EYSO hits the right note

When Agnes Kline was a kid, her grandparents took her to see the Empire State Youth Orchestra, and she decided she wanted to be in the orchestra when she was a bit older.

Irene Van Ryn remembers seeing ESYO perform its "Melodies of Christmas" concert on television and feeling that same pull.

"I said, 'I'm going to do that,'" she said.

These days, it's Kline and Van Ryn inspiring the next generation of Capital District musicians. Now students at Shaker High School, both are members of ESYO - Kline as a cellist and Van Ryn as a violinist.

ESYO is not actually an orchestra in and of itself, but an umbrella term for nine performing groups.

Plans to implement full-day kindergarten will be put on hold due to changes in the economy since an advisory committee recommended it in November.

Guilderland Superintendent John McGuire said he asked the Early Childhood Advisory Committee on Full-Day Kindergarten to reconvene after it initially recommended moving forward to include full-day kindergarten in next year's budget.

"[The economy] led me to have real reservations, not about the recommendation, but the timing of the recommendation,"

A proposal to upgrade and overhaul the Delmar Key Bank has been withdrawn by the national bank chain.

Bethlehem Director of Economic Development and Planning Michael Morelli confirmed to The Spotlight that Key Bank is no longer seeking to renovate its branch in Bethlehem due mainly to economic factors and not criticisms of the town's planning board.

"They're doing renovations all across the nation ... but they decided to put it on hold here," Morelli said. "The decision was made at their headquarters in Cleveland, but I don't think we're

Town takes care of caretakers

Employees reside rent-free on town property as watchmen

The town of Bethlehem owns two separate properties — one at the Henry Hudson Park and one at the New Salem Water Plant — that two town employees call home in exchange for caretaker duties.

Charles Wickham, the director of field operations for the Department of Public Works, lives at 157 Lyons Road at the town park off the Hudson River. Richard Sayward, the chief water treatment plant operator, lives at 27 Patton Road in Voorheesville on the Vly Creek Reservoir.

Both earn a salary of $82,886, but according to Bethlehem Supervisor Jack Cunningham, there are different caretaking duties required of each residence.

"The town pays the taxes, and the occupant has a lease agreement that he fulfills as a caretaker," Cunningham said. "There's a separate description for the caretaker duties."

Both positions have always carried the current caretaker responsibilities, according to Cunningham, although in the past, the town's Parks and Recreation Department used the Henry Hudson Park house.

Police Blotter

Woman cited for DWI, not stopping for cops

A woman from Slingerlands faces a slew of charges after she did not pull her car over for police, was found to be intoxicated and then declined to take a Breathalyzer.

Cheryl L. Taratino, 52, was arrested outside of her home on Tuesday, Jan. 20, and charged with DWI, a misdemeanor, and a number of infractions, including unlicensed operator of a motor vehicle, refusal to take a breath test, failure to obey police officers, failure to keep right, and inadequate license plate lamps.

Bethlehem police said Taratino was seen driving west on New Scotland Road near Bridge Street when officers noticed that she did not have a license plate lamp on her vehicle.

When police began to follow her, she was observed crossing the double yellow line of the roadway.

The patrol officer followed Taratino until the roadway was flat "in order to conduct a safe stop," but when the officer activated his emergency lights, she did not stop, according to the arrest report.

The officer then activated his emergency siren as he continued to pursue Taratino, at which time an Albany County sheriff's deputy on patrol began assisting the Bethlehem police officer in stopping Taratino, the report states.

The sheriff's deputy also activated his emergency lights behind the Bethlehem officer, but Taratino continued driving, eventually turning left on Miller Road and into a driveway approximately 1.5 to 2 miles after officers began their pursuit, according to police.

Taratino came to a stop in front of her residence after "sliding toward a large snow bank," the report states, and began to open the driver-side door of her vehicle when officers approached her, but was order to exit her car and place her hand on the trunk of the vehicle.

Police said they could smell alcohol on Taratino's breath when interviewing her and she showed signs of intoxication including being "off balance" and slurring her words.

When asked why she didn't stop for police, Taratino allegedly replied, "I thought you were an ambulance" according to the report.

When asked why she didn't stop for the ambulance she responded, "You scared the hell out of me."

Taratino failed a field-sobriety test before being transported to the Bethlehem Police Department, according to the report, where she declined to take a Breathalyzer three times.

She was processed and released into the custody of her husband.

Other arrests

• George L. Kirkley, 57, of Schenectady, was arrested on Tuesday, Jan. 20, at the Bethlehem Police Department for fourth-degree criminal possession of stolen property and fourth-degree grand larceny, both felonies.

Bethlehem police said Kirkley was a part of an ongoing investigation, including cases in Colonie, since August of 2007, and that based on a joint investigation with the district attorney's office, Kirkley was "developed as a suspect."

He was arraigned by Bethlehem Town Justice Ryan Donovan and waived to Albany County Court, where he is scheduled to appear on Tuesday, March 17, according to the arrest report.

• Guiderland police arrested Derrick W. Dickson,

36, of 63 Grand St. in Albany on charges of DWI on Thursday, Jan. 22, according to police reports.

Dickson was arrested near 5209 Western Turnpike and was arraigned later that day.

• Rochelle A. Edwards, 38, of Albany, was arrested on Tuesday, Jan. 20, at the Bethlehem Police Department on charges of second-degree criminal possession of a forged instrument, a felony; first-degree identity theft, a felony; fifth-degree criminal possession of stolen property, a misdemeanor; and petty larceny, a misdemeanor.

Bethlehem police said Edwards was arrested in the lobby of the town's police station after exiting town court on a signed felony complaint stemming from an incident at Hannaford in Delmar on Oct. 22.

Edwards was read his Miranda Rights, and he allegedly made a statement implicating him in the incident and Bethlehem Town Justice Ryan Donovan arraigned him, according to the arrest report.

Donovan sent him to the Albany County Correctional Facility without bail due to the fact that he had three prior felony convictions and a preliminary hearing was set for Thursday, Jan. 22, the report states.

• Guiderland police arrested Venessa M. Cunsolo, 27, of 3143 E. Old State Road in Schenectady, on charges of DWI on Sunday, Jan. 18, according to police reports.

Cunsolo was arrested at the corner of Route 158 and Western Avenue and will reappear in court on Thursday, Jan. 29.

Farnsworth middle schoolers win regional competition with engineering know-how

By DAN SABBATINO

A group of students from Guilderland's Middle School won a regional competition for the fourth year in a row, sending them to Washington, D.C., Feb. 17.

Students from Farnsworth Middle School won the Capital District Regional National Engineers Week Future City Competition, which was held at Hudson Valley Community College on Saturday, Jan. 17. They will compete with teams from around the country for the top prize, which includes a trip to space camp.

"It took a lot of research, engineering skills, math and science," said Zubin Mukerjee, a student representative of the winning team.

Their fictitious winning city is called Cibola and is located in Pando Bolivia on the Madre de Dios River.

"The direct, hands-on experience is a successful route to acquainting young people with engineering," said Kevin Powers, the regional Future City coordinator for the Capital District. "They see engineering as a direct influence on their lives and how math and science are relevant to the world, and these students are undaunted by tough challenges."

Cibola, which is set in the year 2237, has a population greater than 150,000, and uses efficient geothermal, solar, wind and hydropower to provide electricity, according to information provided by the district.

The competition required a good deal of teamwork, said Guilderland teachers Deb Escobar, Tom McGreevy and student Matt Gu.

Gu said the students would try not to reject ideas outright, but improve upon them to make the project better.

"By using the latest technology in water purification, recycling and conservation, 90 percent of their water is recycled and reused. Cibola has many parks and green-space, providing its citizens with clean fresh air, with state-of-the-art education, municipal and medical facilities," according to the district.

It features residential, government, office and recreational buildings all designed and built by the students.

Student Edmund Doyle said it was not easy to find the best materials to make the display.

He said he found himself "looking around in the endless piles of recycled materials" until he found what he needed.

Other attractions include a marina, beach, museum, walking and biking trails and a soccer stadium.

Farnsworth also won three "special area" awards for Cibola.

Capital District Public Relations Coordinator Sharon Raber said teams have one teacher and one mentor in the engineering field advise the project.

She said the local committee is heavily involved in aiding the teams and could help find mentors for schools if the school cannot find one alone.

"The local committee does try to support the schools as best as possible," Raber said. "We try to be a network of communication for them."

Raber said students have been given lessons by top-notch professors at the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute on water filtration and presentations from Plug Power to help supplement their understanding of the topic.

The project focuses on identifying potential problems for future cities and addressing those issues in a way that would make life "more efficient, happier and healthier" for residents in the city.

"If we keep using water at the same rate as now, it will be more expensive in the future," said Joe Sipzner, a student representing the team.

First, the team must develop a sustainable city using "Sim City" software, provided by Electronic Arts, for at least 50 virtual years. They also must take a small sample of their virtual city and recreate it using recyclable materials for their display. The display must involve at least one moving part.

The Farnsworth team included a train that used magnets to go around a track.

This year's theme was residential water conservation and recycling, and was exemplified by Cibola.

Raber said many teams tried to incorporate the water theme into the moving parts and some wound up leaking.

Students are also expected to write an abstract and essay and answer questions from the judges showing they understand their model.

"They need to know what they are talking about," Raber said.

In Washington, D.C., there will be 80 schools competing over the course of five days. The list will be narrowed first to 15, then to one national winner.

Last year the Farnsworth team finished second in the nation, Raber said.

The students representing Farnsworth, in addition to Mukerjee, Gu, Doyle and Sipzner, are Abigail Schnoor, Laura Chevalier, Adam Janover, David Lasselle, Isaac Malsky, Jake Van Buren and Sid Varma. Teachers McGreevy and Escobar and volunteer engineer-mentor Robert Sipzner, of Barton & Loguidice, P.C. coached the team.

The judges for this year's Capital District regional competition included over 50 engineering and technical professionals, including presidents, vice presidents, chief engineers, and directors from leading area engineering businesses and public agencies, according to the district.

Top prize is a trip to U.S. Space camp in Huntsville, Ala. First runner up wins $5,000 for its school's technology program and second runner up wins $2,000. The Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers-USA, sponsors the prizes.

Elsmere won't hire librarian

District officials: Not replacing staff is just 'the first taste' of major budget cuts

By JARRETT CARROLL
Spotlight Newspapers

As a group of Elsmere Elementary parents say they are concerned about losing their full-time librarian, Bethlehem Central warns that more cutbacks are coming.

A group of residents protested a move by the school district to not replace the elementary school librarian when the current one has retired — a move that district officials said is necessary as the school tries to rein in spending in the face of state aid cuts.

Harriet Jaffe, along with other Elsmere parents, pleaded with board of education members at the Wednesday, Jan. 21, meeting to name a replacement for Nancy Smith, who is retiring as the Elsmere Elementary librarian.

"This is a mistake I believe," Jaffe said of not replacing Smith. "That individual attention is invaluable."

She argued that school librarians have been proven "in several studies nationwide" to improve the academic performance of students in grade school and beyond.

Superintendent Michael Tebbano said he sympathizes with the parents' concerns but said the financial crisis may be more serious than people realize. He asked district residents to be more understanding and to give the new approach a chance.

"We anticipated replacing her [Smith] position earlier, but in light of the current situation... we decided we would revise our plan," Tebbano said. "This is going to be a big crisis we're trying to manage, and it's going to get worse. ... Realistically the $30,000 or so we save will not solve the fiscal crisis, but I have a fiduciary responsibility to this district."

Tebano said none of the kids would lose their librarian because the district has rescheduled the remaining five elementary librarians to cover Elsmere Elementary. He added the district has enacted other measures, such as a hiring freeze and the unpopular decision to suspend school field trips, as well as cutting back on school aides and bus routes.

IN BRIEF

Bus safety a focus at BC board meeting

The Wednesday, Jan. 21, Bethlehem Central Board of Education meeting included a performance from the district's award-winning bus safety group, the Bethlehem Employee Awareness Team (BEAT).

The BEAT presentation featured a student skit, multimedia elements and an appearance by "Buster," a computerized school bus robot who has become a beloved safety icon for a generation of Bethlehem school children.

Buster, who is only 2.5-by-3-feet tall, made his way through the crowd during the presentation to the delight of many in the audience.

The presentation by BEAT is annually delivered to all district elementary schools, area preschools and at various civic events, including

"This is just the tip of the iceberg if we don't get any funding from the federal government or the state," Tebbano said, referring to Sen. Charles Schumer's proposed school "bailout" package that would come from the federal government.

The superintendent said he has received a number of e-mails on the matter and has responded to all of them.

Another concerned parent, Dan Rain, said he would like to remind board members of last year's redistricting process.

"We were assured that this very situation would not happen," Rain said at the meeting and then said it seemed like the "smaller schools" were receiving fewer resources than the larger schools.

"This is not a small school issue," Tebbano responded. Earlier in the meeting he said, "If this is causing a furor, just wait ... I know this community will not settle for a high tax rate."

Tebano elaborated on the matter the next day.

"I can understand the suspicions of some of the parents of the smaller schools," he said. "The big picture here is that Elsmere is still going to have a library program. Nothing is changed, we are not denying Elsmere any service."

Tebano said the same thing would have happened if any other librarian retired from any other school.

Board of Education President James Lytle called the current economic crisis "the real deal," and echoed Tebbano's sentiments on the situation.

"I hope the parents and children of Elsmere give this a fair chance," he said of the librarian situation. "I'm afraid, like what Mike said, this could be the first taste of what's to come."

Board member Lisa Allendorph asked the parents at the meeting who helped at the library if they would be willing to take on a "more leadership role" as a result of not have a permanent librarian at the school.

Jaffe said parents are no substitutes for a full-time librarian and that parents are always doing everything they can.

"The parents here live in a working community," she told board members. "We don't have those options."

the annual Albany County Traffic Safety weekend at Crossgates Mall. Their performances are multi-media and often include student and staff participation.

The group is made up of 10 employees of the Bethlehem Central Transportation Department who volunteer hundreds of hours of time in a year to the cause of bus safety. This not only helps the district meet the state requirement of providing children bus safety instruction each year, but it helps build bridges between students, faculty and staff about critical safety issues.

This year, BEAT's efforts dovetail with "The Bethlehem Peaceable Bus Project," a pilot program at the elementary level designed to stem any incidences of bullying and other inappropriate behavior in favor of belonging, comradeship and trusting friendship with the bus driver.

Bread mold and the science of communication

By WILLIAM R. DEVOE
Spotlight Newspapers
devoew@spotlightnews.com

"For millions of years, mankind lived just like the animals. Then something happened which unleashed the power of our imagination. We learned to talk and we learned to listen."

— Stephen Hawking, professor, author and all-around smart guy.

"What are you talking about?"
— William R. Devoe, not quite as smart Stephen Hawking.

Face-eating bread mold can tell you a lot about your marriage.

A couple of weeks ago, my wife was cleaning out our cupboards, getting rid of expired foodstuffs that the boys and I would still eat if left to our own devices. She took down a half loaf of bread from the basket on top of the refrigerator where we keep it. She glanced at the date and made to throw it in the trash.

"How old is it?" I ask.
"A couple of days. I'll get some more tomorrow," she says.

"Don't throw it away," I say. "If it's only a couple of days old, we can still eat it."

"Maybe you can eat it, but my children and I will not eat expired food, thank you."

She throws me the loaf in question.

By this time our 6-year-old has moseyed into the kitchen. He knows when there's going to be a good show. Our 1-year-old isn't far behind him, but I think he's more interested in the bread than anything else.

"There is nothing wrong with the bread," I say while I'm opening the bag. "It's mostly white. There are only a few blue spots on some of the slices."

"Exactly. That's why you shouldn't eat it."

"No way," I say. "When I was younger, we'd just pick out the spots and eat the good parts. There's no reason to waste a perfectly good half loaf of mostly un-moldy bread."

Then she plays her trump card, in front of the kids, no less:

"Bread mold will eat your face."

I can't help but laugh at this, but Kevin, our oldest, has this "You're gonna need a bigger boat" look on his face, put there by the prospect of having a faceless dad coach his soccer games.

My wife continues: "I was watching TLC, or maybe it was the Discovery Channel, and there was a show on this guy who got bread mold in his sinuses, and they had to remove most of his face. Don't do it."

"You're insane." I'm about to pop a nice polka-dotted slice of split-top into my mouth when, from behind me, Kevin screams, "I don't want to see your bones! Don't eat the bread!"

I put the bread down and turn to my only ally in the house—the Internet.

I type what I believe is a straightforward question into the search engine: Will bread mold eat my face?

After slogging through the hundreds of pages of bread-mold related pornography and dating sites, I find a few that are of use. What do they say? The general consensus is that eating moldy bread will not result in your face being eaten.

"See this?" I say to my family. "No need to waste all that bread."

"Bill," my wife leans in close to me. "We're just trying to tell you that we care about you and that we don't want to risk you getting

*"No way," I say.
"When I was younger, we'd just pick out the spots and eat the good parts. There's no reason to waste a perfectly good half loaf of mostly un-moldy bread."*

sick just so we can save a dollar on a loaf of bread."

"Don't do it, Dad," Kevin says. "You need a face."

I throw the bread away, wondering why I'd rather argue about the threat of face-eating bread mold than realize when my family is trying to tell me they love me.

Communication is key, they say, but sometimes I feel like I need a locksmith.

I made the mistake of buying a gallon of paint from a megamart near my house, around the same time the bread mold nearly ate my face, in fact. I needed a gallon of white paint for a quick cover-up, so I didn't feel a trip to the hardware store for the premium stuff was necessary. I was wrong.

I was fortunate in the sense that when I got up to the cash register with my paint I was greeted with an actual word, and not the smacking of bubblegum as is the standard at these places. The word: "Hey."

"Hey yourself," I said to the 20-something cashier.

"Are you familiar with our return policy on paint?"

"As a matter of fact, I'm not."

"You can only return the paint if it's defective and the can is unopened."

I had to do a double take. "If the can is unopened, how would I know if it's defective?"

She smacked her bubblegum. "I'm going to have to call a manager."

Back to the night of the moldy bread, and this is where I come clean, so to speak:

It's later that night, and I'm feeling a little hungry. Everyone is asleep and I slink like the Grinch into the kitchen to fix myself something. I take everything out of the fridge to make a Dagwood Bumstead-sized sandwich — cold cuts, lettuce, an entire onion, two kinds of cheese and spicy mustard. I'm drooling over the cutting board when I remember that we have absolutely no bread.

Then I spy a familiar looking plastic bag peeking out from underneath the lid of the trash can. I know what you're thinking: "No way he's going to tell us he ate moldy bread out of the trash."

I'm not going to. I would have, don't get me wrong. But before I could fish the bread out of the trash, I heard a drowsy voice behind me say, "Watcha doin', Daddy?" Kevin is at the doorway to his room, in his pajamas, rubbing his eyes. If he had a floppy teddy bear in his hand, he would have been the living embodiment of one of those Precious Moments figurines.

"I was going to fix myself a sandwich, Kev, but it appears that we have no bread."

"We have the death bread," he says, and I'm not really sure if he's encouraging me to eat it or not.

"It's not death bread," I say as I guide him back to his bed. We lay down together. "You or I could eat it and be just fine."

"But, Dad, why did Mommy say that bread mold was going to eat your face?" He turns away from me and pulls his blankets over his shoulders.

"Honestly, Kev, most of the time I just don't know what your mother is talking about."

He looks at me, sleep washing over his face.

"Me neither," he yawns.

Coalition to help alleviate unfunded mandates

Educational classes in the works

Members of an inter-municipal storm water coalition focused its plans to help alleviate state mandated costs and fund educational classes at a Thursday, Jan. 15, meeting.

Nancy Heinzen, a representative of the Storm Water Coalition of Albany County, said the board of directors had its first gathering since its initial Oct. 15, 2007 meeting.

"It's function is to help all of the participating entities to comply with the Federal Clearwater Act Storm Water Regulation," Heinzen said.

The coalition allows the municipalities to meet the requirements together, rather than individually, and is designed to save municipal taxpayers money by consolidating efforts.

Roger Stone, zoning enforcement officer and liaison to the coalition attended the meeting on behalf of Guilderland Town Supervisor Ken Runion, who sits on its board of directors.

Stone said the meeting helped set the tone and pace of the year, and discussions about setting up a public education program we're a big part of the meeting.

"There's a lot of things we have to do," Stone said. "It's a work in progress."

Stone said classes are going to be set up to inform the public about storm water management and soil erosion, which are part of the state and federal requirements.

The meeting focused on the organizational framework of the coalition going forward, and included updates to the board regarding its progress.

The coalition has an operating budget of $120,000 to be used toward educational materials for the public regarding storm water management and efforts to map key areas where storm water is released into federal waters.

Stone said part of the federal and state mandate includes educating the public about the topic, and the coalition allows municipalities to contribute to a pool of funds to help fund the initiatives.

"We're trying to operate as a cohesive unit," Stone said of the coalition. "Without it, we would be in left field."

Stone said based on a formula that accounts for population and geographic size, Guilderland contributes close to $15,000.

Bethlehem Supervisor Jack Cunningham said since the coalition is new, he is unsure if the $15,000 Bethlehem contributes will be the best value for the taxpayers.

"We're not certain of that yet," Cunningham said. "We have to measure it."

He said he said suspects the coalition will provide a value in the long run, and said allowing the municipalities to meet the requirements as a county, rather than alone is desirable.

Heinzen said while the coalition is relatively new, forming in 2008, the municipalities have been working together since the regulations were passed in 2005.

"We're used to working together. We're used to each other," Heinzen said. "There's not a lot of unknowns."

She said a formal coalition has helped with key areas in communication and consistency in dealing with enforcing local laws related to entities that violate the regulations, including contractors who discharge pollutants into bodies of water at construction sites.

Municipalities in violation of the regulations could see fines as much as $37,500 per violation Heinzen said.

The coalition also provides access to grants available through the federal government that can help supplement the municipalities' efforts Stone added, although none have been awarded since the coalition officially formed.

The next meeting of the coalition board of directors is set for March 20.

Talent show raises $3,200

The recent Rhythm of the Heart talent show raised $3,200 to benefit programs and services at the Center for Disability Services.

The contest, held at Bethlehem Central High School on Friday, Jan. 9, yielded two winners: Christian Frese, a musician, and Shannen O'Brian, a dancer. Frese and O'Brian performed during the Center for Disability Services Telethon on Sunday, Jan. 25.

The Rhythm of the Heart program was conceived and organized by Sarah Hospodar and Samantha VanSchaick as part of a Girl Scout Silver Award Initiative. Both teens are freshmen at Bethlehem Central High School.

Competition judges were Steve Teeling, chief meteorologist at WXXA-TV/FOX23 News, and Lori Tynan, owner and artistic director of Tynan's Center for Dance & Well-Being. Diane Lee, co-anchor of FOX23's DayBreak, was mistress of ceremonies.

Matters of Opinion in the Spotlight

Selected officials

Even if you operate under the assumption that all politics is dirty and there are no truly spotless elections, you'd be hard pressed to remember a time in New York politics when so many of our legislators gained office by means that were opaque, unanticipated, opportune and downright serendipitous in some cases.

After then-state Comptroller Alan Hevesi resigned his office amidst charges of defrauding the government, Thomas DiNapoli found his election to that office being pushed through the Legislature by Gov. Eliot Spitzer — even though DiNapoli was not among the top three people recommended for the job by a state review panel.

Spitzer, as we all know, led us to another dubious assumption of New York state power by embroiling himself in a prostitution scandal, resigning his office and leaving it to a then-virtually unknown entity in Lt. Gov. David Paterson.

Paterson, having shaken the mantle of "accidental governor" after the majority of a year in office, just came off another selected official debacle by trotting out Caroline Kennedy as his front-runner to replace U.S. Senator Hillary Clinton, after Clinton — naturally — experienced her own assumption of power by being appointed secretary of state by our newly elected president. During the hard-sale of Kennedy to the people of New York, politicians and pundits state and nationwide called for a special election to select New York's junior senator.

It wasn't meant to be. We all know by now that Paterson backed off the Kennedy push and tapped 20th Congressional District Representative Kirsten Gillibrand to replace Clinton.

Now we will get our election. Now that the positions of power farther up the chain have been filled with hand-picked appointees, the stakes are at the level where they can be entrusted to the New York voter. Maybe. When Gillibrand resigns her Congressional position to take the Senate seat, Paterson can issue a proclamation for a special election, which will be held 30 to 40 days after the proclamation. He doesn't have to. If he so wishes, and we at The Spotlight can't reason as to why he would, he can wait until the 2010 general election to fill the seat. It wouldn't make sense, but what in New York politics does?

In continuing a long-standing tradition, we at The Spotlight will not be endorsing a candidate in the race for the 20th Congressional District. We do, however, wholeheartedly endorse the process. With whoever occupies an elected office, regardless of their party or affiliation, we feel that it puts more credence behind the phrase "Vote the bums out" when we've actually voted the bums in.

Editorial

Reflecting on being laid off

NORMAN G. COHEN
news@spotlightnews.com

The author is a Delmar resident and former columnist for The Spotlight. The following column appeared in the March 23, 1983, edition of The Spotlight and earned an honorable mention at the New York Press Association Better Newspaper Contest for that same year.

Late Friday afternoon a few weeks ago the director of my unit at the state agency for which I've worked for the past two years, called me into his office and closed the door.

I knew what it was about as did every other state worker in every other state agency whose supervisor called them in for a meeting and closed the door. He culminated weeks of speculation and unusual silence on the state grapevine, which usually teemed with fruitless rumors. In as caring a manner as he could muster, he informed me that my position had been abolished, and April 7 would be my last day on the state agency payroll.

I had been laid off. In fact, my entire unit had been abolished.

It wasn't until the following week that I realized what elite company I was in. Many with higher level positions and more years of state service had also been hit. Many who had considered themselves in the pink were given the slip of the same color. Others who thought they were on the way up the state ladder, found themselves back down a rung or two or three.

A new lingo entered the agency corridors. People began buzzing about "bumping" and "backup items" and "preferred lists." A shroud covered the building atmosphere. People approached each other as though eggshells had been spread all over the floor. Those of us who had been given notices were spoken to as though we had suffered a death in the family. Those who survived the budget ax conveyed obvious discomfort with their dilemma of feeling sympathy and relief simultaneously.

The knowledge of just how many people had lost their jobs and who they were was not clear until the following week. Moreover, the final count and identities of those "bumped" out of a slot won't be tallied until the pecking order exercise has spent itself.

In the meantime, affected employees have formed informal special-interest groups, meeting one-on-one to commiserate, clarify entitlements and share notes on next steps. The survivors have also formed into a group of willing helpers with direct lines to other agency contacts and reference letters in hand. In such difficult times, the concern and active support of comrades is often the major factor in coming out of the period intact.

Personally, I am not devastated by the loss of my job — at least not yet. Should months go by without a new work situation, then I will consider devastation. In the meantime, however, I am calling upon all the past experience I have had as a private-practice professional working on a fee-for-service basis, as an entrepreneur in business for myself, as a fully credentialed clinical social worker who was once forced to take a one-third cut in pay because of insurance industry restrictions on my clients, and ultimately as a breadwinner who was at one time unemployed for nearly six months in the middle of a ravaged Western New York economy.

From the perspective of my background, I can see firsthand that, for many of those long-termers in state service, the push out of the public nest is as scary as crossing a busy street for a hobbling old person. Fear pervades every step. Reflexes have atrophied. Signals have been forgotten as to whether they mean caution or opportunity. State workforce reductions are rare, but when they hit, they leave a shockwave that touches everyone. They also leave a trail of unseasoned job-seekers.

Considering the plight of being laid off, from my point of view, I have a few things I would like to say about this unusual period in our state's history. First, at the risk of sounding self-patronizing, you should all be aware that some pretty excellent workers are out there on the street looking to ply their wares. The layoffs did not result from poor performance ratings. Nor were the specific selections of personnel made on the basis of getting rid of unsuitable individuals. The bullet has been bitten by big shots, small shots, straight shots and hot shots alike. For you employers looking for good people who know how to work, get your ads in the papers, because a pool of talent has flooded the land.

Second, I would like to say, at the risk of sounding political, that as a manager with responsibility for doing something about this state's condition, this or any other governor should have done exactly what has been done to reduce this state's expenses. Perhaps the way in which it was done could have been altered somewhat, but then is there any way to lay off real people and do it well? In all the considered fairness of our laws and contracts, there are always inequities. In every mass action for the good of all, there are personal tragedies.

Finally, to all my fellow out-of-workers, it is a time to believe in yourselves and know how skilled you are. You are not dispensable, only your job is. Have faith that we humans really can spin flax into gold and recognize blessings in disguise. Your next opportunity awaits you, but you must be able to see it for what it is to make it yours. If you are blinded by despair or resentment or fear at having been cut off from your current source of nourishment, then remember your birth was also a time when you were forced to seek other means of nourishment, and not one of us that time as an end of something, but rather a beginning.

It is time for rebirth. It is time to count on your friends. It is time for real caring for one another. Good luck to you and may God be with us.

'Oz' on stage

Bethlehem middle schoolers are off to see the wizard

The Bethlehem Central Middle School is presenting four performances of "The Wizard of Oz" at 7 p.m. on Feb. 3, 5, 6 and 7. Tickets are available at the middle school box office.

"Who can resist that time-cherished journey to the merry old land of Oz?" said Katie Daly, co-director of the production. "While the Wicked Witch chills your bones, the rest of the characters are sure to warm your heart on a cold winter night."

Among the best-loved stories of modern times, this familiar tale of self-discovery takes Dorothy on a journey through the strange land of Oz. Along the way, she meets an unlikely cast of characters - a good witch; a bad witch; three lost souls, the Scarecrow, the Tin Man and the Cowardly Lion; a town full of Munchkins; and a hapless wizard.

In the end, Glinda teaches Dorothy - and all of us - an unforgettable lesson. "Let the students of Bethlehem Middle School bring this inspiring story to life for you," said Lynda Conway, co-director of the production.

Tickets are on sale to the public on Jan. 29 and 30, from 5:45 to 7:15 p.m. at the middle school box office. Tickets for adults cost $8, seniors and students cost $5.

All seats are reserved and the box office opens at 5:30 p.m. on show nights.

To merge, or not to merge

V'ville and New Scotland look into sharing services in light of harsh economy

By DAN SABBATINO
Spotlight Newspaper
sabbatinod@spotlightnews.com

With Gov. David Paterson's State of the State address came talks of economic stimulus, energy alternatives and solutions to the fiscal problems plaguing New York state.

One of Paterson's proposals was to consolidate local government services to cut costs. Some local officials said they are considering all the options but will ultimately put their constituents' needs first.

Voorheesville Mayor Robert Conway said the village and Town of New Scotland have discussed potential cost-cutting measures, but they have not implemented any plans to dissolve the village into the town.

"It is something that we talked about. It's not necessarily something that we're preparing for," Conway said.

Conway said the two entities have a good amount of municipal cooperation. He said they already share several services and pieces of highway equipment and have always tried to save the taxpayers' money wherever possible.

He said other consolidations, such as the City of Schenectady into the county, or the Village of Green Island into the town, might be a better fit.

Conway said the benefits of consolidating are not clear at this time, but he would not be opposed to the move if it proved beneficial.

"I'm not opposed to it if I see the benefit to it," Conway said.

He also said the most important deciding factor would be the support of the residents.

It all depends on the location, the quality of services and potential benefit, Conway said.

Conway added that pride or self-interest could prevent the village and town merging.

"The big knock on it is that everyone tries to protect their own little parochial interests," Conway said.

Conway also added if the two entities were to consolidate several new districts such as water, sewer, sidewalk and lighting would need to be created.

New Scotland Town Supervisor Tom Dolin said the town does not have an official policy on the matter, but said the town and the village share a lot of services, and it seems the village residents are not in favor of a merger.

"It's usually up to the village," Dolin said.

Dolin added the town and village do share an animal control officer, which saves money.

One area in which the town and village have discussed potential consolidation is the judicial system. Conway said there were talks about merging the two and have town justices handle the workload, but that is not likely to happen until Voorheesville Justice Kenneth Connolly retires.

Connolly is up for re-election in March 2010.

Attempts to contact Connolly to obtain his intentions for the upcoming election were unsuccessful.

"That's an area where there might be some savings," Conway said.

"I'm not opposed to it if I see the benefit to it."

Chamber women to help Girl Scouts

A silent auction will raise money for the community service group

By DAN SABBATINO
Spotlight Newspapers
Sabbatinod@spotlightnews.com

Capital District Girl Scouts have been selected as beneficiaries of a women's group in Gunderland and will be receiving charitable donations through May.

The Gunderland Chamber of Commerce Women in Business group selected the Girl Scouts of Northeastern New York based on the group's service to the community and to local girls, and will be providing it with proceeds from charity events culminating in a silent auction on May 7 at the Colonie County Club.

"We are absolutely thrilled to be recognized for all our hard work," said Sue Stoddard, the community relations specialist for Girl Scouts. "I think this will be a great opportunity for the public to realize Girl Scouting is a great way to build girls of courage, confidence and character to make the world a better place."

Stoddard said her children have been a part of the Girl Scouts since the first grade, and have achieved the gold award.

Stoddard, a member of Girl Scouts herself for 24 years, said the biggest financial obligations the group faces are the programs they run for the members and the trips they take. The funds from the Chamber will help pay for those programs and trips, she said.

Stoddard said the most recent big trip the local scouts made was a 12-girl contingent that attended the inauguration of President Barack Obama.

Chamber Director Kathy Burbank said events leading up to May sponsored by the Women in Business will help raise money for the Girl Scouts. She said the Chamber frequently holds 50/50 raffles, and collects canned goods and office products.

"The fun-filled event is a great way for Chamber members to be involved in the community in a way that suits them," said Burbank. "You wouldn't believe the response we get to requests for donations when the businesses find out that the proceeds are staying and helping local children or families."

Last year's fund-raising recipient was Community Caregivers, and the Chamber raised more than $1,800 for the group at its summer social.

Sheriff to seek sixth term

James Campbell said he plans to consolidate services, build annex to jail

By DAN SABBATINO
Spotlight Newspapers
sabbatinod@spotlightnews.com

Albany County Sheriff James Campbell announced Thursday, Jan. 22, that he is planning to run for re-election in November.

Campbell, 68, is serving his fifth term as sheriff. He said he plans to continue to provide the county with innovative and progressive programs.

He said he is still excited to come to work every day and help keep the county safe.

"I love to work," Campbell said.

Campbell said the dedication, loyalty and "highly progressive and professional" work ethic of his office have yielded many positive results and will continue to do so if he is elected to another term.

If elected, he said, he is planning several initiatives.

First, he and Albany County Executive Mike Breslin are going to try to consolidate the "public service answering points" that handle 911 calls.

Right now there are seven primary answering points and six secondary ones that handle calls in Albany County. He said over the next few years, a cost-saving consolidation could eliminate some of the points and still service the same area.

Campbell is also planning to push an initiative to build an annex to the Albany County Correctional Facility to house inmates with mental health issues. He said the county is planning 80 beds, and it would be the first of its kind in the area.

According to his office, Campbell's past accomplishments include the Work Alternative Program that has saved $4 million; the creation of a countywide Drug Unit, Advanced Life Support Program for the "hilltowns," a countywide forensics and hazardous materials unit and Project Access, an educational and enforcement program that targets motorists illegally parking in spaces reserved for those with disabilities.

Breslin said Campbell has been an asset to the county.

"Sheriff Jim Campbell has been a consummate professional, and I am pleased to support him in his re-election," said Breslin. "I commend him for his recent efforts to enhance and streamline the communication and coordination of emergency services across our region, and the instrumental role he has played in securing grant funding for Homeland Security efforts."

According to Campbell's office, it has received several million dollars in grants from Homeland Security and provided equipment and training for law enforcement and fire departments across the county.

Matthew Clyne, the Democratic Commissioner of the Albany County Board of Elections said Campbell, along with any potential challengers, will need to collect 2,000 signatures from June through July to run for the position.

Library to offer 'Picturing America' during February

We are privileged to host a very special exhibit in our lobby during February. We have received a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities to offer "Picturing America," a cultural initiative that brings representations of our nation's art to schools and libraries across the country. Well over 36,000 schools and libraries have been selected to participate in this project.

Forty large, high-quality reproductions will be displayed at Bethlehem Public Library. The prints will subsequently be added to the library's permanent collection and available for loan. According to the NEH, they provide a "cohesive sampler" that serves as a starting point for learning about America's history and art.

Our nation's art — paintings, sculpture, architecture, fine crafts, and photography — offers insights into our national character, ideals and aspirations. "Picturing America" gives our community another path to our country's history and culture. The exhibit helps citizens experience the "humanity of history," and enhances the teaching and understanding of our past.

Primary funding for "Picturing America" comes from NEH's "We the People" program in cooperation with the American Library Association. Additional support has been provided by other federal agencies and private partners.

To learn more, go to www.PicturingAmerica.neh.gov.

TALK 1300 AM

THE CAPITAL DISTRICT'S TALK RADIO

Though it has a good relationship with area schools, it's not affiliated with any local districts. It's an independent activity for young musicians in the Capital District and beyond.

Talk to kids in the ensembles – there are roughly 300 of them – and you'll hear a lot of stories similar to Kline's and Van Ryn's. Many saw EYSO performing and just felt a natural attraction. David Luidens of Guilderland High School watched a friend perform with EYSO and, he said, "I knew that was what I wanted to do."

Robert Cosgrove of Albany High School was hooked after a percussion ensemble performance.

These clearly aren't kids who play instruments because they who drives 50 miles each way for practices at the Albany Academies, said he joined EYSO because "I wanted to increase my musical horizons."

Aden Brooks of Schenectady said EYSO has been invaluable in helping him grow as a trombone player.

Phillip Ducreay, a senior at Schenectady High School who plays violin, liked that EYSO could challenge him.

"Nowhere else around here can you get that kind of intensity," he said.

It's a treat for EYSO's conductors to work with kids who are looking for that intensity.

"I love conducting students, especially kids who are really into their music and instruments," Gummper said. "You explain something, and when they do it, you see them turn to one another and say, 'Oh, that's how it's supposed to be.'"

"I love conducting students, especially kids who are really into their music and instruments."

Joseph Gummper

need class credit or because their parents make them. They do it because they love music. With EYSO, they feed off the excitement of others who share that passion.

"A lot of these kids are very dedicated to making music," string ensemble conductor Joseph Gummper said. "They find other people like them here. They find kindred spirits."

"I've never felt so much energy in a group," said Mike Dorato, a senior at Guilderland High School who plays trombone. "It almost gives you chills, it's that good. At school, it's never as deep."

Dorato hit on another key reason a lot of the EYSO musicians gave for being involved with the group: It simply has a lot more to offer than their school music programs. EYSO commissions its own music. There are regular shows at Troy Savings Bank Hall, Proctors and Carnegie Hall in New York City. Musicians travel to other states and, occasionally, even other countries.

But joining EYSO isn't as simple as demonstrating a love of music. There are annual auditions – landing a spot one year doesn't guarantee one the following year – as well as tuition fees.

Then there's the practice time. The nine performing ensembles (two full orchestras, a wind orchestra, a string orchestra, two jazz ensembles and three percussion ensembles) dedicate a night to practicing each week, with professional musicians serving as conductors and coaches.

Sit in on a rehearsal, though, and you'll see it's not really a sacrifice for the musicians. They enjoy an easy rapport with the conductors – Gummper had his kids in stitches demonstrating a pleading face they could use to convince their parents to take them to a local concert – and when they take a break for refreshments, there's plenty of chatter and laughter.

That lighter side of rehearsals is mixed with a serious commitment to grow and improve as musicians.

Jared Harrison, a flute player from Cobleskill-Richmondville music teacher in the Bethlehem Central School District who conducts the repertory orchestra.

Before she joined EYSO about seven years ago, music director and youth orchestra conductor Helen Cha-Pyo had worked only with professional musicians. She was intrigued by the chance to work with youths.

"I thought this would be a very meaningful way to make music," she said.

Cha-Pyo sees herself filling multiple roles: "I am a coach, I am a teacher, I am a motivator," she said.

She is also high energy.

Standing in front of the youth orchestra during a recent rehearsal, she conducted with a flourish, making large sweeping motions with her arms. She regularly stopped and addressed different sections with suggestions.

"She wants the kids to improve," said Mike Reinemann, a clarinet player from Niskayuna. "She's very warm and inviting."

That warmth made an impression on Abbie Zimmermann-Niefield, who initially wasn't interested in EYSO. But when the group needed extra bass players, Zimmermann-Niefield decided to give it a try.

"I ended up really liking it," she said. "Helen keeps it fun."

Beyond that, Zimmermann-Niefield liked how "everyone is interested in music" and that she had a chance to play good music.

That music, after all, is at the heart of EYSO. All those hours of rehearsals translate into more 30 shows each year. Sarah Vero, a lawyer who serves as the president of EYSO's board of directors, played cello in the group when she was a student at Burnt Hills-Ballston Lake. She remembers hearing recordings of EYSO's concerts, and she couldn't help but be impressed.

"You listen to your own CD, and you're like, I sound like a professional," she said.

"It's a really good orchestra," said Inga Bagelpi, a violin player from Niskayuna.

The conductors say that's a credit to the students.

"They're willing to dig deep," Cha-Pyo said. "They have discipline. These are special kids."

Behind the scenes

Adults play a key role in EYSO's success

By JACQUELINE M. DOMIN
Spotlight Newspapers
dominj@spotlightnews.com

The 1970s weren't the best time to be a young musician in Connecticut.

Music programs were falling victim to budget cuts, and David Beck was one of the casualties.

Beck, a Bethlehem music teacher, had taken up the cello in third grade. But his school's string program was eliminated, and Beck had to switch to the tuba, with marching band serving as his only musical outlet.

"There was nothing like this when I was growing up," Beck said of the Empire State Youth Orchestra, where today he conducts the repertory orchestra. "This was kind of like a dream."

It's a dream that Capital District musicians have been living since the late 1970s – or about the same time Beck had to give up the cello. It was 30 years ago that a group of parents and music educators came together to form EYSO, which started as a single orchestra and now includes nine performing ensembles. More than 300 young musicians from the Capital District and as far away as Vermont and Western Massachusetts belong to EYSO, a registered nonprofit organization with a home office inside Proctors in Schenectady.

Parents still play an integral role in EYSO. They not only drive their kids to rehearsals and shows, they help with fundraisers and serve on EYSO's board of directors.

Past president Meris Ruzow was once one of those parents. Her daughter, Jenny, and son, Benny, were both musicians, and Ruzow wanted to find opportunities for them to play beyond what the Shenendehowa school district offered.

"Their whole music world evolved," Ruzow said, noting that Jenny's interest in music was nurtured so much that she later started her own brass quintet.

Ruzow said she was "thrilled" with EYSO – so much so that she decided to join the board. Members meet on a regular basis to do everything from plot out the season's musical selections to figure out the best ways to raise money.

Tuition fees help cover some of EYSO's costs. Kids pay between $425 and $525 to belong to an ensemble, but that defrays only a fraction of the estimated $2,000 it costs EYSO for each student. And not every musician pays the full amount – scholarships are available.

For additional funding, EYSO holds an annual appeal during which it solicits donations from corporations and individuals. There are performances at Barnes and Noble and Crossgates Mall where people can give money. Parents sell Yankee Candles.

The cash helps to pay for such things as coaches, salaries for conductors and rehearsal spaces. Trips are another expense – EYSO musicians play each year at Tanglewood in Lennox, Mass., and Carnegie Hall in New York City. They've also undertaken four international trips, including a trip last April to Germany, the Czech Republic and Austria.

"You get to play in incredible venues," said Jared Harrison, a flute player from Cobleskill-Richmondville.

That was a selling point for Julia Wither, a horn player from Niskayuna who joined EYSO in part because of the opportunity to travel to Europe.

"That was amazing," she said.

Sarah Vero had her own amazing experiences as a musician with EYSO when she was a Burnt Hills-Ballston Lake student. Now a lawyer, Vero recently took over as president of EYSO's board of directors.

Her motivation was simple: The organization gave so much to her, she wanted to give back. She wants other kids to have the opportunity she had – and Beck didn't.

For information on EYSO, visit www.esyo.org or call 382-7531.

Ensemble schedules shows

Every year, all 300-plus members of the Empire State Youth Orchestra get together at Crossgates Mall, staging a play-a-thon that serves not only as a major fundraiser but as a way to showcase the group to the Capital District.

"It's a great way for the community to see the breadth of our offerings," said Susan Brome, EYSO's executive director.

This year's play-a-thon is Saturday, Feb. 7, from 11 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. EYSO also has the following upcoming shows planned:

- Sunday, Feb. 8: Repertory orchestra will participate in Albany Pro Musica's annual High School Choral Festival, Troy Savings Bank Music Hall, 4 p.m.

- Tuesday, April 14: Evening concert with EYSO's youth orchestra and youth chorale and the Riverside Choir, Riverside Church, New York City, time TBA.

- Friday, April 24: Concert with EYSO's youth jazz ensemble and the College of Saint Rose jazz ensemble, Piccotte Recital Hall, Massry Center for the Arts, College of Saint Rose, 7:30 p.m.

- Friday, May 8: EYSO wind orchestra at Albany's Tulip Festival, Washington Park, Albany, time TBA.

- Sunday, May 10: EYSO's 30th anniversary celebration, Proctors, Schenectady, EYSO ensembles play at 1 p.m., youth orchestra, youth chorale and repertory orchestra play a Mother's Day pops concert at 2 p.m.

Q: Every winter I have a tough time with my eyes. Sometimes they get very dry, and sometimes they tear excessively. What causes this, and what can I do about it?

A: "Dry eye syndrome is an increasingly common condition characterized by deficient tear production or increased evaporation of the tear layers, causing ocular discomfort. When the tear production is poor, most people will complain of gritty, red eyes. Those who worry about excessively watery eyes are generally experiencing increased tear film evaporation. The causes of dry eye syndrome are many, including age (greater with women than in men), side effects of many medications (including those for blood pressure and cholesterol, etc.), poor diet, dehydration, or relating to a systemic disease. The first line of therapy should always be increased hydration; drink more water. If you are not taking any blood thinners and have no bleeding disorders, an Omega 3 fatty acid supplement may help with your symptoms. Artificial tears such as Systane Ultra® or Optive® are good choices, but an exam with your ophthalmologist is always advised, as dry eye syndrome may indicate a larger systemic problem, and other therapies may be required. If left unchecked, dry eye syndrome can decrease your vision, and your quality of life."

the only ones."

Morelli said an expensive architectural design and material costs during a shaky economy may have been the impetus to hold off on some of the bank's proposed upgrades, which included a drive-through window at the bank.

Architect Pete Gillies, who was representing the project, told the Planning Board in December that there were other design possibilities, but financial constraints had come into play.

The last Key Bank proposal in front of the Planning Board was to renovate the actual building, along with several changes to the site that would include new planters, walkways and park benches. Problems arose when architects sought to place the bank's heating, ventilating and air conditioning equipment on the roof of building and make the three separate units of the building appear as one. They eventually decided to keep the HVAC system on the ground.

Board member John Smolinsky asked why the roof was flat even though the HVAC apparatus was going to remain on the ground level. Engineer Scott Allen of Woodward, Connors, Gillies and Sellemann responded by saying it was "functional to tie the building together."

Allen said his firm "tried to adhere to the hamlet guidelines" and create a two-story appearance even though the structure's roof varied greatly from each section of the building.

Many of the board members were wary of what they saw as a "big-box design."

"My main comment is that it's awfully boxy in a part of town where there's a lot of pitched roofs," Planning Board member Katherine McCarthy said in December. "I can tell you what I'm not looking for, a big box."

Fellow board member Kate Powers shared similar sentiments.

"I agree. I believe the comprehensive plan calls for sloped roofs. ... This is a major departure from what is there," Powers said of the renderings shown at the meeting. "This is a crucial area of town; this is the Four Corners; and this is the area everyone focuses on when they come to town. I think you can do better."

McCarthy added, "I'm also worried about setting a precedent."

Board member Christine Motta also agreed with the "boxiness" of the proposal, but said she did like the proposed pillars on the outside of the building.

Morelli said he hasn't decided out the renovation and said that Key Bank could come back to the planning board with the proposal or a new one.

"It was always a challenging site," Morelli said. "They just decided to put it on hold for now."

Care

Cunningham said Wickham had requested to live in the home.

Sayward moved into the New Salem home after taking over his position from a longtime former employee who had lived at the residence, he said.

Sayward's caretaker duties include a type of "night watchman" function because he lives at the reservoir and helps to keep the 497.9-acre plot secured around the clock, said Cunningham.

The assessed value of his ranch style home and three-bay garage is difficult to determine because it is a part of the Bethlehem Water District No. 1. New Scotland Assessor Donna McGinnis said the entire property is assessed at around $10.6 million, and Bethlehem pays the town an annual tax of $58,266.45. Out of that, nearly $32,000 goes to Albany County, $13,000 to New Scotland, and the rest goes toward election costs and emergency service districts.

There is no deal between New Scotland and Bethlehem in terms of supplying water and property tax exemptions, according to Cunningham.

"We pay taxes to the town of New Scotland on the water plant and they purchase water from us," he said. "New Scotland sets up special water districts and charges their residents for access to the water supply."

Although municipalities can request exemptions on real property tax outside of their borders for water and wastewater treatment plants if the respective municipalities agree to them, both New Scotland Supervisor Tom Dolin and Cunningham said they were unaware of the tax exemption, and Cunningham said he didn't believe one had been filed.

According to Section 406(3) of the state's Office of Real Property Services exemption manual, this can include "either a total or a partial exemption from taxation, special ad valorem levies and special assessments."

The section states the eligibility requirements in this case include that the municipality own the facility; it be outside its borders; it's a county, city, town or village with a population of less than 100,000; and it be used a water plant, pumping station, water-treatment plant, watershed or reservoir and include necessary connection and appurtenances.

"I'm sure someone has thought of this before, but I'll certainly look into it," Cunningham said of Section 406(3) eligibility. In a later conversation, Cunningham said the problem with the state exemption was that it had to be agreed on by the municipality that would lose out on the tax revenue.

According to the state exemption, Bethlehem could apply to New Scotland, Albany County and the Voorheesville School District for a tax break on the property.

"It's kind of a Pandora's Box because Albany County owns so many properties here in Bethlehem," Cunningham said. "If everyone started exempting each other, the whole thing would start to unravel."

Bethlehem does not pay taxes on Wickham's Selkirk home at the park because it is tax exempt from the school district, town and county. The home is described on the Bethlehem assessment Web site as an 840-square-foot single-family ranch, worth $116,400, which was built in 1940. The riverfront property it sits on is assessed at $75,700.

Cunningham described Wickham's caretaker duties as a sort of a "park ranger" to oversee the riverfront park. Wickham looks over the park, which has restrooms, a pavilion and a boat launch, after hours and on weekends.

Bethlehem tax collector Nancy Mendick said no taxes have been paid on the property since 2006, when $65.47 was paid to the town.

The home has since been exempt from town taxes.

In Guilderland, the town has done away with allowing officials to reside in town-owned property in exchange for caretaker duties.

Guilderland Supervisor Ken Runion said that Guilderland had done so in the past, but that "we've kind of gotten away from that." He added that it was beneficial for historical properties in particular because of the maintenance needs involved.

"There were good purposes for it. You did get rent for the property," said Runion, who added that it's not uncommon. "The state does the same thing when they lease their recreational facility."

Delay

McGuire said at the Tuesday, Jan. 20, Board of Education meeting. "Sometimes even good ideas aren't timely."

The committee's recommendation came in early November before Gov. David Paterson announced the $2.7 million state aid cut to the Guilderland Central School District in December.

McGuire said the committee met for more than a year before making the Nov. 5 report.

According to information provided by the school district, the estimated cost of the program ranges from $622,000 to $811,000, including special area teachers, classroom teachers, assistants, staffing, supplies, equipment and transportation.

According to the report, the state offers $883,000 of "full-day conversion aid," $60,000 of which would be put toward classroom rentals, an amount that still leaves a minimum $12,000 surplus for implementing the program. That $883,000 amount, however, is a one-time-only allocation, and the district would be responsible for funding the program after its first year.

McGuire said that conversion aid was not left out of the governor's proposal, but grant money allocated toward planning the conversion was.

The board of regents has called for full-day kindergarten but still requires legislation, according to the district. The report states that there is a growing body of research that indicates early childhood education is pivotal.

At its Jan. 20 meeting, the Guilderland Board of Education officially invited the public, via local cable broadcast, to help shape the upcoming school budget.

Richard Weisz, the president of the board, announced a series of meetings scheduled for the Citizens Budget Advisory Committee and asked concerned residents to join and help prioritize services and expenditures for 2009-2010.

"This year is going to be highly unusual," Weisz said.

The district is facing a decision on how to allocate emergency funds, which total upwards of $4.3 million, said Assistant Superintendent of Business Neil Sanders. In addition to the $4.3 million, the district has money allocated for other expenses, such as $93,340.40 for unemployment, $816,130.17 for employee benefits, $1,024,511.40 for workers' compensation, $55,015.65 for repair reserve, $125,120.29 for tax certiorari, and $319,094.52 for retirement contribution.

The first meeting of the citizen advisory committee is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, March 3, at Guilderland High School in the Large Group Instruction room.

There will also be an orientation for new members at 6:30 p.m. in the high school library. Additional meetings are planned for March 5, 12, 17, and 19, with the last date serving as a "spill over," or rain date, Weisz said.

Weisz said all residents are welcome to join, and no prior experience is needed. He added that sitting on the committee is a good way to gain the knowledge and experience necessary to become a member of the Board of Education.

McGuire said there were 26 members on last year's committee and the district will try to work with however many individuals apply.

Friday, Feb. 13, is the deadline to submit an e-mail or letter of intent to be on the committee.

For information, contact the office of the superintendent at 456-6200, ext. 3102.

Gillibrand tapped to be next senator

Paterson's surprise choice shakes up Upstate politics

By CHARLES WIFF
Spotlight Newspapers
wiffc@spotlightnews.com

Gov. David Paterson picked Congresswoman Kirsten Gillibrand, D-Hudson, to replace outgoing Sen. Hillary Clinton at a noon conference on Friday, Jan. 23. The announcement brought to an end weeks of speculation on who would replace the new secretary of state.

"I didn't ask for this responsibility, but it is my privilege and honor to execute our state statute this afternoon," said Paterson. "I believe I have found the best candidate to become the United States senator from New York."

Gillibrand acknowledged that she had not been in the forefront of discussion about Clinton's replacement.

"I realize that for many New Yorkers, this is the first time you've heard my name and you don't know much about me," said Gillibrand. "Over the next two years you will get to know me, and more importantly, I will get to know you."

Gillibrand will be sworn in on Tuesday, Jan. 27, by Vice President Joseph Biden. Between her being named as Paterson's pick and her swearing in, Gillibrand has engaged in an impromptu "listening tour," said her spokeswoman Rachel McEneny. Stops have already been made in the New York City area, and the congresswoman plans to visit Western New York and Long Island in the coming weeks.

"While most senatorial offices have three months to do a Senate transition, we have two days," McEneny said. "It's been a mad rush meeting with folks from all communities."

At Friday's ceremony, Gillibrand briefly outlined her plans for her time in the U.S. Senate, of which she will have at least two years until a special election in 2010, when it will be decided who will fill out the final two years of Clinton's term. The federal government's stimulus package was on the top of her list.

"We are all painfully aware that New York has been hit by this recession," said Gillibrand. "I intend to listen to all my constituents, and all my colleagues in government, to be a part of this solution."

She said she also wants to make infrastructure improvements, most notably the construction of a high-speed rail across the state. Gillibrand also called for middle-class tax cuts, education tax credits, a greater share of Medicaid payment from the federal government and investment in energy solutions.

Gillibrand won her second bid to represent New York's 20th Congressional District in November, taking a healthy percentage of the vote in the Republican-leaning district. The 42-year-old mother of two served in the Department of Housing and Urban Development during President Bill Clinton's years (under Andrew Cuomo, whose name often appeared on a short list of potential candidates for Paterson) and was assisted in her first election by top Clinton advisor Howard Wolfson.

She is a member of the exclusive group of Blue Dog Democrats, a consortium of fewer than 50 Democratic House members whose political stances are right leaning. Gillibrand secured votes in the 20th partly because of her conservative positions on gun control, stem cell research and driver's licenses for illegal immigrants. She was also a strong supporter of 2008's Farm Bill.

Gillibrand resides in Hudson with her husband and two sons. She gave birth to her youngest child, Henry, last year.

Her win against four-term incumbent John Sweeney in 2006 gave credence to her political savvy, as she rolled out what was a well-run, well-funded campaign for a first-time candidate. More than one political pundit was taken by surprise that November when she won by six points.

Though the former New York

City lawyer has not made Downstate issues part of her political life — and has drawn some fire from members of her party for it — on Friday she pledged to work for the whole state, not just her former district.

"I will look for ways to find common ground between Upstate and Downstate," she said, mentioning working to reduce gun violence while preserving hunters' rights.

Sen. Charles Schumer, D-Brooklyn, who backed Gillibrand for the post, applauded the fact that Paterson chose an Upstate representative.

"The problems of Upstate are critical to our whole state," he said. "Having someone who is actually from Upstate is a huge plus."

Other Downstate Democrats have decried Gillibrand's selection, however, pointing to her NRA "A" rating and gun rights advocacy. Long Island Congresswoman Carolyn McCarthy — an outspoken gun control advocate — is reportedly already putting together a run against Gillibrand in 2010.

McEneny said that with time, Gillibrand will prove herself to those who aren't familiar with her politics or accomplishments.

"We will be reaching out to many of those people," she said. "I think that what many people in the 20th Congressional liked about their representative was her accessibility and her ability to look at the whole district."

Early on, many speculated that Caroline Kennedy would be sent to the Senate in the one-vote election. Though early polls showed that New Yorkers favored her, several unflattering interviews and an otherwise botched campaign rollout soured the public on her. She withdrew from consideration early on Thursday, citing an unnamed "personal reason."

Gillibrand's name was rarely uttered in talks of who would replace Clinton. Paterson made a policy of rebuffing any talk of the choice, often admonishing those who engaged in speculation.

Gillibrand could help Paterson in many ways, though. Now having both inherited their offices, they will be facing re-election in 2010. Though a young up-and-comer, Gillibrand has already won favor with many in Upstate New York and is a woman, perhaps winning Paterson favor in key demographics.

Paterson dismissed such assumptions.

"This decision was not based on gender, sexual orientation, race, religion or regional base. This decision was based on who was best for the job," he said at Friday's ceremony.

A special election will be held in the 20th to select Gillibrand's replacement. Many have said that Republicans will have a likely chance of recapturing the seat, given a lack of Democratic candidates who could capture Republican votes as easily as Gillibrand did. Democrats have a healthy lead on Republicans in the House, though.

Though a ballot is far from finalized, the field has already been inundated with hopefuls.

Assembly Minority Leader James Tedisco announced his candidacy early on Friday and is the apparent GOP frontrunner, with an endorsement already won from the Saratoga County Republican Committee. Saratoga is the most densely populated county in the district, with about 30 percent of the possible votes. Though his Assembly District is largely composed of the Schenectady area, it does reach as far north as Saratoga Springs, where he owns a home. In New York, one does not need to live in the district to run in it.

Other possible Republican contenders include Sandy Treadwell, who was defeated by Gillibrand in the recent election, and state Sen. Betty Little.

Democrats who are running or considering a bid include Saratoga County Democratic Committee Chairman Larry Bulman; failed candidate for the 112th Assembly District Mike Russo; Saratoga Springs Department of Public Works Commissioner Ron Kim; and Coxsack Supervisor Alex Betke. A number of candidates in last year's crowded race for the 21st District have been mentioned, as well, including Tracey Brooks and Darius Shahinfar.

The timing of the election is entirely up to Paterson. According to Bob Brehm, a spokesman for the state Board of Elections, an election will be held within 30 to 40 days from the date the governor issues a proclamation, but Paterson can issue it at any time he chooses.

"There is no deadline scheduled for when he must issue his proclamation," said Brehm. "It's at the discretion of the governor."

If Paterson fails to issue a proclamation, the seat will be decided in the 2010 election.

Music brought Jane Rothfield and Linda Schrade and their husbands together about 20 years ago.

Rothfield plays the fiddle and the banjo, and her husband, Allan Carr, plays guitar and bass. Schrade also plays the guitar, and her husband, Dave Kiphuth, plays the banjo and dobro, a combination steel guitar with a five-string banjo neck.

Two decades ago, Rothfield and Carr were living in Scotland. Schrade and Kiphuth made their home in New Hampshire.

But both couples traveled around the U.S. to play their instruments and enjoy traditional music. When their paths crossed, there was an instant connection.

"We just liked each other right off," Schrade said.

Both couples coincidentally moved to the Capital District years later. But as much as they may have wanted to revisit those days of playing together, they were busy working and raising their families.

"Circumstances didn't make it possible," Rothfield said.

Circumstances have a way of changing, though. Their kids have grown, and recently, music brought the couples back together. They formed a band, Red Hen, which is going to play at Old Songs in Voorheesville Saturday, Jan. 31, at 8 p.m.

Carr and Rothfield have a thick catalog of original songs. They couldn't perform the tunes by themselves, though, Rothfield said. Schrade and Kiphuth have proved the perfect complement.

"Our voices blended really, really well," Rothfield said, noting all four band members sing. "It just really blended beautifully."

Schrade said another key is that "we have the right instrument mix."

Beyond that, "We just like each other. We get along well," she said.

Schrade, who owns Saratoga Beads, grew up in Delmar and took up the guitar when she was 14. She loved to sing and needed an instrument to back herself.

As she got older, Schrade started to attend musical festivals. At one, she met Kiphuth, who had been "totally smitten" with the banjo since the first time he'd heard someone play the instrument.

Soon, the two were smitten with each other. Schrade called music "a really good connecting force."

She and Kiphuth played together in New Hampshire in a band called First Ticket. Later, after they had their daughter, they moved to Saratoga to be closer to family.

Schrade said Red Hen, whose repertoire includes old time, country and bluegrass music, has "kept that festival feeling."

That means high-energy shows that are fun for all ages.

"We'll make you smile," she said.

Rothfield promised "fabulous harmonies and fabulous instrumentals." Red Hen's previous shows have gotten an "incredible response" from audiences, and she's particularly excited about performing at Old Songs, where she does a lot of work.

"They just put on the best traditional music," she said.

Rothfield, who co-owns Rothfield-Daniels Media Services, teaches banjo workshops at Old Songs, as well as across the country. She also teaches fiddle classes and performs with Jane's Gang, a contra dance band, and Donna Hebert in Groovemama. In addition, she plays southern style dance music with fellow banjo player Hilarie Burhans and pianist Bernie Nau.

Fellow band members have similar resumes that are heavy on playing and teaching. Kiphuth was part of the 1970s bluegrass band Apple Country, which was hugely popular in New England, and both he and his wife have both taught at banjo camps. Carr is a prolific song writer and performs often with Rothfield.

Jimmy McCown, another banjo and fiddler player who has a long history with the Red Hen members, will join the band at Old Songs.

"You'll hear old friends playing together," Schrade said. "It will be a really fun night."

Old Songs Community Arts Center will host "Music from Kentucky and Beyond," a concert featuring Red Hen and Jimmy McCown, Saturday, Jan. 31, at 8 p.m. Tickets are $15 for adults and $5 for children 12 or younger. They can be purchased by calling 765-2815. Old Songs is at 37 S. Main St. in Voorheesville.

isn't bad when compared to the prospect of cutting sports. So what if varsity teams can't play non-league games or if modified teams get fewer games? At least, there are teams for kids to play on. They're not being denied an opportunity to play, and for that parents and administrators should be grateful.

I realize that any decrease in the number of options athletes have is undesirable, but we all have to realize that the opportunity to play is not an entitlement - it is a privilege. The state doesn't have to offer an annual Olympic-style event for its amateur athletes. School districts don't have to offer their middle and high school students interscholastic sports. They do so because they want to.

So when the money isn't there to offer the same amount of sports as we have grown accustomed to, perhaps we should be grateful that sports are being offered at all.

With that said, here is this week's girls basketball power rankings.

Class AA

1. Schenectady (15-1) - I don't necessarily expect the Patriots to win the Sectional title, but they've been the most consistent team in the poll
2. Shenendehowa (12-3) - What the Plainsmen lack in experience (five new starters), they make up for in defensive execution
3. Bethlehem (9-5) - There's no shame in a two-point loss at Mohonasen, arguably the best team in the Suburban Council
4. Niskayuna (9-4) - The Silver

Warriors' 56-54 victory over Bethlehem last Wednesday was negated by a 34-31 loss at Saratoga two days later

5. Albany (7-7) - Keep an eye on the Falcons, who sit in second place in the Big 10

Class A

1. Holy Names (14-0) - If it were up to me, I'd rank Holy Names ahead of every Class AA team because I believe it could beat anybody
2. Mohonasen (12-2) - The Mighty Warriors have beaten many of the top Class AA teams
3. Averill Park (12-3) - So have the Warriors
4. Lansingburgh (9-5) - The Knights are building some momentum entering the home stretch of the regular season
5. South Glens Falls (8-6) - The Bulldogs pulled off a nice win against Foothills Council leader Johnstown Saturday

Class B

1. Fonda (12-1) - The Braves have yet to lose a Western Athletic Conference game
2. Hoosic Valley (14-1) - The Panthers are looking very strong in the Wasaren League
3. Johnstown (13-2) - A win against Glens Falls Friday would go a long way to securing the Foothills Council title
4. Catskill (12-4) - The Cats have struggled a bit of late, but they are still a team to watch come Sectionals
5. Cohoes (8-6) - Being in the same league as Holy Names, Lansingburgh and Voorheesville will toughen up the Tigers for Sectionals

Class C

1. Maple Hill (14-1) - Only Catskill and Greenville have realistic chances of denying the Wildcats a perfect Patroon Conference record
2. Lake George (11-3) - Rachael Ray's alma mater has owned its Adirondack League competition
3. Whitehall (12-2) - The Railroaders looked like they were going to steamroll their way through the Adirondacks until Lake George beat them 51-43 last Monday
4. Stillwater (11-3) - The Warriors are on a five-game winning streak
5. Voorheesville (11-4) - The Blackbirds are hanging on to second place in the Colonial Council, but they'll need to run the table in their last four games to keep at least a share of it

Class D

1. Germantown (15-0) - The Clippers keep sailing along in the Central Hudson Valley League
 2. Argyle (9-3) - The Scots are one of those teams that always seem to reach the Sectional finals
 3. Berlin (8-1) - The Mountaineers have won their last three games by an average margin of 19 points
 4. Northville (8-5) - Owning a winning record in the WAC as a Class D team is quite an accomplishment
 5. Hartford (7-5) - Like Argyle, the Tanagers tend to peak during Sectionals
- Look for the updated boys basketball power rankings in next week's edition.

Big

24-21 lead.

However, Shen (10-1 league, 12-3 overall) had a hard time putting Guilderland (3-8, 7-8) away. The Lady Dutch closed the gap to one point on three occasions in the fourth quarter, but they couldn't get the basket they needed to re-take the lead.

Shen struggled with its foul shots in the fourth quarter, making two of its first 12 attempts before hitting two out of four free throws in the final minute to seal the victory.

Setter finished with 11 points, and Ray added seven points for the Plainsmen, who were coming off a double overtime victory over Burnt Hills-Ballston Lake the previous night.

Melissa Winne netted 10 points before fouling out, and Erin Kelly chipped in eight points for Guilderland.

Alsante saves Dutchmen

Goaltender Mike Alsante came up big for the Guilderland hockey team in a 3-1 Capital District High School Hockey League victory over Bethlehem last Saturday at Union College.

Alsante stopped 32 of the 33 shots he faced including a penalty shot to help the Dutchmen (6-4-0 league, 7-8-0 overall) earn a key victory in their pursuit of a playoff spot.

Greg Warnken scored two goals, and Collin Burg added a goal and an assist for Guilderland.

Eric Halek scored off a feed from Kenny Jack, and goalie Alex Cooper made 20 saves for Bethlehem (3-3-1, 7-6-1).

Both teams played tight, physical defense, but Shen got just enough production from Allie Setter and Marissa Ray to pull out a 34-29 victory over Guiderland.

Setter scored seven points, and Ray added five points during a 12-2 Shen spurt in the third quarter that turned a 19-12 deficit into a

The Mohonasen boys basketball team stayed within a half game of first place in the Suburban Council South Division with a 71-61 victory over Bethlehem as part of Sunday's Coaches vs. Cancer Tournament at Albany's Times Union Center.

Bethlehem (4-6 league, 4-10 overall) had a 16-12 lead at the end of the first quarter, but Mohonasen (7-2, 9-4) made that disappear by outscoring the Eagles 14-5 in the second quarter.

Bethlehem stayed close to Mohonasen in the second half behind the hot shooting of Ryan Prinzo, who finished with a team-high 15 points. The Mighty Warriors were able to pull away at the end, though, with a 27-point fourth quarter.

Jordan Macejka netted 22 points, while Nick Battaglia and Anthony Robustiano each added 15 points for Mohonasen.

Guiderland (8-2, 10-4) kept its hold on first place in the South Division with last Friday's 61-49 victory over Colonie.

The Dutchmen used a 20-11 second quarter to give themselves an 11-point halftime lead over the Garnet Raiders (5-3, 7-5).

Jon Terry scored 23 points, and Kevin Kost contributed 12 points for Guiderland, which has won three games in a row since a 65-44 loss to Columbia Jan. 15.

Sean Peer had 16 points, Herb Tedford chipped in 15 points and Kyle Mafriki added 10 points for Colonie.

Guiderland and Bethlehem are off until Friday, when they both play cross-divisional games. Guiderland hosts Burnt Hills-Ballston Lake from the North Division, while Bethlehem travels to Ballston Spa.

Sports not immune from money woes

We have a new reality in our sports scene.

Athletes may have fewer opportunities to play as budgets are being tightened in the face of shortfalls at the state level.

The Empire State Games is asking its athletes to pay a fee to cover room, board and transportation as it cuts back on the number of sports it offers.

Meanwhile, the New York State Public High School Athletic Association is asking its 11 sections to cut back on the number of games its teams play during the regular season to save some money.

All of this comes in anticipation that there will be large cuts in state aid to many state agencies and school districts — a result of the ongoing collapse on Wall Street, which supplies New York with a healthy percentage of its tax revenue.

There is already a huge outcry from the sports community about the proposals. Organizers for this year's Empire State Games in Poughkeepsie decided they don't want to host the annual statewide event because of the cuts in state aid, which has also led to the elimination of three scholastic division sports and all open division and masters events. Back in Albany, Section II football chairman Gary VanDerzee is encouraging people to contact NYSPHSAA to protest its proposal to cut back the number of games.

The protests won't likely change the minds of the Empire State Games of NYSPHSAA, though. When there's less money to work with, something has to give.

It's not as though the proposals are way out of line. The $285 fee the Empire States Games wants to charge its scholastic-level athletes for the summer games is less than what parents would have to spend over four days for hotel rooms, meals and gas. Granted, it seems unfair because athletes have not had to pay to participate in the Empire State Games in years past, but the state's revenue stream has not been this bad in decades.

At the high school level, cutting the number of games teams play

Maria College offers a world of possibilities

By MARTHA FASHOUER

The author is director of marketing and development at Maria College.

If you've had any experience at all in New York's Capital District, chances are, you know Maria. Maybe you've been a patient in an area hospital or had to place a parent in a nursing home. Perhaps you've enrolled your child in nursery school, needed occupational therapy or visited a lawyer's office. If so, you've probably met Maria — a Maria graduate, that is.

Over the years, the community has come to depend upon the skills and services of Maria College's graduates, in these professions and more. And with a student/faculty ratio of 14 to 1 and a 96 percent placement rate after graduation, for Maria students, the possibilities are endless.

Ask students why they chose Maria, and you'll get many answers. While "traditional" students (attending college directly out of high school) are part of the Maria community, "nontraditional" students are represented as well — those who are changing or looking to advance careers, or those older students attending college for the first time. This population, rich with diversity, is one we're proud of, and is proof of our belief that learning must be a lifelong pursuit.

"Maria College provides a top-quality education that has given me the confidence and knowledge to pursue a new career path," said Shawn Griffin, a 2008 graduate. "The faculty really cares about my education and future. Maria College has inspired me to pass this on to others. It's the start of my journey toward helping people."

Educating students for more than 50 years, Maria College is committed to the same values today as it was at its founding:

academic excellence and service to the community — two things that never go out of style.

Maria is an independent two-year college offering both associate degree and certificate programs to over 1,000 students from throughout the Capital District. Part of the Conference for Mercy Higher Education and affiliated with many outstanding four-year colleges and universities, Maria strives to deliver its programs to students of any age through high academic standards, convenient scheduling formats, and within a warm encouraging environment.

Pursue a well-rounded education while exploring courses that will help you develop your interests and talents. Get to know Maria's Career Placement and Campus Ministry offices; take advantage of the full-time campus Counseling Center. Innovative and flexible scheduling formats make it possible to complete your degree on your schedule, with day, evening, weekend and online classes available. Most credits easily transfer to four-year schools. With a Maria degree, you really can start here, and go anywhere.

"Maria College provided me an excellent opportunity as a young faculty member to develop and master my profession in a caring, low-stress environment," said Peter Byrne, a professor of psychology/liberal arts. "The opportunity to work alongside some exemplary faculty, who model dedication, sincerity and, above all, excellence, has gone a long way to help me meet my professional goals."

Two-year degree programs include: accounting, computer information systems, early childhood education studies, liberal arts, management, nursing, occupational therapy assistant, paralegal and research technologist. Certificate programs include: bereavement studies, gerontology, licensed practical nurse, paralegal and teaching assistant.

The online option

Maria's already flexible scheduling options have been enhanced even further to include online courses. Choose from a variety of courses that make learning easy and comfortable with great interaction with its faculty, even online. Through online courses, students attend class, participate in discussions and submit assignments, all via their personal computer and the Internet. Most online courses are completed within the timeline of a regular semester.

Ties to the community

At Maria, serving the community is not just a value that we strive to pass on to our students, it's something we're actively involved in every day. Our commitment to service is shown in the partnership between Maria College and The Maria Campus School, a pre-K through kindergarten teaching laboratory, right here on campus, for students enrolled in the early childhood education degree program. Our commitment to service is also evidenced every time an occupational therapy assistant student interns at a local rehabilitation center, or a nursing student graduates and works at a nearby hospital. The Maria values of caring and compassionate service don't just stay on our campus. We're not just teaching it. We're living it.

Scholarship. Respect. Integrity. Compassion. Service. Community. These six core values support Maria's teaching mission: education for service. Grounded in the humanities, its curriculum seeks to instill respect for the dignity of each person, and is dedicated to transforming learned skills into caring service, which is the mission of the Sisters of Mercy who founded and sponsor the college. Since the college was founded in 1958, that mission has been upheld, and today, Maria enjoys a strong relationship with the community at large, continuing its mission of service in today's technologically driven environments, and enabling future needs to be anticipated and met.

Consider applying for financial aid

As part of your educational planning process, you should consider applying for financial aid. Maria is a cost-effective path to earning your two-year degree and either seeking employment, or transferring the credits you earn to a four-year college. Financial aid is available to student in all scheduling formats.

Making connections

While the focus of everything we do at Maria is the best interest of our current students, the students that have passed through the college and on to other endeavors are just as important in carrying the Maria name and experience out into the community. From nurses to teachers to businessmen and women, from New England to Alaska to our own hometowns in the Capital District, Maria graduates are making a difference in the world.

Maria College is chartered by the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York and its programs are registered with the New York State Education Department. Maria College is accredited by the Commission on Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools. The Commission on Higher Education is an institutional accrediting agency recognized by the U.S. Secretary of Education and the Commission on Recognition of Post-secondary Accreditation.

Credit unions a safe haven in a difficult economy

Consumers looking for a safe harbor during today's financial turmoil need look no further than their local credit union. Credit unions as a whole are healthy, well-capitalized financial institutions with strong balance sheets.

Credit unions are a unique financial institution set apart by a philosophy of "people helping people" in a cooperative spirit. Credit unions are owned by their members, and they are responsible to their members. They are not focused on providing high returns to outside stockholders who may not even have any deposits or loans with the institution. Credit unions are not-for-profit organizations, and any earnings are given back to the members in the form of lower fees, higher dividends on savings, lower interest rates on loans, or enhanced services.

Credit unions have always been and continue to be very conservative and responsible in their investments. Funds are invested primarily in loans to members in their local communities. Credit unions have steered clear of any subprime mortgage lending, which is one of the reasons for the problems being experienced by some financial institutions. Other credit union investments that are not in loans to members are also very conservative and non-speculative.

Savings at credit unions are federally insured by the full faith and credit of the U.S. Government. The National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund (NCUSIF) is an insurance fund similar to the FDIC and insures savings up to $250,000. You can obtain insurance coverage over $250,000 by having a combination of different ownership titles on accounts such as individual, joint, trust and payable-on-death. In addition, there is separate insurance coverage of up to $250,000 for individual retirement accounts (IRAs). The NCUSIF is administered by the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA), the federal agency that supervises, regulates and charters all federal credit unions.

Credit unions have weathered every financial upheaval since the depression of the 1930s without ever costing taxpayers a penny or compromising their members' deposits. The recent failures within the financial industry have proven just how important it is for Americans to have a cooperative, not-for-profit financial option.

If you live or work in any of the five counties of Albany, Schenectady, Saratoga, Schoharie or Rensselaer, you are eligible to become a member of First New York Federal Credit Union. First New York has been serving our community for more than 70 years and currently has more than 28,000 members. The credit union has seven convenient locations and offers a complete array of financial products and services. First New York is committed to serving our local community and our lending is directed only to our local community. If you have any questions, we invite you to call 393-1326, visit our Web site at www.firstnewyork.org or stop by any of our branch offices and meet with our dedicated staff. Remember, we're here to serve our members and to keep their accounts safe and secure. That is, and always has been, our way of doing business.

Pioneer offers local solution for a national problem

By JOHN M. SCARCHILLI

The author is president and CEO of Pioneer Bank.

The nation's economy is struggling, facing perhaps its worst crisis since The Great Depression. In response, we have seen many plans that offer solutions at a national level - government bailout plans, capital injections for the auto industry, government support of Wall Street. But our national problem is our local problem, too. Foreclosures, layoffs and declining home values impact every community across our country. Community banks, however, have weathered this financial storm better than most of their national counterparts. It is in this success that we can find a local solution for our national problem.

Throughout our 120-year history, Pioneer Bank has remained true to helping local people and businesses with their banking needs. We are connected to the community at every level - our employees are local people, we support local organizations and charities, and we are exclusively focused on local consumers and businesses. This connectivity allows us to work within the community to build strong and secure financial futures for our neighbors, including individuals, businesses and municipalities. This close relationship and commitment to strengthening the local community and local economy is a platform shared by hometown banks across the country. We are proud to be a local bank with roots in the community spanning generations.

We provide the lending that allows our communities' businesses to grow and prosper. By remaining true to our customers and keeping our focus on providing them with suitable, responsible loans, hometown banks strengthen communities across New York and beyond.

Fenimore Asset Management keeps a tradition of giving

FRANK J. PRIVITERA

The writer is an associate at Fenimore Asset Management in Cobleskill.

...
"Mankind was my business. The common welfare was my business; charity, mercy, forbearance, and benevolence were, all, my business. The dealings of my trade were but a drop of water in the comprehensive ocean of my business!"
...

Jacob Marley's ghost speaks these words to Scrooge in Charles Dickens' famous novel, A Christmas Carol.

A good friend of Fenimore Asset Management, Mike Saccocio, the executive director of the extraordinary City Mission of Schenectady, recently spoke to a group of Fenimore employees. He eloquently reiterated the importance of helping lighten the burden of those in need and wove poignant scenes from A Christmas Carol into his talk. Mike highlighted the quote, "Mankind was my business." He explained that when we come alongside the downtrodden and support them in a manner that dignifies and strengthens them, not only are we improving their lives and impacting society positively, but our own burdens become lighter.

At Fenimore, we try our best to lend a hand to those in trouble and treat others the way we would like to be treated. Tom Putnam founded the firm in 1974 as a means to manage family money after the sale of Fenimore Fabrics, a textile company named after famous local author James Fenimore Cooper. Just as important as Tom's vision to establish a patient, consistent, long-term value approach to investing, was his passion for investing in the community.

For more than three decades, Fenimore and its associates have donated significant human and financial resources to a variety of charities and worthy causes throughout the Capital District. From serving on not-for-profit boards and participating in companywide acts of service, to maintaining our Contribution Committee and specified level of annual monetary support, we have not wavered from Tom's original commitment. And our vision is that Fenimore's care for the needy will continue for many generations.

The culmination of Fenimore's tradition of giving is our annual charity FAM 5K "Fund" Run/Walk. Since 1994, we have held the FAM 5K each September, and the event has grown to more than 750 participants and 200 volunteers. It is a fun-filled, memorable day in the spirit of family, good health, charity and service.

Each year the proceeds from the race are donated to one of five different local charities on a rotating basis: Catholic Charities of Schoharie County, Catskill Area Hospice & Palliative Care, Habitat for Humanity, Schoharie County ARC, and Schoharie County Community Action Program. The goal is to help raise awareness about each organization while providing financial resources.

Jacob Marley is condemned to walk the earth as a spirit and watch others be joyful because he did nothing but count his money while alive. Although he was an excellent businessman, he learned in death that he had missed the point of life. While we have breath, may we all remember to make mankind our business.

Thoughts on students, laptops and Internet safety

By GEORGE REPICKY

The author is a science and computer teacher at Saint Gregory's School.

Listening to talk shows whose guests include financial experts, one is repeatedly reminded that the decisions regarding investments involve balancing security and growth — very safe investments typically yield minimal growth, yet investors opting for strong growth do so at a loss of security.

It strikes me that parents — and by extension, teachers — frequently face the same dichotomy in decisions regarding their children and students. Decisions such as when to let go of the back of the two-wheeler and let a nascent Lance Armstrong on his own for the first time, or permitting a budding adolescent to attend that first girl-boy party, or handing the keys to the car to a newly licensed teen for his first solo trip test our ability to strike the proper balance between security and growth. We all want security for our charges, yet we know that the growth into independent, self-sufficient adults, which we all desire for our children, can only come if we trust them to experience the world around them.

My own personal philosophy has been to trust my children — and students — to make sound decisions unless they prove my trust to be ill-placed; but, they also know that should they betray my trust, it will take considerable time and effort to regain it.

Note that I am not speaking of blind, unthinking trust. The late Ronald Reagan probably said it best when speaking of arm control negotiations; his motto was "Trust but verify."

We watch the young cyclist carefully before we let go, and we make sure that first time is on a benign surface such as a grassy field; before permission is granted for the party, we call to make sure that parents will be present; and we require that that young driver has demonstrated skill and judgment in our presence, and perhaps make those first trips brief and into non-hostile traffic conditions. And, generally, we are rewarded for our trust — the cyclist completes his Tour de Ballfield

"Mommy Rule" — If you wouldn't be comfortable having your mother watching over your shoulder, you shouldn't be there.

Second, listen to your child. He will frequently bring up — perhaps obliquely, and perhaps only after an extended conversation about other things — concerns he has regarding internet use. If he seems to have more to say, he probably has — and it might be important. In this regard, a child may sometimes want to discuss the actions of a friend or neighbor; he may be concerned enough about the danger of another child's actions that he is willing to break the childhood code of silence to help him.

Third, consider limiting the duration and/or location of internet use. This used to be easier in the prewireless days. The computer(s) were in one room, usually a general-use room such as a family room or den, because that's where the internet connection was. However, there's nothing wrong with requiring computer use to be limited to one or a few rooms. Likewise, limiting the amount of time spent on line is probably beneficial not just for a child's safety but for his general development as well.

The Internet is a wonderful tool — at once exciting and informative, yet not without its sinister side. With effort and attention we can enable our children to benefit from its wonder, and avoid its hazards.

successfully, the party-goer proves to be a thoughtful guest, and the young driver returns unscathed.

What prompted these musings was a question of what steps we parents and teachers can take to support effective yet appropriate use of that amazing yet somewhat problematic resource, the Internet. After some thought, several suggestions come to mind.

First, talk to your children. Make sure they clearly know your expectations regarding internet use — in particular, the avoidance of adult-oriented chat rooms and Web sites. (This is relevant even if a child is using a system with content-screening software. No content screening software is perfect — objectionable sites slip through, and some valuable ones are blocked. And, of course, a child learning his way around the program, or learning its override password, is not unheard of.) But children do tend to listen to parents, and will behave — most of the time, anyway — according to their parents' wishes, especially if those wishes are clearly expressed. At school, I emphasize the

Roth IRA owners have some options

By ROBERT L. WOLFF

The two major benefits of the Roth IRAs that appeal to taxpayers are that qualified distributions from a Roth IRA are tax free and Roth IRAs are not subject to traditional IRA minimum distribution rules. As a result of these benefits, taxpayers will often convert all or part of their traditional IRA into a Roth IRA.

The major drawback to converting to a Roth IRA, is that the amount converted to the Roth IRA from the traditional IRA is subject to income taxation in the year of conversion. Typically, the Taxpayer has taken the tax liability into consideration and has assumed the combination of a rising stock market and tax free income from the Roth IRA will offset the tax liability incurred upon conversion. As long as the stock market cooperates, the conversion works, but what happens if the stock market were to decline substantially after the conversion from a traditional IRA to a Roth IRA. The combination of falling value of Roth IRA's portfolio and income taxes on gain that is no longer there can be very negative.

This past has not been a good year for investors in the stock market. One particular group adversely affected by the market downturn are individuals that

Golisano gives $10M to Niagara University

Rochester philanthropist commits money to new science building

B. Thomas Golisano, a Rochester businessman and philanthropist, is convinced his latest investment is well worth it. On Oct. 8, the Paychex founder and chairman, and Buffalo Sabres owner, joined the Rev. Joseph L. Levesque, C.M., president of Niagara University, to announce a commitment of $10 million to support construction of a new science building that will radically alter the teaching and research environment at the university.

The gift is the largest in Niagara's 152-year history.

Levesque said the gift, which will be applied to the university's $80 million capital campaign, "The Promise of Niagara," pushed the amount raised to date past the $50 million mark. Partial funding for the new interdisciplinary sciences center, estimated to cost $25 million, is included in the campaign.

"I am delighted to announce that this unprecedented act of generosity will forever be acknowledged in the name of the building, which will be called the B. Thomas Golisano Center for Integrated Sciences," Levesque said. "Clearly, the support you are providing for the science building is an expression of great confidence in the direction our program is taking. But your gift also represents a major investment in the future of Western New York, a future that Niagara University will help to shape, with your assistance, through the contributions of our students and through the research that will take place here."

Levesque said the new state-of-the-art facility will allow the university to prepare students for work in the region's emerging biotech industry and for advanced studies at research universities. He spoke before an enthusiastic crowd that attended a press conference, which was held adjacent to the site of the new science building.

Golisano said the university's comprehensive plans for advancing science education convinced him to designate the science building for his first major gift in the Buffalo/Niagara area.

"I commend your thoughtful attention and careful plans to 'radically alter science instruction at NU' and better prepare our future young scientists through this innovative and integrated science curriculum," he said.

With members of the board of trustees, students, faculty and staff expressing their delight, Golisano presented Levesque with the first of five annual installments of $2 million.

NU's plans call for construction of a 44,000-square-foot science center to replace DePaul Hall, a facility that has housed the university's science programs since 1961. The new two-story science center will provide more space and flexibility for today's integrated learning environment and interdisciplinary approach to the sciences. Biology, chemistry, physics, bioinformatics and computational chemistry students and faculty will all have access to advanced instrumentation either as individuals or as members of a study team. At the same time, the center will permit greater collaboration with NU's partners in other educational, clinical and industrial settings.

Over the last five years, NU faculty and students, supported by the university's Academic Center for Integrated Sciences, have partnered with researchers in the Buffalo Medical Complex, the State University at Buffalo, Roswell Park Cancer Institute and the Heart Center of Niagara in collaborative research projects focused on finding solutions to important health and community problems.

Levesque said the university intends to begin the project as soon as additional funding is in place, with the expectation that it will be completed by the fall of 2011. The current capital campaign is seeking to raise $16.5 million toward the total cost of the $25 million science center.

Levesque said Golisano's gift has provided "tremendous impetus" toward achieving the campaign goal, adding, "Our hope and prayer is that your incredible generosity will inspire others to support us in our quest to fulfill 'The Promise of Niagara.'"

A native of Irondequoit, a suburb of Rochester, Golisano founded Paychex Inc. in 1971 and currently serves as chairman of the board. He was president and chief executive officer of the company until October 2004.

Headquartered in Rochester, Paychex provides payroll, human resources, and benefit-outsourcing services for small- to medium-sized businesses. The company has more than 100 offices and serves about 572,000 payroll clients nationwide.

Golisano has consistently been recognized for his entrepreneurial, civic and philanthropic achievements and endeavors. Since the late 1990s, his personal philanthropy has totaled more than $100 million. Most has been directed at educational institutions, hospitals and organizations in the Rochester area. He also founded the B. Thomas Golisano Foundation, which awards grants to organizations dedicated to providing opportunities and support for individuals with developmental disabilities and their families.

Mildred Elley students get down to business

Mildred Elley is in the business of putting you in the business.

Now located at 855 Central Ave. in Albany, the business school is bustling on its own campus and features three separate entities for its students, including the Mildred Elley School of Business and Technology, the School of Digital Media Arts and the School of Health and Wellness.

With nearly 600 students enrolled at Mildred Elley, the school is growing by leaps and bounds, but with a new campus there's still plenty of room for new people looking to start an exciting new career in any number of fields.

Mildred Elley offers diplomas, certificates, and it is nationally recognized by the Council for Higher Education Accreditation.

Students can choose from courses at the business schools in banking, accounting, finance, sales, and business management, as well as training for not-for-profit and government jobs. Other programs include hospitality and travel management, information technology and professional office management.

At the Health and Wellness school, students can become state-certified massage therapists or medical assistants. At the Digital Arts School, students can earn a degree in digital graphics and multimedia design and begin working in as little as two years.

The biggest change to the school came last year, according to Dean of Academic Affairs Malisa Lurie, when the school moved to its own campus on Central Avenue.

"We had moved from our previous locations at the mall in Latham and now have a campus for the schools," Lurie said. "The student culture here has changed, and we have a brand new technology lab. Everything is top of the line for them now."

Lurie said that enrollment has "increased significantly" since the move, which she attributed a change of bus schedule that now drops students off right in front of the building 24/7, and being downtown next to the actual businesses students train for has led to more job opportunities.

"We help place the students with employment even before they graduate," Lurie said. "Now businesses actually call us looking for recruits."

The school's mission is the very heart of what it does daily: provide quality career education and technical training to allow students of diverse educational, cultural and personal backgrounds to become successful in an ever-changing global economy.

Catering to working adults, Mildred Elley offers a flexible schedule and "can accommodate any lifestyle out there."

Starting in 1917, after World War I left a shortage of office workers in the Capital District, Mildred Elley is one of the nation's first business schools, and it is still going today, 87 years later. Because of the war, many new positions in the work force previously held by men were opened up to women who quickly became excited about the opportunity to fill the well-paid office positions.

A group of women turned to Augusta Mildred Elley who began teaching typing shorthand at her 245 Quail St. home in Albany. In 1919, 50 students graduated from the first class, and in 1927 the school was moved to a "modern commercial building" at 227 Quail St.

"With our own campus, we have our own identity and place to call home," Lurie said. "We're providing services to our students that we couldn't before and very proud of what we do here."

Visit www.mildred-elley.edu for information or to take a virtual tour of the school.

Stand-by generators can offer peace of mind

Here's a familiar headline: "Thousands without power - More than 240,000 without electrical service, takes days to restore."

Recent storms have left a fresh reminder of how cold a home can get and how quickly damage can occur when there is power loss.

You worry about the unknown - how many days before the power is restored? No operative systems will mean a continuation of no heat, no lights, loss of perishables - and for many - no water and no sump pump. After power is restored you find out that the resulting damage created by frozen pipes, water in basements and loss of perishables is not covered by your homeowner's insurance.

What can you do to prevent this situation? Consider a generator? What type? Will it be safe? Do I have to be home to make sure it's running?

Portable gasoline generators, are inexpensive, however they quickly produce high levels of poisonous carbon monoxide and should never be used indoors, including inside a home, basement, shed or garage, even if windows are open. You also need a constant supply of gasoline (which can be a problem if local gasoline stations are without power). You need to start the generator and if there's an operating problem you need to find someone to provide immediate assistance.

With automatic stand-by generators, the initial investment is more, but the benefits of a permanently installed unattended unit can prove to be very cost-effective by preventing property damage. A fine example of an automatic unit is Carrier's Home Generator offered by Main-Care Energy. The Carrier unit, is reliable, starts automatically with power loss, uses either natural or propane gas, self tests weekly, is quiet and energy efficient and is sized properly to meet your power needs.

Main-Care Energy's "complete" installation package includes all electric and gas connections and lines - plus 24-hour a day servicing, routine maintenance and inspections. In addition, Main-Care Energy supplies both natural gas and propane gas. This bundled package of services provides the homeowner with "total peace of mind."

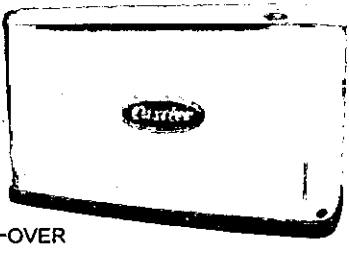

Main-Care Energy, a local and employee-owned company, offers 78 years experience in all energy products and services. In the mid 1990s, with the deregulation of natural gas in New York, Main-Care had an opportunity to compliment consumers natural gas needs with a unique and exclusive offering of natural gas supply and equipment services. State partnership helps aging residents protect assets

By BOB VANDY

The writer is with New York Long Term Care Brokers, Ltd.

The recent market volatility has made us think twice about a number of things in our financial lives, including how we invest, how and when we borrow money and, certainly, whether we have the appropriate risk management plans in place to see us through retirement.

One area garnering more attention lately is long term care planning—both having the right plan in place and having those plans adequately funded and protected. For many New York residents, long term care insurance can be an effective and efficient way to transfer all or part of that risk, which can be substantial, of a long term care event to a third party, thus protecting the plans we've made to ensure that what we want to happen will happen if we need care later. With the challenges the financial markets have experienced recently, some residents who previously were planning to rely on their own funds to pay for long term care, if needed, ("self-insuring") are finding that those earmarked funds now amount to far less than they once did. Thus, funds earmarked for other uses may then need to be liquidated to pay for needed care.

Many New Yorkers have chosen to protect their retirement incomes and/or nest eggs by purchasing long term care insurance under the New York State Partnership for Long Term Care. With some recent changes at the federal and state level (largely brought about by the Deficit Reduction Act of 2005), the ability of New York residents (as well as residents of other states) to give away their assets and hope to qualify for Medicaid-financed long term care has been significantly restricted. The effect of that restriction has been, in part, to shine a more favorable light than ever on the adequacy of long term care insurance as a payment mechanism for long term care costs.

While one of the positive changes brought about by the Deficit Reduction Act was to expand the availability of long term care "partnership" programs throughout the country, New York has, in fact, had a partnership plan in place since the early 1990s. New York was one of four states that were, in essence, "grandfathered" because of various legislative actions.

Partnership plans are so named because they are a "partnership" between the resident of the state, the state Medicaid system and the respective participating long term care insurance carriers. The New York state partnership allows eligible residents to protect all or a portion of their assets, while allowing Medicaid to pay for needed long term care costs.

In short, they work as follows:

A resident purchases a partnership approved long term care insurance policy. Upon needing care and qualifying for policy benefits, the policy holder uses policy benefits as a "first pay" option and [usually] exhausts the policy benefits available. The partnership policyholder may then apply for "Medicaid Extended Coverage" and is afforded asset protection not afforded similar residents who do not have such a partnership plan. Ongoing costs of care from that point forward are picked up by Medicaid under the aforementioned Medicaid Extended Coverage.

There are a number of things to consider when deciding whether a partnership policy makes sense. They include whether a person will continue to live in New York upon needing care and subsequently applying for Medicaid benefits. Although long term care insurance policy benefits are portable, the asset protection afforded under the partnership is not. The New York resident must reside in the state to access those benefits. Also to be considered is preference for location of care. Once policy benefits have been exhausted, care is delivered in the manner Medicaid would otherwise typically allow. For example, if the resident would like to receive care at home, those benefits will likely be much less available under Medicaid financed care. The more prevalent location for care while on Medicaid is typically in a nursing care facility.

Income is not protected under the state partnership. Generally, the same rules regarding how income is treated by Medicaid apply to the partnership-qualified applicant as to a Medicaid applicant without a partnership policy.

The partnership program is a great option for certain residents to consider when making plans for long term care and, as is often the case, the best time to start planning is "sooner rather than later." The younger a resident is, the lower his or her long term care insurance premium will be (if insurance is an appropriate option), and the more likely she will be to qualify for the coverage (one does need to qualify medically to get the coverage). The decision about which long term care insurance policy is best approached with the help of a financial professional (agent or broker, financial planner, CPA, attorney) who is conversant in long term care planning, as well as with long term care insurance.

As we reflect on the current financial challenges America faces, the need to ensure our plans are well protected becomes obvious. So, too, does the need to recognize that our ability to "self-insure" for such risks may be seriously impacted by market downturns. Many of our affiliated advisors' clients take the attitude that they would be better off "using pennies now to protect dollars later" and sleep better at night knowing they have transferred a majority of the long term care risk to an insurer, rather than retaining that risk themselves, thus preserving their retirement goals and dreams.

"We create a healthy indoor environment while protecting the planet at the same time. There is no reason to use toxic chemicals," said a representative from EcoMaids.

The cleaning service handles residential and commercial buildings, schools and other facilities.

EcoMaids provides a full range of maid and housekeeping services that are designed to fit anyone's budget. It is flexible enough to provide services that are one time only or recurring. It also can do large cleanings once each month with small "filler" cleanings in between for the bathroom or kitchen.

EcoMaids services the entire Capital District including Albany, Rensselaer, Schenectady and Saratoga counties.

Ecomajds is the only full service green cleaning service in the area, and takes a "holistic approach" to protecting the environment and providing the highest quality service.

It is also in the process of developing a "franchise system," and over the next three months will be selling franchises across the country. It is looking to fully expand into the commercial market and spread its environmentally friendly approach.

Recently, Ecomajds has joined several community service initiatives and will be providing the Capital District Habitat for Humanity with several services to help them do its good work.

With every house the habitat builds, EcoMaids will clean it pro-bono. It will also provide a free starter kit of cleaning supplies for the home featuring green cleaners and reusable materials.

"We're very community oriented," the representative said.

It will also offer monthly updates, specials and coupons to help make it as convenient a cleaning service as it can be.

"If you haven't tried it, it's something you would really be blown away by," EcoMaids assured its customers.

Saint Ambrose School offers caring Christian education

Parents and staff contribute to students' spiritual and emotional growth

By SISTER JAMES MARIE CARRAS, PBVM

The author is the principal of Saint Ambrose School.

Saint Ambrose School is a pre-kindergarten through eighth grade, co-educational Catholic school. The school is located in a lovely, suburban setting in Latham. We are easily accessible from all directions and have bus transportation provided for our students from most school districts.

Within the walls of Saint Ambrose School, children receive the best education possible. The school's education approach is all encompassing, because they strive to educate a child's mind and intellect to flourish and grow. It is their belief that by also positively guiding their heart, spirit and soul they truly educate them as a whole person. The encourage just attitudes and behavior in each child to promote a sense of values that will prepare them for their journey through life.

Saint Ambrose School strives to make a difference in the following areas:

School atmosphere

Children learn in a caring atmosphere motivated by the doctrine "What would Jesus do?" This is the school's inspiration for developing, within each child, the moral compass that is needed as they strive to succeed and make positive contributions throughout their lifetime. Since the Gospel spirit is one of peace, brotherhood, love, patience and respect for others, Saint Ambrose School believes that a school rooted in these principles helps cultivate in their students, a keen social awareness and a profound sense of responsibility. These skills, when learned at a young age at Saint Ambrose School, will help each child a daily basis. They strive to awaken in their students a spirit of personal initiative. Their devotion to this teaching philosophy makes a positive difference in the life of each child.

Parent community

Saint Ambrose School has a very supportive and involved parent community. It believes that a strong partnership between the school, each classroom and home is so important to the success of each student and to the school. We invite you to be active in the school, through the many opportunities available, at whatever level of involvement you desire. Without the support and participation from parent and family volunteers we would not be able to achieve our dreams. Working together enhances the caring school environment that makes our school so special.

Learn more about Saint Ambrose School by browsing through our Web site — www.rcdaschools.org/stambrose/. Throughout the pages of the school's Web site, you will get an idea of the many wonderful qualities of our school along with the joys and successes of our students. We also welcome members of all faiths, who adhere to our basic philosophy, to join our school community.

Saint Ambrose School is located at 347 Old Loudon Road, Latham. For information, call 785-6453 or visit www.rcdaschools.org/stambrose/.

make our world a better place. The children truly are our future.

Staff

Saint Ambrose School has a reputation for creativity, dedication and excellence. They have a highly qualified teaching staff, comprised of both Sisters from various religious orders and lay teachers, that work hard to reach each child both academically and emotionally. Its small class sizes encourage and foster a high level of attention to the needs of each child.

Their success is continually demonstrated in our school's high academic scores on the New York State standardized tests. Its teachers choose Saint Ambrose School because there is also a need in their hearts to respond to God's call to serve and educate in an environment by spreading his word, on

Fundraising can help make Catholic education a reality

The Catholic Schools are committed to ensuring that a quality education is accessible to any person, regardless of their economic status. Now, more than ever, in the current economic crisis, families from all income levels are struggling to pay tuition at Catholic elementary and secondary schools — and for some, it's simply out of reach.

The Beacon of Hope Fund, managed by the Catholic School Office and the Beacon of Hope Advisory Council, a volunteer committee of 20 community members, provides students from financially struggling families with tuition assistance in the amount of $1,500 per year for three years at any one of the Diocesan Catholic Schools. Currently, 60 students receive the Beacon of Hope award throughout the 14-county Roman Catholic Diocese of Albany.

Over the first two years, more than 400 students applied for the award. Awards are given out based primarily on a family's average income after core expenses are taken into account — such as shelter, clothing and food. For most of the families that apply nothing is left after the necessities are accounted for. That is why the Catholic School Office is committed to expanding its efforts and outreach to grow the Beacon of Hope Fund so that more of those 400 families may be assisted.

"We must push even harder to get the word out and raise the necessary funds. If we were to award every family that qualified, we would need over $1 million per year. It may sound crazy, especially in the current economic climate, but at least I know what I am working with," said Nicki Pezzulo, director of development for the Catholic Schools. "It's important that nonprofit organizations that provide basic services and aid do not sit back and ride out the downturn. We must continue to raise money to provide help to the most marginalized — otherwise it will only get worse."

Administrators of the Catholic Schools believe that to only accept students whose families can pay the full tuition would be an injustice to those that desire a Catholic education but simply do not have the means.

"No child should be left behind, not as a result of federal legislation but because all children, regardless of where they live or their background, deserve the very best. And they can find that within Catholic schools," said Sister Jane Herb, IHM, superintendent of the Catholic Schools.

Funds are raised through two primary events: The Beacon of Hope Breakfast in September and the Beacon of Hope Ball, which will take place on March 7 at the Kiernan Plaza in downtown Albany. Every dollar raised is given directly to the students in the form of tuition assistance. The Beacon of Hope Advisory Council plans to expand fundraising efforts through a more rigorous marketing campaign, the addition of another event in early summer and an aggressive outreach movement in the community.

To learn more about how to support the Beacon of Hope Fund, contact Nicki Pezzulo, director of development for the Catholic Schools, at 453-6676.

Q: I have heard the bankruptcy law has changed, making it much more difficult, if not impossible, to file. Is that true?

A: Yes and no. Yes, the bankruptcy law changed (a couple of years ago), but no, it is not necessarily more difficult to file. In fact, bankruptcy filings are up almost everywhere lately given the recession and loss of jobs. The only question is whether you qualify to file for Chapter 7 (liquidation) or Chapter 13 (payment plan). An attorney must sit down with you and review your current situation, reviewing your debts and assets, and your current income, if any.

Never listen to others who have no legal training; contact an attorney with your questions.

State Farm: Use your refund wisely

So your 1040 is filed and you are now anxiously waiting for your refund. What do you plan on doing with it? Go on that long-awaited cruise, get a new set of golf clubs or buy that wide-screen TV you've had your eye on? There are so many ways you could spend your refund but there may be better alternatives to consider.

According to the Internal Revenue Service, more than 75 percent of American taxpayers received a federal tax refund, with the average around $2,500. It's what you do with your refund now that may create a better financial future for you and your family later on.

Instead of spending your refund this year, consider funding an Individual Retirement Account (IRA), setting up a college savings fund for a child, or paying down credit card debt. These options will help to improve your financial situation.

First on your list of priorities should be paying down any high-interest credit card debts you have incurred. By paying only the minimum each month, you may be paying just the interest (or less) on the debt and little or nothing toward the principal. Paying down the debt can free up additional money for other important financial needs.

If debt is not a problem, your tax refund could provide you an excellent opportunity to fund an existing IRA or establish a new one. For the 2007 tax year, you can contribute up to $4,000 to an IRA. If you were 50 years or older by Dec. 31, 2007, you can add an additional $1,000 to the account. Making a tax-deductible contribution to traditional IRA is an option if you are not participating in an employer-sponsored retirement plan or, if you are participating, your adjusted gross income falls within eligibility guidelines.

A Roth IRA may be a more appropriate choice, depending on your eligibility. Contributions to a Roth IRA are not tax-deductible. However, qualified distributions are received free from federal income tax. Your refund could also be used to fund a Coverdell Education Savings Account (ESA) or 529 Plan for your child. Contributions are not deductible, but withdrawals to pay qualified educational expenses are free from federal income tax.

One thing to remember after you've decided the fate of this year's refund: The check you received is not a windfall but the return of an interest-free loan you provided the government.

Regardless of the pleasure you may get from receiving a large check each tax year, adjusting the amount withheld by Uncle Sam to reduce the amount of future refunds may be an appropriate course. You may not get a refund in April, but there may be more in each paycheck to contribute to a Coverdell ESA, 529 plan, IRA or to pay down debt throughout the year.

Take some time to consider your options before making the down payment on that cabin cruiser. The earlier you start saving for your future, the more you may have during your retirement.

If you have questions about these options and others, you owe it to yourself to contact a financial services professional that you know and trust. Your financial future may depend on it.

CALL ONE OF US to open a State Farm® IRA. BEFORE APRIL 15.

Crisafulli Bros. expanding to meet needs

Local leader in heating, plumbing celebrates 70th year in business

Crisafulli Bros. Plumbing and Heating Contractors, Inc., is celebrating its 70th year of serving the Capital District as one of the largest mechanical service firms in the area. The company provides plumbing, heating and air condition design, installation, service and scheduled maintenance to both residential and commercial customers.

While the past year has left many businesses in a lurch, Crisafulli Bros.' commitment to providing its clientele with the highest quality service has only led to growth as the company adds new employees and trains current ones in cutting edge industry standards.

Andrea Russo, the third-generation president of this family-owned company, said though they have 70 employees, things are run with a small company emphasis on customer service.

"We operate very much like a family business," she said. "We have the resources of a large company, but the owners are here every day and have relationships with our employees and our customers."

Many of the company's heating and cooling technicians are North American Technician Excellence (NATE) certified, according to Russo, and the rest are well on their way. That means that Crisafulli's HVAC technicians are educated in the industry's latest energy efficient technologies and techniques. Their technicians, working from their familiar fleet of red trucks, will not only increase the addition of online coupons, energy saving ideas and safe and easy tips that homeowners can do themselves.

"During difficult economic times, we recognize the importance of customer retention, and that's our emphasis this year," said Russo. That emphasis starts with employee relations, and the company hired a new service manager in 2008 to better facilitate that element.

"We very much believe in our relationship with our employees, because the way we treat our employees will reflect in the way our employees treat our customers," said Russo.

The company also believes in upholding community relations, often working with the Ronald McDonald House, sponsoring baseball teams and getting involved in community events year-round.

With a wide selection of quality brands, including newly added Lennox furnaces, knowledgeable and courteous technicians and the ability to cover any project from start to finish, Crisafulli Bros. is surely the premier choice for those in Capital District looking to upgrade their property's heating and cooling systems. If one thing's for certain, a tough economy won't stop this company from succeeding.

"In times like this, you just have to step it up a notch," said Russo.

energy efficiency, but also decrease the need for maintenance, saving customers money all around.

"We've seen an increase in voluntary HVAC replacements," said Russo. "I think more people are in tune with environmental needs."

Similarly, Crisafulli Bros. plumbers are undergoing Moen and Kohler certification.

"That's something we're very proud of," said Russo.

All of the changes under way at Crisafulli are aimed at increasing customer satisfaction and service. Their Web site, www.crisbro.com, is even getting a facelift with that converted all or part of their traditional IRA to a Roth IRA in early 2008. They may, unfortunately, face the possibility of paying income taxes on account values that will not be there when they file their 2008 income tax return. Where account values are substantially less than the account values at the time of conversion, they will be paying income taxes on phantom income that was there but now the value is gone — ouch.

Fortunately, the taxpayer can treat the conversion as if it had never been made by recharacterizing it. This involves transferring the converted amount (plus earnings, or minus losses) from the Roth IRA back to a traditional IRA via a trustee-to-trustee transfer.

You have until Oct. 15 to recharacterize a 2008 Roth conversion. Where the income tax liability is on April 15 and the recharacterization is done at a later date, income taxes paid on the recharacterized amount will be refunded. This is one of the truly pro taxpayer provisions in the Internal Revenue Code.

Brown School names new head of school

Brown School's Board of Trustees and Acting Head of School, Dr. Marc A. Meyer, are honored to announce that Ms. Elizabeth "Penney" Riegelman will be joining Brown School as new head of school on July 1.

Brown School, Schenectady's only co-ed nursery through eighth grade independent school, has a rich history in Schenectady, celebrating more than 100 years of equipping young people to be caring, knowledgeable, and active citizens of our increasingly complex world.

Penney's uncommon and extensive background in private education is extraordinary. Brown School feels fortunate to have Penney join its school community and can look forward to years of expert, creative leadership.

Penney has been working in the world of independent schools for over 30 years as a teacher and administrator. Having obtained her A.B. degree from Radcliffe College, Harvard University, Penney began her career teaching middle school Language Arts. She went on to obtain a M.Ed. degree from Harvard's celebrated School of Education while continuing to teach. She also received a M.A. from Teachers College, Columbia University. After serving in various administrative positions at The Chapin School, Riverdale Country Day, and The Peddie School, Penney became Head of Newark Academy. After 10 successful years, she joined the New York State Association of Independent Schools as its executive director — a position she will vacate at the end of June. Her familiarity with and admiration for Brown School through NYSAIS was the beginning of her respect and affection for the school, which she considers one of the best-kept secrets in New

Next year, Meyer will continue as Associate Head of School. He is looking forward to working with Ms. Riegelman. Loudonville Christian School expands after-school programs

In an effort to expand upon its longtime traditions, Loudonville Christian School has expanded its after-school curriculum this year by adding two exciting programs and new opportunities in athletics.

According to Katie Hills, principal of Loudonville Christian, the school has added the clubs Love 146 and Meet the World.

In Love 146, a club based on a national organization, students will be able to explore issues of sexually exploited youth and the abolition of child sex slavery. The club's mission is to fight against these issues and restore the confidence and self-image of those victimized by exploitation.

The second new club, Meet the World, allows students to meet missionaries from around the globe, learning of their work and studying ways they can do similar acts of good in their own community.

In the athletic area, a new joint wrestling team with students of the Watervliet School District will allow Loudonville Christian students to compete in local competitions.

According to Hills, "We are a small school and they were gracious enough to open up to us."

In addition, the school has continued their efforts with other assorted clubs and organizations, including Habitat for Humanity.

These clubs and athletics are open to all 330 students who attend the school, according to Director of Pupil Services Tim Phelps. Loudonville Christian, located at 374 Loudon Road, in Loudonville, focuses on the education of students through a combined effort of teaching the evangelical view of God and the world with a high scholastic standard in a secular curriculum. All of the teachers at Loudonville Christian are New York state board certified and either have or are working toward their master's degrees.

According to Phelps, the school has 100 percent graduation rate with 100 percent of its students receiving Regents diplomas and 90 percent receiving an advanced diploma. In addition, Phelps said, "One hundred percent of our students will go to college and 85 percent will go to a four-year college."

Phelps attributed the high success rates of Loudonville Christian's students to its strong curriculum, which includes many advanced placement courses and college-level courses.

Tuition rates at Loudonville Christian are as follows: pre-K, $3,270; kindergarten, $5,230; grades 1 through 4, $5,500; grades 5 and 6, $5,775; grades 7 and 8, $6,775; and grades 9 through 12, $7,850. Hills said she is pleased the school is able to offer such decent prices compared to other private schools in the area.

For a list of the courses offered at Loudonville and after-school activities, visit its Web site at www.lcs.org.

Local

With strong communities come strong local economies, and in building on that local strength, we will find a national solution for our economy.

There exists so much confusion and, frankly, there is a great deal of misinformation that is circulating everywhere when it comes to banks and their ability to lend money. The perception is that banks aren't lending right now; but that is simply not the case for the vast majority of community banks, such as Pioneer. We have not changed our underwriting standards whatsoever and are granting and funding loan requests every day for both new and existing individual customers and businesses. There is no question that some of the larger banks are caught in a capital and liquidity crunch and have shut down or made modifications to limit lending but it is so important for the word to get out that others, including Pioneer Bank, have plenty of money to lend.

Pioneer Bank is dedicated to helping its small and medium business relationships and consumer customers thrive no matter what the economy. We are here in good times and bad. And especially now, we are the right bank for the times because we are well capitalized, we are safe and sound and we have money to lend. It's simple, if you want to know your banker on a first name basis; if you want a lasting relationship with a really experienced banker who cares; if you want a safe and sound, responsive bank that offers great service and leading edge technology to help you weather economic swings and grow, then I hope you will think of Pioneer Bank — where business is personal.

Robert F. Kennedy's legacy and the state budget

By RICHARD C. IANNUZZI

Robert F. Kennedy's triumphant life as U.S. attorney general; senator from New York and champion of social justice has received a burst of attention — all of it well-deserved.

In a moving ceremony attended by numerous dignitaries, including members of the Kennedy family and former President Clinton, New York City's Triborough Bridge was late last year re-named the RFK Bridge. And, New York State United Teachers has unveiled a series of lesson plans designed to re-introduce RFK — and what he stood for during another very difficult time in our history — to a new generation of young people.

The lessons — developed with the Kennedy family, the RFK Center for Justice and Human Rights, the State Education Department and others — teach about Bobby Kennedy's lifelong commitment to social justice and are now in the hands of some 20,000 fourth, eighth, and 11th grade teachers across the state.

The hope is that teachers in New York state will use the examples set by Robert F. Kennedy — fighting for the underprivileged, working toward social justice, standing up for the freedoms guaranteed by our Constitution — in their classrooms to inspire in today's students a social conscience and a willingness to confront inequality and injustice whenever and wherever they see it.

In all of his work, Robert Kennedy saw a critical role for government.

RFK stressed, "The essential humanity of men can be protected and preserved only where government must answer — not just to the wealthy, not just to those of a particular religion or a particular race — but to all its people."

Kennedy's vision is at the heart of how teachers and other social advocates see the current budget crisis.

While we stand ready to work collaboratively and constructively with Gov. David Paterson as he addresses the crisis head-on, we believe government has an obligation to all its people, especially protect the most vulnerable and fragile populations.

That means our state leaders must ensure that all children receive a quality public education, especially those children in poverty, most often children of color, who, for too long, have been short-changed by the way New York has funded its schools.

We believe state government has an obligation to make sure that all students — not just the privileged — have an affordable path to college. In times of economic turmoil, more students will be turning to SUNY, CUNY, and community colleges, for an affordable, high-quality college education. Students — and local economies in places like Morrisville and Binghamton — depend on a well-funded public higher education system.

And, of course, New York has an obligation to ensure that children and their families have access to adequate health care. Without health insurance, necessary medical treatment is often ignored, and many families find themselves facing physical and financial disaster.

To meet its obligations to everyone, government has an obligation to make sure that everyone pays their fair share. Our state's tax policies have too often favored the wealthy, leaving low-income and middle-class New Yorkers to pay a disproportionate share of the tax bill. Restructuring the state income tax would actually reduce the tax burden for lower-income and middle-income families. Change is long overdue.

Robert Kennedy spoke to the best in all of us. He believed in change, in possibility, and in our capacity to overcome even the most enduring and difficult problems we face as a society. He said, "To adhere to standards, to idealism, to vision in the face of immediate dangers, takes great courage and self confidence."

Let us hope that Robert F. Kennedy's words help guide us through our current budget crisis.

Richard C. Iannuzzi is president of the 600,000-member New York State United Teachers.

When schools get cut, who pays the price?

The Executive Budget proposal for education would devastate New York's public schools and reverse the progress we've made in education, from pre-kindergarten through post-grad. New Yorkers overwhelmingly support raising the income tax on the wealthy to protect vital public services and oppose cuts to education and health care.

Do the right thing: Ask our wealthiest citizens to pay their fair share. Don't balance the budget on the backs of our neediest children.
