest appreciation for everyone who made the second Captain Timothy J. Moshier Memorial 5K Run/Walk a success.

On Saturday, April 26, our family was overwhelmed by the 650 people who came out to participate in the Tot Trot, Kid's Race and 5K. As we heard Mary Abba Gleason sing the national anthem we were reminded of all of our soldiers and Marines who are serving overseas and at home to protect our freedom. Tim Moshier was a man who believed in family and giving back to the community and we are proud to continue that tradition.

We would like to give a special thank you to our volunteers who worked tirelessly, as well as our corporate sponsors who contributed to our event.

This year's corporate sponsors were the Town of Bethlehem, Bright Horizons, Re/Max Premier, Simon Business School, Artforms, Capital News 9, H & B Bridge Constructors, Blue Diamond, Scott's Hallmark, Lauren LaBerge (Massage Therapist) Joe's Barber Shop, Erin Boyle (Graphic Designer), McKenna Long and Aldridge LLP, Sheehy-Palmer Veterans Memorial Association, Contemporary Designs, Hannaford, Price Chopper, Bethlehem Police Benevolent Association, Bethlehem Memorial Veterans Association, Fort Orange Post No.30, Blanchard Post No.140, Farm Family Casualty Insurance Company, Cohoes Police Department, Adirondack Sports and Fitness, Our Towne-Bethlehem, Larabar and Air-Craft DJ Services.

We would also like to thank the Jonesville Store for providing food for the print sale and Kevin Thompson and his band for providing entertainment.

This year the event raised more than $10,000 which will be divided between three designated charities: The Fisher House, The Gold Star Family Support Center at Fort Hood and the Captain Timothy J. Moshier Memorial Scholarship at Bethlehem High School.

The newly created Captain

Timothy J. Moshier Memorial Foundation was started this spring to aid the development of Tim's race, which will happen for years to come. Please mark your calendars for April 2009 when our foundation will host the next race.

Thank you for your commitment to remembering Tim and his love for this community.

Softball team's success due to many factors

Editor, Spotlight Newspapers:
I would like to thank the Spotlight for its article about BCHS girls' varsity softball. The program is beginning to get the recognition it deserves and your article will further support their success.
Your story focused on the softball program being led by a very young group of softball players. Undeniably, there is a youth movement throughout every level of the program and these players are dedicated, year-around athletes who are committed to the game of softball. However, after having read your story and a similar one in the Times Union, I wanted to point out a few things that seem missing from most of the excellent coverage this team has received.

First and foremost, the success is due to more than just a youth movement. Our coaching staff is the strongest it has ever been. Coach Karen Gentile and Assistant Coach Carrie Getz have worked very hard to prepare this year's varsity team, and they have established a very challenging schedule with nearly twice as many games as played in recent years, including an invitation to the most prestigious scholastic softball tournament in the state. Their leadership, along with the efforts of our JV, freshman and modified coaches has elevated interest and success at every program level.

Second and perhaps most important, I want to focus on this year's varsity team.

While our youth movement is definitely playing a huge part in the program, much of the success is also due to the commitment of the upperclassmen and the team captains who have excelled both on the field and in the dugout as leaders and teammates. Senior captains Jen Frangella and Amanda Pettit have been outstanding and the camaraderie that exists with this year's team is clear evidence of their strong leadership. The other upperclassmen, including senior Katie McNally and juniors Jess Carroll, Erica Danz and Amy Halvorsen, have all been outstanding and each girl has made key contributions to the success of this team. They're about teamwork and good only gets better.

Finally, this is a unique time in Bethlehem area softball. The Tomboys Recreation and Travel League program led by Steve Piccolino and his board have worked tirelessly to build a feeder program and a bridge between the recreation league and the high school teams. The cooperative relationship that has been fostered by Gentile, Piccolino, and Jim Cerone has created an opportunity like never before to develop and enhance the level of play at all levels.

Common support of softball clinics, shared gym and field space, and use of equipment has created numerous opportunities for the growth of girls' softball in Bethlehem, and with their continued commitment and leadership the future outlook for softball will only get brighter.

As a parent of one of the younger players, I want to say thanks to all of you on the behalf of my daughter and the many members of the youth movement who have benefited so much from the efforts of those involved in the BCHS softball program. It has been great to see the coverage this team is receiving and it has been even better to see their success play out on the field.

Best wishes for continued success to all involved in this exciting season.

Go BCHS softball!

Girl Scouts hold book drive

Junior Girl Scout Troop 1564 is holding a gently used book drive in various locations around Bethlehem. The troop is working on a literacy project for their Bronze Award. They are supporting the Reach Out And Read program and are looking for books for children in grades 1 to 6. Look for decorated boxes in place through Friday, May 16 at various locations including: The Perfect Blend, Town Hall, Hamagrael Elementary School, Holy Names, The Delmar Presbyterian Church, Barbara's School of the Dance and the Delmar Market Place.

Walk will benefit women

Sisters in Service National Walk 4 Moms is coming to Delmar because one local organizer believes no mom should stand alone.

On Saturday, May 10, from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m., a charity event will be held at the Elm Avenue Park in Delmar to benefit SIS. It is being sponsored by several local businesses. The Walk 4 Moms day will include a walk on the fitness trail; a 1-mile race; food, drinks and gifts for sale; as well as music and an inflatable bounce house for children.

Sisters in Service is a national missionary organization that supports local workers to provide physical necessities, adequate shelter and education for some of the most impoverished women in the world. The aim of the group is help the world's suffering women in places like South Asia, the Middle East and the Sudan.

There is a $5 donation requested for fitness trail walk and a $5 registration fee to compete in the 1-mile race.

The Bethlehem Police Department will also be holding a child seat safety check and town bike rodeo at the park.

"Pretty much what I did is just went around and asked the local businesses to help, and they donated merchandise and finances," said Joy Meyer, one of the event's organizers. "I do the mission's work at our church and was familiar with this organization and want to set up a fundraiser for them."

Although members of the Bethlehem Community Church are helping put the SIS benefit together in town, it is by no means a church event, said Meyer, who expects around 1,000 people on Saturday.

"Everyone can come out; we didn't want to be exclusive at all," said Meyer. "It's really for the whole town. ... The beauty of this is that people don't have to pre-register, they just show up."

There are seven different age categories for the race and walk, which will begin every 15 minutes. Gifts are included with every donation and registration fee, Meyer said.

Some of the statistics that the SIS organization displays on its Web site include: millions of girls have been sold into the sex trade; women perform 62 percent of the world's work hours yet receive only 10 percent of the world's income, own only 1 percent of the world's property, and make up 70 percent of the world's illiterates are women; and 80 percent of all refugees are women and children.

The group is also vocal against the practice of female circumcision, which its calls "barbaric mutilation" and results in thousands of deaths a year.

"This will give people the joy of being able to give to those in much more dire straits than them," Meyer said.

For information call 765-9022 or visit the SIS Web site at www.sistersinservice.org.

Grant to help library enhance family services

Thanks to a New York State Family Literacy Library Grant, Voorheesville Public Library has become part of a network of libraries across the country, and only two libraries locally, with a new plan to enhance our services for families.

Place Libraries and is scheduled to begin in September. Details will appear in the next Bookworm.

"Family Place" focuses on family-centered library service, early childhood information, parent education, emergent literacy, socialization and family support. Being a "Family Place" library challenges us to increase services to babies, toddlers, and the adults who live and work with children, build coalitions with other family service professionals, design welcoming spaces and places for young children and their caregivers and serve as a resource/information center for families.

We are transforming the children's reading area, rearranging for comfort and accessibility. And we will soon have a beautiful new couch and a rocking chair to encourage you to snuggle up with the kids for reading. There are many new age-appropriate toys (see the great dollhouse and farm), as well as new parenting books and DVDs.

The Parent/Child Workshop, a five-week program for toddlers and parents, is the core of Family

Storytimes

Our popular storyhours run May 2 to June 13 on Tuesdays and Fridays at 10:15 a.m.

You may choose whatever day is convenient for you. Storytimes are multi-age level theme-based early literacy programs. Art activities are also a part of the program. No signup is required.

Lapsits for babies

Lapsits provide a special opportunity for parents and caregivers to bring their babies to a library program just for them. Everyone participates in a program that emphasizes music, rhymes and playtime together. Older siblings are welcome, too, but the program is geared for babies (newborn to 24 months). Lapsits are May 15 at 10:15 a.m. and registration is necessary.

Questions for the board candidates: John Sobiecki

Editor's note: The following is profile of Bethlehem Public Library Board of Trustee candidate John Sobiecki. His answers were given on a questionnaire supplied by the library. Next week: The Spotlight will profile Board of Trustee candidate Nancy Smith. The Bethlehem Public Library Board of Trustee vote is May 20 during the public school budget vote at Bethlehem High School.

experience in understanding building envelope and energy systems, how buildings operate and how they are managed. I also understand library design, having been involved in the design of several library projects in my career.

What goals would you set as a library board member?

My goals are to work collaboratively with other trustees toward the best interests of the library, staff and community; to bring my expertise to bear when needed; to listen; to attend meetings and actively participate; and to work with the board to manage the library's budget and finances in a responsible manner.

Views about libraries How does a library best serve its community?

A library serves by acting as a resource to its many constituents, through traditional means such as books and reference materials, or as a place where groups can meet to work together, collaborate on ideas, socialize and learn.

What are the most important issues facing public libraries today?

Libraries now provide access to many different sources of information through a variety of print and electronic media. Libraries need space for storage and use of these resources, as well as different zones where people of all ages can use resources without interfering with others. Lobbying for additional state and federal funding for libraries is another issue.

How are public libraries changing? How can a library board expedite these changes?

Libraries need to continually change as information availability becomes broader. Most importantly, libraries should serve as centers for people to meet, exchange ideas, collaborate, do research, etc. We clearly need to communicate that the library can provide much more than the Internet can.

How have libraries influenced your life?

I have had a life-long love for reading and books and have always used the library as a resource. Having lived in Bethlehem for 17 years, my family has also grown up with the library as a place to obtain material, work on group projects and meet friends.

Views about Bethlehem Public Library What do you like best about Bethlehem Public Library?

This library has always been a place where community members of all ages can enjoy the many resources and programs available to them. The recent renovations make it even more inviting.

What is your vision for the future of this library?

To continue to grow and serve the needs of this community. Clearly, by listening to the thoughts of our constituents, the library can and will continue to be accessible to the entire community. The challenge is to prioritize those resources and programs while managing growth in a fiscally prudent way.

He is actively involved in the community, and has lived in Bethlehem for seventeen years Experience and goals What do you consider your most meaningful career accomplishment?

As an architect, what means the most to me is the reaction of clients on opening day of a new project, in particular, the happy looks of students, parents and staff at the opening of a new school. School projects can take many years to complete. There is great satisfaction in knowing you have delivered what your clients have asked for.

Freihofer's race brings women together

Mother-daughter teams prepare for annual run

By ARIANA COHN
Spotlight Newspapers
cohn@spotlightnews.com

To be in the Fab 5, you must have run all 30 races.

"I've been crossing the line since '79," said Denise Herman, 52, of Saratoga Springs, who will be celebrating her 30th year participating in the annual Freihofer's Run for Women on May 31.

Herman, one of five women—known as the Fab 5—who have run every year since the race's inception, has been pushing her body to make it past the 5-kilometer finish line for decades. In the past five years, an added element has been pushing Herman harder, encouraging her to keep running until the very end. Her daughter.

Herman and her 17-year-old daughter, Brianna, are one of many mother-daughter teams that participate in the race, which takes place in downtown Albany, every year.

In fact, mother-daughter teams have been racing since the beginning of the run itself. According to Georg Regan, event director of the race, in 2005, there were 185 mother-daughter teams; in 2006, there were 150; and in 2007, there were 127. So far this year, there are 69 mother-daughter teams registered as of April 30.

"We've had mother-daughter and sister-sister teams for about 15 years now. They number in the hundreds," said Regan, "It's really turned into quite an event for the family."

Regan continued, "I think the beauty of it is that mom and daughter can come out for an event that has some of the best women in the world in the event. We have had mothers that are of Olympic caliber running with their daughters, which is cool."

Many of this year's mother-daughter teams are already knee-deep in preparation for the Saturday, May 31, run.

Anne Hurley, 45, of Delmar, said she and her daughter, Grace, 14, have begun their cross-training program to get ready for the race.

"We run separately probably once or twice a week. She's very fast, but a 5K for her is a lot, so she's working on endurance," said Hurley. "I'm more of a distance person myself... but I'm working on trying to keep up with her."

The mother-daughter teams, as well as individual runners, have some fast times to beat, according to Ed Parham, director of public relations for the run. Parham said the fastest time at last year's race was 15 minutes and 17 seconds.

Hurley said she and her daughter are working on getting in sync so that they can run side by side at the race.

"It's always good to have someone to run with you," said Grace Hurley. She said she's running in the race because it helps her prepare for many school sports she participates in, including softball and basketball. She hopes to try soccer in the fall.

"If I can do running, it can make it easier for me," she said.

Although it has not yet happened for the Hurleys, Grace said that if one of the members of the team won the prize this year, "[my mother] would probably split it with me, but I don't know if I would split it with her."

Other mother-daughter teams kick up the competition by competing within the race.

Twenty-three-year-old Abigail Selert, of Latham, said that she and her mother, Pamela Jones, 47, of Latham, have little competitions. She said in April, the two ran in the Brinkerhoff 5K race at the University at Albany, and it was the second time she beat her mom.

While some mothers have been running with their daughters for a number of years, one mother ran the race with her daughter before she was even born.

Jessica Vogelien, 53, of Voorheesville, said she has run the race every year but two.

"The one time, I was actually pregnant with my daughter," she said. Vogelien walked that race, she said, because she was only 10 days away from the baby's due date.

For other mothers, this will be the first year running with their daughters.

"I'm going to be 50 this year; my birthday is a couple of days before the race. My daughter is 10 now and I thought it would be fun if she ran with me," said Cathleen Cenci, of Slingerlands. Cenci said that even though her daughter has not participated in this race before, she has run in other races for children.

Cenci said there are substantial prizes for the winners, $10,000 for the winner, but to her, that's not what the run is about. "I'm not a fast runner. To run with my daughter will be just a real thrill."

The race is scheduled at a new time this year—9:15 a.m.—on May 31. Registration fees are currently $30 per person, subject to increase closer to the event. Participants will meet, on the day of the event, in downtown Albany in front of the State Museum.

Discovery of body creates reflections on the water

With finding, man sees his life intersecting with one that ended in tragedy

By ARIANA COHN
Spotlight Newspapers
cohn@spotlightnews.com

Anthony Garafolo was on a two-week vacation from his job as a correctional officer at the New York State Department of Corrections, and he wanted a little alone time.

His children were out of the house, his wife had gone to work, and Anthony was able to catch up on some time for himself. He decided that this day, Tuesday, April 22, was the perfect day for his first boat ride of the season.

"It was just a quiet little nice day," said Anthony, a 47-year-old Coxsackie man, in a later interview.

Anthony had ridden in other boats before, sometimes as a fisherman, but this time was special. He did not plan to fish, or travel to any specific location. According to Anthony, he just wanted to have lunch on the river.

He had almost gone out the night before, right after he bought dock space at a Coxsackie boat launch for the very first boat he has ever owned.

"I'm just a new boater," Anthony said. "I just got my boat at the end of last summer."

But by the time he had gotten the boat in the water, the sun had begun to set, and Anthony thought he better save the trip for the next day.

And after he picked up a sub at a local deli and stripped off his shirt to beat an eager April sun, he started down the Hudson River on his new 18-foot bay liner — a boat so new it didn't even have a name yet.

Four months before Anthony set down the Hudson, a former State University of New York at Plattsburgh student named Joshua Szostak went out for a night of celebration with a group of friends, one of whom was celebrating a 21st birthday.

Joshua, 21 himself, went out in baggy jeans, a T-shirt and a Southpole black hooded sweat shirt with a skull and crossbones on the front. Around his neck hung a silver chain with a cross.

Josh's last stop on Dec. 23 was the Bayou Café in downtown Albany.

As the night was coming to an end, Josh's friends couldn't find him when it was time to leave.

A few days later, when Josh's parents, Bill and Marybeth, reported their son missing, Josh could only be seen alive, for the very last time, through the lens of a surveillance camera, which recorded him walking, alone, at the corner of North Pearl and State streets, around midnight.

Growing up with two younger sisters, Beth and Christina, Josh became familiar with being looked up to. At 10 years old, he became the president and CEO of a company called Jim Inc., and later, in his college years, became a radio personality known as "The Stag" for the college radio station, 93.9 FM WQKE, The Quake.

Joshua Szostak was not just any name. People knew who he was.

Slowly putting through the mountain range on that surprisingly warm spring afternoon, Anthony Garafolo noticed a large object in the water.

"I thought it might be the log or something, as I got closer I looked at it and it didn't really look like a log, so I circled it," said Anthony. "I wanted to kind of be sure that it wasn't a mannequin or some kind of dummy."

But on his second trip around the object, Anthony knew it was not a log. It was not a mannequin. It was not a dummy.

The object peacefully floating beside Anthony's boat was the body of Joshua Szostak.

After calling the police, Anthony sat in his boat and waited. He used his time to reflect upon his family and the family of the boy who lay lifeless before him.

"I reflected that this was somebody's loved one, and that I was going to stay with him until help came," said Anthony. "I just felt that the right thing to do was to stay with him until the proper help came. He was fully intact and dressed, but I was sure there was no hope."

So he waited. Just Anthony, his boat, and the boy floating nearby in the water.

Days after Joshua Szostak disappeared, his cell phone was found near the site of a vehicle theft in a Department of Environmental Conservation parking lot. The car was abandoned, with no trace of its driver.

Patricia Anastasi, a private investigator, was hired by Szostak family. According to Anastasi, "Obviously there are still a lot of unanswered questions in regards to how Josh ended up in the water."

Anastasi said he agrees with the family in that it is completely out of character for Josh to end up the way he did.

"So we're just going to follow up on leads," he said.

When the police arrived at the spot on the Hudson River where Anthony waited, it was 3:15 p.m. Detective James Miller, a spokesman for the Albany Police Department, said that day that the body was believed to be Josh based on personal items that were found on his person. Miller would not disclose what those personal items were.

A friend of Josh Szostak's, Kaitlyn Geiger, a State University of New York at Plattsburgh student majoring in political science, said Josh was a well-liked and well-known guy.

"He was a really nice, laid-back guy. He wouldn't hurt a fly. It is so tragic," she said, "He liked to enjoy himself and have a good time."

Also in his time at SUNY Plattsburgh, Josh became close with members of the fraternity Zeta Beta Tau, some of whom later became personally involved in fundraising and search efforts for their friend.

Academically, Josh was working toward a journalism degree, which would allow him to pursue his ultimate career goal: to become a foreign conflict correspondent.

At the time when Josh went missing, he was taking a semester off and working as a cashier at Hannaford supermarket at Latham Farms.

According to Josh's Web page on Facebook, a social networking Web site, a few of his favorite musicians included Eminem, Tupac, Elton John, James Taylor and Bob Marley.

He also enjoyed politics, labeling his political views as "liberal" and following U.S. Congressman Michael McNulty.

After the police had come and gone, Anthony spent a great deal of his afternoon reading up on the person he had found, who had been missing for 122 days.

"I had heard of Josh," said Anthony. "I knew that he had disappeared before Christmas. By now, of course, I found out who he was, and I found out more about Josh. When I look at pictures of Josh, I feel more connected now."

Anthony says he will always be connected. If he had not decided to take his boat out that day, he might have never been the person who brought the conclusion to a tragic story.

Around 5 p.m., Anthony docked his boat and returned home, to be greeted by his three children and his wife. The family discussed the day's events over dinner, which was interrupted by several phone calls from relatives and friends who had heard that Anthony was the man who had discovered Josh's body in the river.

When the calls ceased and Anthony was finally faced with silence, his long day ended and he drifted off to sleep.

At 9:30 a.m. on Wednesday, April 23, Dr. Jeffrey Hubbard, pathologist for the Albany County Coroner's Office, disclosed autopsy results that concluded Joshua Szostak drowned accidentally.

The Albany Police Department said they would be closing the case, as a cause of death was determined accidental drowning.

The family requested a second autopsy, performed nearly a week later by Dr. Michael Baden, chief medical examiner of New York City, who has worked on high-profile cases revolving around O.J. Simpson, John Belushi and Phil Spector.

"I found out a lot about Josh and where he went to school, and I can kind of see what he looks like and find out a little bit about him," said Anthony Garafolo. "I kind of know who he is in a way now. It's hard just to not have curiosity about him now."

As Anthony took his boat out later that week on Thursday, April 24, Josh's classmates sat in disbelief as they read the tale of a peer who had disappeared one fateful night, via their computer screen through an e-mail sent by SUNY Plattsburgh President John Etting.

"We mourn as a community the tragic loss of one of our students," wrote Etting, "and hope that Josh's family will now be able to find some closure on what has surely been a very difficult time."

"One of the things I have learned about Josh," said Anthony, "more now that I've been reading up on him, was that one of his favorite sayings was 'peace.' I hope that's what happens now. That's what this is all about bringing peace to this whole thing."

Though a stream of reporters have been contacting him, Anthony said he is on the verge of stopping his interviews. At this point, he said, everybody just wants to know the gory details. But while countless people of the media have talked to him, Anthony said not one has delivered through their stories the message he wants to express most:

That through the entire finding, and as the weeks go on, Anthony's thoughts and prayers have, and always will be, with the family.

Poetry in motion: Guerilla' movement sprinkles words of wisdom

By ROSS MARVIN
Spotlight Newspapers
marvinr@spotlightnews.com

Oregon poet David Barker has never been to Saratoga Springs, but one of his poems has.

He isn't a Pulitzer winner, or an academic or a student. But he does write poetry.

This is the story of one of his poems, stuffed into a book, forgotten about, and then found.

A reporter at Spotlight Newspapers was browsing the fiction isles at Borders Books on Broadway earlier this month when he came upon Barker's work.

He had picked up a copy of "Big Sur and the Oranges of Hironymus Bosch" by Henry Miller after being attracted to its cover art, and as he leafed through the pages, a small, stiff piece of paper, no bigger than postcard, fell to the floor.

Delicately printed on the card, in old-fashioned typeface was a short poem by Barker titled "Donut Shop."

On the card's reverse side there was a message that read as though it were ripped from some Marxian manifesto:

"This poem may be the last best hope for real literary art," it read. "It is the cave wall where we record our passing. All pretense is stripped away, art is being made because it must be made, not out of any hope for financial gain, but to further the human condition, to genuinely communicate with other living people and help all of us."

The back of the card also asked the reader to "register this broadside online and join us at the Guerilla Poetics Project."

As though he were doing something wrong, the reporter checked his surroundings for surveillance, cameras and stuffed the poem into his pants pocket. He put the Henry Miller book back on the shelf and walked out of the store and back to his office in search of the story.

Secret society blends old with new

The top members of the Guerilla Poetics Project call themselves "administrators" rather than editors.

It's a curiosity that links the secret society directly with the Internet, where the community began nearly two years ago on a blog.

One administrator said that the group of poets, editors and friends had toyed with the idea of a subversive distribution of what are called broadsides, or small cards, for years.

But, it took a three-day binge of blog postings to create the GPP.

He said administrators remain anonymous because the idea of the GPP is to put the names of poets out into the world without having the focus be on "who's in charge" of the organization.

He said the organization has grown from being regionally based, to international by employing what he calls a guerilla marketing strategy that serves to bring the poetry of the underground and small presses to a mainstream audience.

That marketing strategy is simple. Let people join the GPP and stuff thousands of broadsides into target books in libraries and bookstores throughout the world.

"We feel that a much larger poetry reading audience is out there. It's just been either ignorant of, or denied access to, the work being produced today," said the administrator. "Maybe it's just never occurred to many readers that poems were being written, in a readily accessible language, about things that just might be relevant to their own daily struggles here in the early 21st century. Our hope is that a GPP broadside opens a door to the poetry being produced today."

The group also combines the classic and basic broadside with the new media of Internet social networking. Here's how it works:

Administrators at the GPP ask for submissions of short poems from poets, many of them West Coast dwellers who have full-time jobs but publish poetry in a number of reputable journals and in small presses.

After selecting a poem for publication, an administrator designs and prints the poem on a broadside using an antique 1914 Chandler Price letterpress.

Then the printed poems are mailed to poets and members of the GPP, who go into bookstores and libraries and smuggle the broadsides into books.

The object is for an unsuspecting reader to find the broadside and, then, after reading the instructions on the back of the card, register the poem online.

The folks at the GPP also hope that poem-finders will become interested and join their community of poets.

When registering the broadside found in Borders, the reporter found that a number of other poems had been registered in the Capital District.

According to an interactive map that charts found poems, several other broadsides have been found locally.

A broadside was found in Jean Paul Sartre's "Nausea" in the Albany Public Library and other poems have been found in books by Kerouac at Borders in Saratoga.

An administrator for the GPP said that several of their distributors live in the Capital District.

Albany man employs "poetic terrorism"

Dan Wilcox, an Albany poet, said he may well have been the distributor that hid Barker's poem inside the pages of Miller's work.

"I sort of just stuff the broadsides in the books," said Wilcox. "I don't always look at the titles."

Wilcox is what the administrators at the Guerilla Poetics Project call an "operative."

About a year ago, Wilcox said he found out about the project from a friend.

He paid a $25 fee to join, and now he's periodically sent a package of broadsides. He gets to keep a special "operatives copy" of each poem and then disperses the rest, hiding them in libraries or bookstores around the region.

He said GPP has certain target books, especially authors favored by the hipster set, like Jack Kerouac, Allen Ginsberg and Charles Bukowski.

Sometimes, though, Wilcox said, he'll stuff a poem into a non-literary best seller, since the buyer "may be new to poetry, rather than someone already interested in literature."

Wilcox said he thought the GPP was a good way to bridge the gap between print and electronic media.

He said that years ago, he remembers putting his own self-published chapbooks on the shelves in local bookstores and hearing stories of people who picked up the book and tried to buy it, only to find it wasn't an inventoried item with a barcode.

A manager at Borders in Saratoga said she was unaware of the fact that several of the GPP broadsides had been found in her store.

"I don't know what the corporate people would think, but I don't think we have a problem with it," she said.

Wilcox said he'll continue to serve as an operator, even if he has to look over his shoulder to make sure he isn't going to be arrested for tampering with the store's merchandise.

"I've been doing acts of what I call 'poetic terrorism' for years," said Wilcox, who is in many ways the street poet laureate of the Capital District. It's a rare day, said Wilcox, that he doesn't show up at a poetry open mic.

In many ways, David Barker, the Salem, Ore., poet who writes for the GPP, is like Wilcox's long-lost brother, living a similar life in the West.

During the day, Barker works as a database manager and at night he attends open mics or readings. Every day, Barker said, he rages with the page, churning out poems that mirror the work of his literary idol, Charles Bukowski, the bard of the barroom. Barker's work has been published by Bottle of Smoke Press, which has also published some of the late-Bukowski's broadsides.

Barker said he actually met Bukowski when he was a student at California State Long Beach in the 1970s. He said he asked the acerbic Bukowski for an autograph and the writer of such cult-classics as "Post Office" spit in his face.

Still, Barker cites Bukowski as an influence. Like Wilcox, he likes the attitude of the GPP because of its anti-academic irreverence. Barker said that poetry by the common man for the common man has always had a place in society.

"I can't relate to much of it," Barker said of academic poetry. "I like reading from the small presses, and I like the poets that write for the GPP."

Wilcox compared the poetry of the GPP to the work he hears at the open mics that he adores.

"You might hear something that is terrible and then the next person comes on and you'll say, man, I wish I had a copy of that," said Wilcox.

Barker said that the GPP is a way to get his poetry out into the world. And, he said, it's a way to continue to participate

Poem on a broadside

Editor's note: Poet David Barker said he wrote the following poem about his brother, who's a painter. For a time, the brother worked by day as a baker, and Barker said his painting took on an "icing on the cake" style with thickly layered pastels.

Donut Shop

The baker is also a painter and as the years go by the pastries start looking more and more like Picassos, Degas, Chagalls, Dalis, while his canvases take on the appearance of Bearclaws, Maplebars, Chocolate Eclairs.

within a community of poets. He said he doesn't care that he isn't getting paid for his work by the GPP.

"In the small press world you don't do it for the money," said Barker. "You give your stuff away, it's all free."

'Rebate checks' still available to non-filers

Now that May is upon us, almost every day national TV and radio news reports make mention of the Economic Stimulus Package "rebate checks" that most of us should receive in the mail beginning this month.

Most people who filed a federal income tax return for 2007 will automatically qualify for a stimulus payment ("rebate check"). This includes most people who get tax refunds. Did you know that if an individual normally does not need to file a tax return based on income for the year, and did not file one for 2007, he or she may still be eligible to receive a "rebate check?"

Bethlehem Senior Services Outreach staff can provide the necessary forms and assistance

Tim Gunn brings style savvy to the masses

Fashion guru dispenses advice at Colonie Center event

By ARIANA COHN
Spotlight Newspapers
cohn@spotlightnews.com

Only one word could sum up the weekend "Your Perfect Style" event and fashion show. Bravo.

The word "Bravo" was recited five times by fashion guru Tim Gunn as models strolled down a pearly white runway in colorful Liz Claiborne clothing.

A collaboration between Liz Claiborne and Macy's landed the celebrity of the hit television series "Project Runway" at Colonie Center Saturday, April 26, where he gave fashion advice to everyday women about the appropriate way to dress for their shape in the springtime.

"It's all about three things: silhouette, proportion and fit," he said, pointing to a slim model prancing in a Valencia orange outer-coat. According to Gunn, if a woman knows how to dress for her body, an outfit could make her look longer and leaner — which he believes is something all women, and most men, want.

Another key point of Gunn's fashion advice was that a woman should never cut her body in half, as in wear two pieces of clothing, each ending at the mid-section. Instead, he said, she should wear a longer piece underneath her top, as to divide the body in thirds. This will proportion her body and give her more shape.

On stage with Gunn during Saturday's fashion show was Jerelyn Zontini, fashion consultant for Liz Cathleen Owens, 16, left, Mache Owens, 12, center, both of Slingerlands, and Dianna Mazzone, 14, of Delmar are all wearing fashions discussed by fashion consultants Tim Gunn and Jerelyn Zontini, at a fashion show Saturday, April 26, at Macy's in Colonie Center.

Ariana Cohn/Spotlight

Claiborne, who told the crowd that print and pattern designs are very fashionable this season.

"Prints and the colors this season are happy; they really are cheerful," said Zontini.

Colonie shoppers Jennifer Gray, 33, of Glenville, and Maria Stoodley, 34, of Schenectady, said they were inspired by Gunn and Zontini's advice about color.

"I'm definitely going to shop for brighter colors," said Gray.

Other attendees of the fashion show said they were excited to follow Gunn's advice in the future.

"I'm ecstatic that he talked about knee shorts with a pattern," said Laura Uhlig, 16, of East Greenbush, who happened to be wearing that particular fashion at the time.

Uhlig came to the show because she said she is a huge fan of Gunn's; others came to ask Gunn, who is also the author of "Tim Gunn: A Guide to Quality, Taste & Style," situational advice about their apparel and the machines that make it.

One woman asked whether empire waistlines, waistlines that gather under the breast and balloon outward, are flattering on every body type. Gunn said, with empire waistlines, it's all a matter of preference.

He also, at several points in the presentation, stressed that women should actually try clothing on when they are interested in buying it but not quite sure how it will look.

"Some people are coy and say they can't [try clothing on]. Sure you can! You're not getting married to it!" he said.

Several comments were exchanged between Gunn and members of the audience regarding the outfits some people attend church in, which Gunn agreed are often tasteless.

Gunn also spoke on the fashion ethic of people who do not even care what they look like in the morning.

"If you want to dress like you never got out of bed, DON'T GET OUT OF BED!" he exclaimed.

Zontini offered a simple piece of advice that had the entire audience talking.

"Yes, you can wear white before Memorial Day!" she said.

According to William Vasil, store manager of the Macy's in Colonie Center, the people truly appreciated having Gunn, and the program, at the mall.

"The whole marketplace is right here," he said, referring to the shoppers who are interested in fashion and what it means to be fashionable.

All together, shoppers at Colonie Center seemed to enjoy having the celebrity in their mall, giving them creative shopping advice as they browsed through the racks of the department store. Zontini even offered, to a few women who raised their hands needing shopping advice, to go shopping with them that day.

As a team, Zontini and Gunn explained that all of the feedback they receive from the audience is brought back to the Liz Claiborne headquarters, to help improve their line of clothing to cater to their customers.

Dering said of running again. "I've really enjoyed these three years on the board. ... There's a lot more to it than I originally thought."

Dering, who lives in Glenmont, attended Bethlehem schools and is a lifelong district resident. He is currently an attorney with the Office of the New York State Attorney General and he and his wife, Cynthia, have a daughter who attends Glenmont Elementary School.

Each of the candidates have handed in their petitions with 102 signatures to the district and will be on the ballot during the May 20 budget and bus proposition vote at the district's high school.

Board of Education President James Lytle said he was looking forward to working with the new board members and continuing to work with Dering during a period of transition for the district. As two new members come onto the board, the school has recently selected Michael Tebbano as the district's superintendent replacing outgoing Les Loomis.

Tebbano will take over on July 1.

The district has also built the first new school, Eagle Elementary, in more than 50 years. The school, which is near the high school, will hold an open house on Saturday, May 10, with tours from 2 to 3:30 p.m.

Lytle said he found it "a little discouraging" that more people did not hand in petitions for a board seat, but said that it could be a testament to the work of the current board.

"I think ... serving on the board is easily one of the most rewarding things someone could do," he said. "But I think if people were dissatisfied with what we were doing, there would be a lot more petitions."

When asked what would happen if there were not enough candidates interested in the board of education, Loomis said, he doubts it would happen. However, if it did happen, he added, the seat would most likely remain empty with a possible appointment by the board at a later time.

"This community cares so much ... I don't think that would ever happen," Loomis said, adding that an informal recruiting network would probably take place if there were a shortage of qualified and interested candidates.

The makeup of Bethlehem's Board of Education includes a female majority, which will remain intact after Bierman and Downey are elected. Three members have children in the district and four do not. Two board members have also themselves gone through the school district system.

The vote takes place on May 20, from 7 a.m. until 9 p.m. at the Bethlehem Central High School's upper gym, located at 700 Delaware Ave. in Delmar. Residents do not need to be registered to vote, but they must be 18 years old. Along with the school's budget and Board of Education election, a $1.35 million bus proposition to buy 18 new buses will be on the ballot (the state will reimburse 64 percent of the cost), as well as the local library budget and trustee election.

For details on the voting location of the proposed budget, visit the district's Web site at www.bcsd.k12.ny.us.

Spotlight goes 'Back 2 Basics'

This week, Spotlight Newspapers delivers what it believes to be a first for its papers.

"Back 2 Basics," a comic strip tale about a quirky intergenerational family facing the challenges of ordinary American life, will premiere on Page 4.

Created and produced by Bethlehem native Matt Zalen, the fictional story, based in Upstate New York, is led by Amos and Matzah, fraternal 11-year-old twin brothers with a few key differences. Amos is a serious scholar with a high level of maturity and Matzah is the laid-back one with a major task in mind — teaching his brother how to be immature again.

Rounding out the cast of characters is the mom, a smart woman with much potential for success; the dad, an ever-impatient achiever constantly on the lookout for shortcuts; and Grandpop, Old and grumpy, the grandfather is happiest when others are not.

According to Zalen, "Back 2 Basics" was created out of the frustration of a failed, unpublished comic strip and missing his family and homeland.

"I had created a comic strip called 'Crash Course.' I had 10 years of cartoons. It was a mish-mash of all the material. It didn't work."

After realizing his failed attempt and a move to Modin'in, Israel, in 2003, Zalen felt he had to completely immerse himself in his cartoon work and his goal of being a syndicated cartoonist.

"After my last rejection and my move, my focus was completely on getting a self-syndicated cartoon and everything just fell into place. The hardest part was coming up with the name. What I was trying to do was get back to the fundamentals — the basics.

"When a person moves to Israel, he is faced with a situation in which he lives thousands of miles away from the people and place that he left behind. This forces a lot of people to make the tough decision of choosing to focus on Israel at the expense of maintaining a strong connection to the states. I couldn't make this choice, which is why we now have 'Back 2 Basics.'"

Although Zalen says he did not grow up with an intergenerational family, he did say he based some of characters on members of his family.

"It (Back 2 Basics) connects me to my past life in the States. At the time I was creating characters, I was missing my brother and sister. Matzah is modeled after my brother."

Zalen, who says he has been drawing cartoons ever since he can remember, and has never taken an art class, is a 1996 graduate of Bethlehem Central High School and started to think seriously about professional cartooning while at the University of Maryland. He currently works at the Jerusalem Post (one of two English-language papers in Israel) as an online editor and reporter. In Modin'in, between Tel Aviv and Jerusalem, he lives with his wife, Ava, and newborn son, Yonatan.

The "Back 2 Basics" cartoon strip appearing in this week's Spotlight is No. 7 in the series. To view the strip from its beginning, look for the "Back 2 Basics" blog on www.spotlightnews.com beginning Thursday, May 8.

In addition to posting his weekly cartoon on the blog, Zalen will offer comments on the creation of each strip and offer some insight into the world of professional cartooning.

Zalen, who is published in other news outlets, including the Jerusalem Post, says he feels good about having his cartoon published in Spotlight Newspapers.

"It feels great to know that my hometown will be reading the strip. After all, it's where I grew up, and it's where my sense of humor developed. In effect, Delmar helped create the strip, so it's fantastic that they get to see it."

Commissioner of Public Works Josh Cansler, and create a safer work environment and more reliable service for residents, they both concluded.

"People don't want to invest their tax dollars into something they can't see ... but they get upset if something goes wrong," Cansler told Spotlight Newspapers during a guided tour of the town's sewer pump stations.

If things go wrong with the pump stations, he said, everything that flows out of a house could potentially flow back in very quickly. In essence, one could be up that well-known proverbial creek without a paddle.

"If these pumps failed, the sewer would back up into the homes eventually and fill up a basement" Cansler said. "Obviously nobody wants their basement flooded with sewage."

One of the original stations is the Elsmere pump station, built in the 1930s, although it has had some equipment upgrades since, according to Cansler.

"Our workforce is getting older and they'll be taking a lot of knowledge with them when they go," Cansler said of the need to have sewer station conformity. "Right now just about every station is different."

As it stands now, the town board authorized the town to bid out the work to replace seven pump stations, three this year and four next. Cunningham said there are only estimated costs at this time because a bid has yet to be awarded, but that it will most likely cost a household within the sewer districts about $20 a year for the next 30 years.

Payments wouldn't start until construction is completed in two years, he added.

"It will only affect people who have sewer service, not those with a septic," said Cunningham. "Some of them [sewer stations] absolutely need it ... there will be long-term costs savings in doing this."

Proper planning now will prevent problems in the future, according to Charles Wickham, director of field operation for the town's Department of Public Works.

"You wouldn't believe what people flush down their toilets. ... It costs us big time in maintenance," said Wickham. "We've learned a lot the hard way, so with the new stations we're trying to put in a lot of thought before hand."

With the newer stations sewer pumps can be "swapped" within an hour, said Wickham, but with the older ones, "it's an all-day project."

Pointing to two silver trash cans at the top of a crate at the Hudson Avenue station, which was built in 1929 or 1930, Wickham joked, "You don't even want to know what's in there."

Cansler said the town needs to establish a program to replace the pumps every couple of years so they don't run into the problems the did in the 1970s when federal funding allowed them to build and replace several stations around town.

Now that the funding is gone, all of the pumps built then are all ready for repairs and replacement at the same time.

"The design life for these stations are about 20 or 30 years," Cansler said. "In a lot of cases now, we're just using a Band-Aid."

The town has only built two new stations in the past 20 years, according to Cansler, and town workers have to physically visit the older plants three times a week to inspect them, which is costly and inefficient if a problem occurs right after an inspection.

If that happened it would be three days before anyone knew, or, if the problem were bad enough, residents would be calling the town.

The solution, he says, is Supervisory Control and Data Acquisition, or SCADA.

Part of the upgrades to the town's sewer stations is going to include installing SCADA into each station around town, which will allow workers to monitor each one from a remote location.

"By 2010," Cansler said, "our goal is to have them in all the stations."

SCADA is an industrial control system meant to function across a wide area with an autonomous microprocessor controlled electronic device that will be used to monitor all of the stations and let the town know where there is a problem and what the problem is.

"The SCADA system will eliminate a lot of these problems," Cunningham said. "To me, one of the bigger things in this upgrade project is getting everything on this system."

Care

feeding the hungry is a job that will most likely never end, and community support is essential.

These groups depend on donations that typically spike around the holidays.

Assistant director of Food Pantries of the Capital District Matt Sundheim said that the annual program "Stamp Out Hunger," sponsored by the National Association of Letter Carriers, comes at a time when many people are not in the mindset of giving. The national program collects food for local food banks and pantries at a time when their inventories are low.

"Timing of the program is essential. We receive everything that our carriers collect, and most of the donated items are quality items that really allow us to provide for months," said Sundheim.

The post office donates to more than 10,000 communities where the items go to pantries that are part of America's Second Harvest, the nation's largest food bank. According to America's Second Harvest, 35 million Americans are considered food insecure, which means they are not sure they will be able to consistently feed themselves or their families. During the summer, children become more vulnerable to hunger because they are not benefiting from school lunches to be able to help each other regardless of our individual situation," said Chamberlain.

So how will pantries be able to provide when the word "ration" is making a comeback? The World Food Program said we are about to face our biggest global food crisis since World War II. With an estimated 20 million children living in poverty around the world, it is hard to conceive that we can make a difference. Many of the people to work to combat hunger at our local shelters believe its starts on a small community driven level. Fighting the myth about hunger is a start according to Tracy Martin at the Regional Food Bank.

"We have to break through the myth of hunger only affecting those are the most down and out. Hunger can happen to hard working families who lose a job, it happens and it happens locally."

Tracy Martin

"We have to break through the myth of hunger only affecting those are the most down and out. Hunger can happen to hard working families who lose a job, it happens and it happens locally," said Martin.

Martin said that a majority of the time clients seeking emergency food assistance from the Regional Food Bank and its agencies are typically part of hard working families living below the federal poverty line. Martin said food is one of the few flexible items in a family's budget, and very often people do without food to pay other bills.

On May 10, postal carriers across the region will be looking for bags of non-perishable items from the houses they deliver mail to every day. Postal carrier Jeremy Curtin said he has heard some people say over the years that they only have an item or two to donate. He said whatever you have makes a difference and do not be afraid to put it out for pickup.

"An item here and an item there add up and we hope to literally have our hands full with donations," said Curtin.

In addition to the "Stamp Out Hunger" program, you can find out how you can help combat hunger by visiting www.charityadvantage.com and www.capitaldistrictpantries.net.

and in many cases breakfast too. They also report that one in four people in a soup kitchen line is a child, and the statistics are no different in the Capital District.

"There is a misconception that a person waiting in line in a soup kitchen is a homeless person off the streets. People who depend on these meals are many times young families with children who need a meal," said Sundheim.

At the City Mission in Schenectady, food drives and donations are what keep this busy soup kitchen and shelter operating. Director of the Annual Fund for the mission, Elizabeth Chamberlain said with the recession there is a constant worry that they will not be able to provide to all those who come to them for help. The food service department at the mission provides three meals a day to residents, dinner for the community six days a week, holiday meals and barbecues as well educating people about nutrition. They also have a program where residents serve meals to the community as a way of teaching them to give back as well.

"We are a mission, so we try to teach community, we all need helping us to establish a feeling of independence," said Gary Kleppel.

Congress is even looking at farm policies in an effort to benefit poor to middle class Americans.

Officials at the Nation's Food Bank Network are hoping for legislation to will strengthen federal nutrition programs providing support to the more than 35.5 million Americans who are unsure if they will adequately be able to feed their families.

President and CEO of America's Second Harvest Vicki B. Escarra said there is enough fertile land in America that no person in the country should face hunger.

"Day after day, headlines across the country are reporting home foreclosures, increased unemployment, bankruptcies, higher gas and energy costs, rising food prices and more. We need to use our natural resources to get control," said Escarra.

Weinheimer.

Other people look at growing their own produce as a way to combat rising prices at the grocery store.

Altamont farmers Pam and Gary Kleppel say that they have been growing their own produce, baking breads and even "(Baking bread) helps me reattach myself to the earth. It is all a part of a lifestyle that my wife and I have found to be relaxing and peaceful, all while helping us to establish a feeling of independence."

making cheese because its provides a sense of independence and control in a shaky economy.

Betting on the farm

Getting back to basics and focusing on farming is one way people can stretch a tight food budget.

The Regional Food Bank recently formed a partnership with the Patroon Land Farm to create a self-sustaining and educational farm in Berne that will produce high-quality vegetables for the food bank every year.

Farm manager Mark Weinheimer is in charge of developing the farm and educating the community and local schools about the farm's mission to foster Community Supported Agriculture.

"We have a long-term type of hope for the farm. We hope it will continue to grow in its ability to provide. It is something many people locally do not know about, but it is here, and it has made a difference," said

Lifestyles in the Spotlight

I'm going to write about chocolate. I know, it's not the holidays and it's not Valentine's Day. I know, it's spring and as the weather warms your thoughts turn to ice cream and ice pops. But for me, any time is a good time to talk about chocolate or, better still, eat chocolate.

Why am I going to talk about chocolate? I need a pick-me-up to counteract the doom and gloom in the news. From recession to soaring food prices, it's no wonder I seek the serotonin lift from eating my favorite indulgence.

In an economic downturn, chocolate is an affordable luxury. Some of the local confectioners in the Capital District tell me their customers still buy chocolates as gifts, but now tend to buy smaller amounts of quality chocolates for personal consumption.

Brian Bennett, co-owner of Isn't it Sweet in Albany says, "When the economy is good, people buy chocolates for others. When it's bad, they buy for themselves."

My excuse, premium chocolate is more readily available. Go stand in the candy aisle of your local supermarket and count how many new bars of quality dark chocolate tempt you with refined and creative flavors and lure you with statements about the heart-healthy benefits of antioxidants and flavanols.

Americans are becoming more sophisticated about chocolate. Sure they still buy the candy bars they grew up with, but many are willing to try something new and different in premium chocolate.

The U.S. Market for Chocolate reports a general trend toward chocolate "premiumization" - from 13 percent of market share in 2002 to 17 percent in 2006.

Chocolate premiumization started some years ago. Specialist chocolate boutiques have created a market for high-end, artisan chocolates. These chocolatiers have influenced the big candy producers with their bold, creative and sophisticated flavors, and the finest ingredients. And they have played their part in the evolution of the American palate.

What's hot in premium chocolate in 2008? According to Trendwatching.com, some chocolatiers are going "bespoke." The phrase "bespoke" was first coined in Britain for clothing, computer software and corporate training programs that are personalized for the customer.

How does bespoke work for premium chocolate? Cocoa Loco, a small company in New York City, offers a personal experience - rare chocolate formulations created to your specifications. For $250 you can buy four unique handcrafted chocolates, and $450 will buy you eight. The bespoke process takes several weeks, from initial consultation to private tasting to choosing signature flavors for your exclusive collection.

What else for premium chocolate? Serouseats.com asked three experts for their hot tips. Watch out for natural ingredients; organic and fair-trade chocolate; soy and allergen-free chocolate - all part of chocolate as a lifestyle. Maturing palates create demand for multi-layered flavors - teas; exotic honey; citrus; spices and tropical fruits.

Chocolate is no longer just a gift, but a personal indulgence and a gourmet food. People are more aware of cacao percentages (the seeds from which chocolate and cocoa are made) and the origin (plantation) of the cacao.

How do such trends influence the products offered by local "mom and pop" candy stores (of which the Capital District has a few)? I spoke to four local confectioners.

Although they sell to corporate clients and for wholesale, the majority of business comes from regular people who live in the community. The Chocolate Gecko markets itself as a high-end store selling fresh, gourmet and organic chocolates. The others describe themselves as middle of the road, selling fresh ingredients at affordable prices.

PREMIUM CHOCOLATE AN AFFORDABLE LUXURY

RICH TASTES

Trends & Technology

Susan S. Cheung

Sales of dark chocolate have increased, as customers are aware of the so-called health benefits of eating it. But by far, milk chocolate remains the most popular seller.

Although they listen to customers' suggestions and experiment with flavors, the traditional centers remain the perennial favorites - toffees, caramels, nutmeats and crèmes.

Bob Pikilingis of Candy Kraft says that customers are more particular about quality of ingredients and are prepared to spend more for quality rather than quantity. Before they were content with peanuts, now they want macadamias, almonds and cashews.

According to Terra Stratton of the Chocolate Gecko, raw ingredients have gone up 33 percent in one billing cycle and, although they may raise their prices, that doesn't stop customers buying quality chocolate.

It goes to show that chocolate can weather a bad economy. People can't afford the larger luxury items, but they can still treat themselves to a good piece of candy all year round - even at $1.50 a piece for truffles.

Indeed, truffles are proving popular at the stores. Mike Martoccio, manager of Krause's Homemade Candy thinks customers feel they get high-end luxury from quality truffles. And they get variety from seasonal changes in flavors and looks. Krause's summer flavors include pina colada and tropical fruits.

None of the stores have plans to go "bespoke," but they definitely see people buying premium chocolates with more unusual flavors and the freshest ingredients - people ask for spices, chili, coconut, floral and earl grey tea flavors - and others are willing to try.

Experts in the chocolate industry agree there's room for expansion, as long as candy makers are creative in the ways they offer new premium chocolate experiences. Brian Bennett certainly agrees there's a bright future for chocolate.

Perhaps, you'll see your personal flavors on the shelves soon. Thai lemongrass, lime, basil and coconut infused dark chocolate truffles anyone?

When WAMC began airing the NPR quiz show "Wait Wait ... Don't Tell Me!" a few years ago, Kathy Jarvis was an instant fan.

But Jarvis, the director of marketing for Proctors, didn't know the show occasionally went on the road to tape episodes. She assumed it was produced exclusively in its home base of Chicago.

Then one day, she heard an episode of "Wait Wait ... Don't Tell Me!" that had been taped in Florida. Jarvis excitedly told Proctors CEO Phillip Morris that it would be great to bring the show to town. So they worked with WAMC, and on Thursday, May 8, Proctors will hold a live taping of "Wait Wait ... Don't Tell Me!" at 8 p.m. Anyone who can't make it can still catch the show on WAMC when it airs two days later on Saturday, May 10, at 11 a.m.

For the uninitiated, "Wait Wait ... Don't Tell Me!" is an hour-long quiz show. Hosted by Peter Segal with Carl Kasell as the judge and scorekeeper, the show features a panel of celebrity guests who answer questions about current events. There's plenty of humor thrown in, and one listener wins a personalized answering machine message recorded by Kasell.

"It's a bit off-beat," said David Galletly, WAMC's senior vice president for operations.

"Price is Right" host Drew Carey was one of the celebrity panelists on the April 26 version of "Wait Wait ... Don't Tell Me!" He took part in a game called "Bluff the Listener" in which someone called in and tried to guess which story about a family restaurant chain was true. Carey's version had the Long John Silver's seafood restaurant chain deciding to sponsor a bass fishing tournament, with the winning fish being served to a lucky Long John Silver's diner along with $10,000.

A second story involved a British restaurant firm bringing a restaurant called Pharm Fresh to the United States. The eatery would serve only bio-engineered food like baked potatoes that are big enough to serve four people.

In the last, Playboy magazine planned to introduce a feature called "The girls of Olive Garden." That turned out to be true, although the caller guessed Carey's story was the one rooted in reality.

"It's very funny," Jarvis said. "I love it."

She isn't alone. Galletly said "Wait Wait ... Don't Tell Me!" has a devoted local following.

"People have really gotten into it," he said. "It is a very popular program. We hear an awful lot about the show."

For the Schenectady taping, the celebrity panel will feature Amy Dickinson, who writes the syndicated advice column "Ask Amy" for The Chicago Tribune; Charles Pierce, a writer for The Boston Globe; and Mo Rocca, who contributes to both "CBS Sunday Morning with Charles Osgood" and "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno." Another guest will be on hand or call in and has not yet been revealed.

The show, which is already sold out, had tickets priced at $33, $30, $27, and $20. At 6:30, Proctors will host a free "theater talk" for ticket holders, who are encouraged to ask questions about the artists and the performance.

In addition to being heard on WAMC on Saturday, the show will be archived on NPR's Web site at www.npr.org. Jarvis encouraged people to check it out.

"It's good for anyone that listens to radio," she said.

Fris enjoys his role as leader of the Hooligans

By JESSE PULITZER-KENNEDY
sports@spotlightnews.com

On paper, Thomas Fris sounds fairly non-descript. He is a 47-year-old math teacher at Bethlehem Central High School.

But his effect on the student body is incredible and permeates beyond the classroom when he leads his band.

It isn't a rock and roll or ska band. Fris leads a pep band named The Hooligans.

"What are The Hooligans?" said Fris. "Well, most people know the reference from the European soccer fans who are often characterized as those who tend to get drunk, and be loud, and get into brawls, and run onto the field, and knock over referees, and that kind of craziness."

The Hooligans started in the summer of 2006 when a group of 10-12 seniors formed the band to support their friends on the varsity boys soccer team.

"I knew nothing about any of this until the first day of school, when I was approached by some kids," said Fris. "The initial question that they posed was, 'Mr. Fris, what are you doing at o'clock this afternnon?"

That initial question posed by 2007 graduates Pat Venter and Paul Cafiero would lead to the emergence of the Hooligans.

"Now I knew nothing of pep bands besides that they were meant for football games," Fris said. "I'm thinking, 'What are these kids up to?'"

Much to his amazement, Fris' early skepticism proved to be baseless. Not only had the young men been practicing heavily, but they had checked the official Section 2 Athletics Rules.

"It is legitimate to have a pep band at any high school athletic event, but you need a teacher supervisor," said Fris. "That's where I come in."

But why did Venter and Cafiero choose him? "I don't know anything about music except being a fan. I can't read music, I've never had any formal training, I can't play an instrument, but music has always been a huge part of my life," said Fris. "You add being a fun loving guy together with this band ... that's when I knew this was a match made in heaven."

From Fris' premiere at the first soccer game, the fan base began to grow.

"Not only are you watching great soccer, but now you got this great pep band with me goofily conducting along, so kids really started to come out," said Fris

It didn't hurt that the 2006 Bethlehem boys soccer team was exceptional. After winning the Suburban Council title, Bethlehem took the Section II, Class AA championship and reached the state final four ... and the hooligans went every step of the way with them.

"We probably took well over 100 kids out there," Fris spoke of Bethlehem's trip to a regional playoff game in Syracuse. "It was essentially a home game for them, but as it turned out, we had a significantly higher number of fans than they did."

When Bethlehem lost in the state semifinals, the Hooligans didn't have anywhere to continue playing at first. "After that season, it was almost as if there was a void. Both the kids and I were saying, 'It can't be over,'" said Fris.

As it turned out, the Hooligans were in demand to play at other Bethlehem sporting events including hockey, basketball and even tennis.

"We developed a reputation," said Fris. "Area schools knew about us, local media started paying attention. The more attention we got, the bigger it grew."

While fun, leading the Hooligans has proven to be exhausting for Fris.

"People from the booster clubs started calling us saying 'can you play this event, can you play that event?'" said Fris. "It felt like we were playing constantly, and at some point I was asking myself, 'How do I teach math and still keep this going?'"

So, why does he keep this going? The fact is, Fris does what he does because it's fun.

"The Hooligans are totally student run and independent from the school, so I don't have any official position," he said. "Everybody knows it's my gig, but it's not like I have a job as an assistant coach or something."

Not only has his experience

Elsewhere in the Section II sports world ...

• Postseason honors keep piling up at Shenendehowa High School. Last week, T.J. Popolizio was selected to play on the New York team at the second annual Red Bulls High School Cup June 21 at Giants Stadium. Then on Monday, Ken Strube was named New York State Girls Basketball Co-Coach of the Year after guiding the Plainsmen to the Section II, Class AA title and picking up his 500th career win along the way.

Popolizio's honor is well earned. The senior finished with 13 goals and seven assists to help Shen win the Suburban Council Blue Division title. And though the Plainsmen failed to reach the Sectional finals, the state's sportswriters knew enough of Popolizio to vote him onto the New York team for the all-star game.

The best part for Popolizio is that he gets to play on a Major League Soccer pitch following the New York/New Jersey Red Bulls' home game that night. Not many Section II graduates have played on a professional soccer pitch.

• The Bethlehem softball team's 5-3 victory over previously unbeaten Colonie last Wednesday further confirms what had been suspected when it gave defending Sectional champion Shen all it could handle in a 1-0 loss earlier this year - the Lady Eagles are a legitimate threat to win the class AA title.

Forget for a moment that Bethlehem's entire starting infield is made up of freshmen and sophomores. While it is true that underclassmen need a period of adjustment to the varsity level in any sport, these are some talented underclassmen who are determined to win every game. Third baseman Mary Beth Dombrowski, shortstop Meghan Burns and first baseman Dominique Shade are very good hitters and fielders, and freshman Toni Edwards is one of the top pitchers in the Suburban Council (that much was evident when Edwards limited Shen to one hit in a losing effort).

As long as Bethlehem doesn't suffer any postseason jitters, I think the Lady Eagles have a realistic chance to unseat Shen.

• It might not have been convenient for Section II Rowing Championships spectators to park at the Schenectady Yacht Club in Rexford and be bussed to the finish line across the Mohawk River, but it was the best option available to the event organizers. Since parking wasn't allowed on the side streets near the driveway to the spectator area, it was either have a school bus take the spectators or have them walk along some busy roads. Given the choice, I took the shuttle bus.

As it turned out, it was also welcome relief. Given the cool, damp weather on both days of the event, it was nice to enter a warm Niskayuna school bus for the short drive across the Rexford Bridge rather than challenge the Route 146 traffic on foot.

Maybe next year, there could order some warm, sunny weather so walking could become an option.

game home stand. The Indians host Voorheesville Wednesday and Mechanicville Thursday.

While R-C-S is surging to a possible Colonial Council title, Voorheesville is trying to earn a .500 league record to earn a Section II playoff berth. The Blackbirds' league record dropped to 5-5 after last Thursday's 2-1 loss to Cohoes.

Mark Pertierra's two-run homer in the top of the second inning gave Cohoes (6-4, 10-4) all the runs it needed to pull out the win. Tom Pasqualli had a pair of hits and scored Voorheesville's lone run.

The Blackbirds (8-7) tried to bounce back Monday at Mechanicville. Following Wednesday's game at R-C-S, they return home to face Cobleskill-Richmondville.

Bethlehem is also chasing after a Sectional playoff berth and a division title. The Eagles improved their Suburban Council record to 5-2 following last Thursday's 9-0 victory over Averill Park.

Pitcher Randy Bowers tossed a one-hit shutout and struck out 12 for Bethlehem, which kept pace with Gold Division-leading Columbia (6-1, 12-4). Mike Fish tripled and singled for the Eagles, while Lucas Nitsche added a double and a single.

Bethlehem looked to move closer to the seven league wins it needs to qualify for Sectionals when it hosted Burnt Hills-Ballston Lake Monday. The Eagles travel to Saratoga Springs Wednesday before visiting East Greenbush Friday for a showdown with Columbia.

Lady Eagles shut out BSpa

The Bethlehem girls lacrosse team increased its winning streak to a season-high three games with Friday's 17-0 Suburban Council victory over Ballston Spa.

The Lady Eagles (4-6 league, 7-6 overall) scored 14 goals in the first half and cruised from there to victory.

Shirah Fudin, Cameron Caesar, Meg O'Donnell, Kristina Maksuti and Erin O'Donnell all scored two goals to lead a balanced Bethlehem attack. Fudin also had a pair of assists, while Caesar, Maksuti and Meg O'Donnell all chipped in assists.

Bethlehem entered the game off an impressive 15-5 victory over Shenendehowa last Thursday. The Lady Eagles built an 8-2 halftime lead and never looked back.

Meg O'Donnell had a big game for Bethlehem. The senior attacker scored six goals and added an assist. Michelle Primomo contributed two goals and two assists, while Brittany Howland and Kaitlyn Martin each added a pair of goals.

The Lady Eagles had three games left in the regular season, starting with Monday's home contest against Shaker. They travel to Averill Park Wednesday and Niskayuna Friday before receiving their seeding for the Section II, Class A playoffs, which begin May 19.

Fris

with the Hooligans been fun, but Fris said it has helped Bethlehem athletics.

"I think this has really regenerated some of the school spirit around sports that may have been waning a little bit. I know not every kid is into it ... but it became something to rally around - for the fans, the band and me," he said. "It doesn't hurt when your teams are real good. People love a winner, but when you set a winner to some funny music ... it's a blast."

And in the process, the Hooligans are redefining the word the band uses as its name.

"At first, there was controversy around that name, with the drunkenness and the fighting," said Fris. "We are 180 degrees away from that. For a couple hours a week, nobody's getting drunk or fighting. It's good, clean American fun."

Fris isn't planning on leaving the Hooligans to focus on math. "All I want is more than 24 hours in a day. That's all I need. I love it and I couldn't walk away from this even if I wanted to," he said.

Indians take control

Wins over Watervliet and Alb. Academy solidify hold on lead

For a brief moment, there were Colonial Council baseball teams in Ravena-Coeymans-Selkirk's rearview mirror.

Now, there is little preventing the Indians from winning its first league title in nearly three decades.

With Friday's 5-4 victory over Watervliet, R-C-S (9-1 league, 11-2 overall) opened up a two-game lead over Schalmont for first place. The two-game lead may come in handy, since the Sabres are the only Colonial Council team to beat the Indians this season.

Watervliet (6-4, 9-7) had a chance to become the second league team to beat R-C-S. The Cannoneers scored a run in the bottom of the seventh inning to cut the Indians' lead to a single run before R-C-S pulled out the win.

Joey Boomhower launched a two-run home run to lead the Indians, who overcame four errors in the field to fend off Watervliet.

Tom Ebenhoch doubled twice for the Cannoneers.

R-C-S earned another key league win last Thursday when it downed Albany Academy 15-3 in Albany. The Indians jumped out to a 5-0 lead after two innings, but they needed a nine-run seventh inning to put the Cadets away.

Boomhower had a big game for R-C-S with a home run and two singles as part of the Indians' 15-hit attack.

R-C-S got another crack at Albany Academy Monday in Ravena as the start of a three-too many weapons to contain, a defense that keeps opponent's scoring chances to a minimum and a goaltender who makes the key saves to prevent any comeback bids.

What amazes me is that Guilderland simply hasn't been challenged in the Suburban Council this season, and that includes its two games against Shaker - a team I thought would be the Lady Dutch's closest competitor. Guilderland's average final score against league opponents is 18-5. The Lady Dutch's lowest goal output was 10, but that came in an early-season non-league win against Section I's Nanuet.

Not that the rest of the Suburban Council is all that bad. Shaker has beaten everybody but Guilderland including a pair of one-goal overtime victories over Niskayuna, which is arguably going to roll over the rest of the class B field come Sectional time. Saratoga is stronger than it has been over the past couple of years with a balanced attack, and Bethlehem is playing better after a shaky start that was the result of seeing a good chunk of last year's offense either graduate or transfer out of the region.

But none of these teams have enough to beat Guilderland this season. That's been made obvious over and over again, and it will continue that way through Sectionals.
