Whether it's the spring weather or an invigorated spirit of preservation, young and old alike have been spending the past week gearing up for the annual observance of Earth Day.

April 22 will mark the 40th celebration of Earth Day, which is now observed across much of the world. While those across the Town of Bethlehem and Capital District will be recognizing the day in many ways, Earth Week, running from April 16 until Earth Day, is nearly over.

The week of activities was kicked off at Clarksville Elementary with an Earth Day Fair. This was the second year the school has invited area groups into the gymnasium to set up activities, games and learning stations for the school's more than 200 students, said parent and PTA member Amy Price.

"It's about education and fun," she said.

"They're learning how to be creative and conservation."

Hannaford Supermarkets was present to hand out reusable shopping bags, and various arms of the Department of Environmental Conservation were teaching kids about the state's varied natural resources. A Cornell Cooperative Extension representative had set up a bicycle that could power a bank of light bulbs.

Local operation Wildlife Alive brought to the fair a number of owls and other rehabilitated birds. Michele Segerberg and Bob Shoemaker run the operation out of Clarksville, where they nurse injured birds back to health. Those who can't be reintroduced back into the wild are often used for educational purposes.

The Stormwater Coalition of Albany County and the Northeastern Cave Conservancy were also at the fair.

The Guilderland Board of Education adopted an $87,447,715 budget for the 2010-11 school year, on Tuesday, April 13.

The budget comes in $68,000 under the superintendent's budget and includes the restoration of a number of programs and positions that were eliminated in the original proposal. Those restorations were made possible by each teacher giving up a day's pay for a total of $220,000, the elimination of freshman sports for a savings of $73,000 and delaying the repayment of a bond that will temporarily save the district $1.15 million.

Some of the additions to the budget that were not included in the proposed budget were full restoration of clubs and after-school activities at the middle school and high school, at a cost

Coeymans supervisor arrested, charged with arson

The Coeymans Police Department Wednesday, April 14, arrested Coeymans Town Supervisor Henry Traver and charged him with arson in the third degree, a felony.

Police say Traver intentionally set fire to his own residence at 68 Jarvis Road South on April 20 of 2008. He was not supervisor at the time of the alleged incident.

The two-year investigation was conducted with the assistance of the Albany County District Attorney's office.

Traver was arraigned in Town of Coeymans Court and was remanded to Albany County jail without bail.

Other arrests

• The Bethlehem Police Department on Tuesday, April 13, arrested Amy L. Krzykowski, 27, of 18E Oakbrook Manor, Ravena, and charged her with DWAI-Drugs and traffic violations following a traffic stop in Selkirk.

Police received a call advising of an erratic vehicle traveling southbound on State Route 9W in the area of Corning Hill Road, according to arrest reports. Police located the vehicle and observed it traveling into the northbound lane and failing to dim its high beams, police said.

Krzykowski exhibited bloodshot eyes, impaired motor functions and slurred speech when speaking to police, and dropped several items while attempting to produce her driver's license, according to police. She said she had taken prescribed medication at her house earlier and was driving to Urgent Care in Delmar because she was not feeling good, police said. When asked what type of medication she was taking, she said Xanax, Serouquel and Trezodone, according to police.

Krzykowski was taken into custody after performing sobriety tests, and agreed to have a blood sample drawn at Albany Medical Center for analysis by the state police crime lab, police said. Her mother was contacted to pick her up from the police station and she was issued tickets to appear in Town of Bethlehem Court on Tuesday, May 4.

• Amanda S. Defaria, 20, of 5 Cimino Lane was arrested by Guilderland police on Tuesday, April 13 and charged with Burglary in the third degree, a felony, criminal mischief with intent to damage property and petit larceny, both misdemeanors. Police said Defaria entered a residence on James Lane through a window by the back deck. Upon entering, Defaria allegedly was involved in a altercation with a resident of the property and stole his keys from his car upon exiting the property. Defaria agreed to turn herself into police later that day. According to police, Defaria provided a statement and turned the keys over to police at that time. She was arraigned at Guilderland Town Court later that day.

• Jeffrey Charles Heald, 48, of 5 Sumpter Avenue, Albany, was arrested by Guilderland police on Tuesday, April 13, and charged with criminal possession of marijuana in the third degree, a felony. According to police, Heald was stopped for a cell phone violation while driving in the area of Schoolhouse Road and Hilton. Police said that Heald was found to be in possession of 14.5 ounces of marijuana. Heald was arraigned in Guilderland Town Court on Thursday, April 15.

• Guilderland police arrested a homeless man, Edward M. Lawrence, 43, of Albany, on Wednesday, April 7, on active warrants for grand larceny in the third degree and possession of a forged instrument in the second degree, both felonies. Lawrence was arraigned later that day in Guilderland Town Court and lodged in Albany County jail.

Highway workers take complaints to the town

New Scotland officials hear concerns about working conditions and salaries

By RYAN MUNKS
munksr@spotlightnews.com

The New Scotland Town Board held a special meeting the morning of Wednesday, April 14, at the town's Highway Department to discuss with employees issues regarding pay raises and the condition of the town garage.

"I think the board is convinced we have to fix this facility or build a new one," said Town Supervisor Tom Dolin. The facility at 2869 New Scotland Road, which is more than 40 years old, is suffering from infrastructure, air quality and space issues, according to staff of the Highway Department.

"In the wintertime you recirculate the same air; it gets pretty nasty," said Kevin Mabie, of the Highway Department.

Chris Zautner, another worker in the department, said that fumes from the building's furnace make eating lunch in the break room almost unbearable.

"It's disgusting. You wouldn't want to be up here," he said.

Zautner also said that after starting the trucks up at the garage in the morning, it's difficult to breathe inside the facility.

Another concern voiced by workers dealt with the building's water and drainage systems.

"We are washing salt off the trucks with salt water," said John Hensel, of the Water and Sewer Department. He also said runoff from the facility flows down New Scotland Road.

Dolin admitted that the facility needs to be replaced.

"I think this facility has seen its day," he said.

According to Dolin, the issue is convincing the taxpayers to approve of what he estimates to be a $5 million to $7 million project.

He said the town knew since a study was done in 2001 that there were issues with the building.

"In the past, it fell off the table because numbers are so mind boggling," said Dolin.

One of the ideas proposed by Dolin was to construct the new facility by using a modular design, gradually phasing out of the old facility over time, also spreading the cost out.

Highway Superintendent Darrell Duncan said he objected to the idea. He said that the town could start the modular design, however, over time decide it was too expensive and abandon the project, leaving the department with insufficient facilities.

Among the concerns of the employee's that work out of the garage is the infrastructure of the building. Pictured above is a hole in one of the support beams of the garage.

Duncan also said that working from two separate facilities could hinder the operations of the department, something that is currently becoming an issue with the department's two secretaries, Pat Geurtze and Teresa Campana moving to Town Hall.

"We are working down here with our two secretaries down there [Town Hall]. Sometimes they are disconnected," he said.

Although building a new facility for the Highway Department would increase the tax burden on the town, Dolin said residents have enjoyed a low tax levy for years.

"It's almost artificially low compared to other towns," he said. "The reason is we are kind of skimping on you guys."

Dolin said he did not know the exact number by which the town's tax levy would increase, but he said that spread among the people of the town the cost would be low.

"I think its going to be modest. People are going to be shocked at how little it costs," he said. "It's funny, you talk $13 million for the school system, and no one gets excited. ... People have been very sympathetic to the school system; I hope they will be equally sympathetic to this project."

In addition to the issues facing the department's garage, workers also discussed the issue of pay raises.

Kevin Schenmeyer, of the highway department, took the lead in airing grievances regarding the lack of pay raises in the department.

Schenmeyer said there were two sets of standards in regards to how workers in the garage are treated and how workers at Town Hall are treated. He said that employees of the Highway Department are the only employees in the town that have to clock in, and that raises seem to be handed out more frequently in Town Hall.

"I really don't feel they [Highway Department] get paid, sometimes, the salaries they deserve," Schenmeyer said.

Dolin agreed that the Highway Department staff has in the past been underrepresented in the town's budget and that the town was at fault for the discrepancy.

"If there are any bad guys, it's us," he said.

Dolin recommended that the Highway Department designate employees to represent the rank and file of the department in this year's budget process. Councilman Daniel Mackay said that the concerns of the department have been heard, and that this year's budget process will reflect those concerns.

"We are drafting a budget that is much more informed on salary issues," he said.

Bethlehem man appointed to Greenway Council

Ted Putney to represent Albany County on Hudson River entity

By CHARLES WIFF
wiffc@spotlightnews.com

A longtime Bethlehem resident will be representing Albany County on the Hudson River Valley Greenway Communities Council.

County Executive Michael Breslin recently appointed Freeman (Ted) Putney to fill a vacancy on the council. A longtime Bethlehem resident, Putney said he was honored to have been selected, and that he would aim to secure the county's fair share of Greenway grant funding.

"I hope just to simply make other members of the council aware of the position of Albany County, and the importance of the river to Albany County," he said. "The river itself is important to the ports, both in Albany, Coeymans and Bethlehem."

The Bethlehem Town Board passed a resolution recommending Putney for "Getting people to stay close to home and enjoy the Hudson River Valley is important."

- Ted Putney

the position on March 25.

"Ted is an excellent appointment to the council because of his years of experience with a broad range of environmental organizations and his lifelong commitment to conservation," Supervisor Sam Messina said.

The next quarterly meeting of the council is scheduled for June 9. The council is a 28-member entity—including a representative from each of the 10 counties lining the Hudson River—that meets in locations around the valley.

The Greenway Council and Conservancy are aimed at promoting trails along the river, encouraging sustainable planning and protecting and promoting the valley's status as a National Heritage Area, said Executive Director Mark Castiglione.

"We do that by helping communities work together, to do regional planning and to advance regional goals in their local initiatives," he said. "We're thrilled to have Mr. Putney come on board to the Greenway and helping us to advance our mission."

The Greenway Conservancy, a public benefit organization, also secures many grants for various uses along the valley.

Putney has a history of involvement in town government, including serving on the Town Board from 1994 through 1997, serving on the town Industrial Development Agency and taking part in the 20/20 advisory committee. He's also a trustee of the Mohawk-Hudson Land Conservancy advisory committee.

Now retired, Putney lives near the town's Henry Hudson Park, where erosion of the Hudson's bank is threatening town land. This is a problem that is repeated along the river, said Putney, and needs to be addressed.

The entire eastern border of the Town of Bethlehem consists of the Hudson, making it an underutilized resource, said Putney.

"We have a rather extensive waterfront, some of which could be developed to a greater extent than it has been," he said.

He also said a greater effort should be made to publicize the value of the river to those near and far.

"Tourism is always a thing that needs to be promoted, because there are a lot of good tourist destinations around, and getting people to stay close to home and enjoy the Hudson River Valley is important," Putney said.

Lions and rabbits and book reports, oh my!

By ROBIN SHRAGER SUITOR
news@spotlightnews.com

We spontaneously break into British accents fairly often in our home. I think it became a particularly prevalent occurrence for my daughter after the Harry Potter movies came on the scene, but it certainly started long before then for me. It may even be genetic. When I described this "hobby" at a family gathering, I learned that one of my nieces also enjoys speaking "British" and soon a small group of us were conversing in this manner. Unusual, perhaps, but it sure paid off for my child when it came time to audition for the role of a British dormouse. That's right, I said British dormouse.

The middle school musical had just finished its run. Rachel had a part in the ensemble, which included singing, a bit of dancing, and a single line. "I play an adult," she would say when people would ask about her role. And I'd jump in and add, "She's one of the adult townspeople in the ensemble," feeling that her explanation was too nebulous. "She's got a husband and a child, too." She'd roll her eyes.

Being in the musical boosted her interest in theater and so she attended an informational meeting for the school's next production, a comedy that intertwines characters from the "The Wizard of Oz" and "Alice in Wonderland."

In the weeks that followed she experienced a series of phases.

Commentary: From Robin's Nest

The phases included: I THINK I'm going to audition. I AM going to audition. I DON'T think I'm going to audition. SHOULD I audition?

"This again?" I thought. I gave her the same advice I did when she was contemplating auditioning for the musical: You won't get a part if you don't audition. Just try; you've got nothing to lose.

Two years ago, Rachel was involved in both the musical and a play. She painted sets, arranged scenery, operated the curtain and ran spotlights.

"One day she's going to be in the show," my father told me. I said, "I don't think so, dad. She likes being on the technical crew. Not everyone wants to be on the stage." He said, "Mark my words."

Well, it's true. Father knows best. When Rachel told me she was going to audition for the musical, I said, "I can't believe it. Grandpa was right!"

As timing would have it, Grandpa left for Florida four days before opening night, although he did come to one of the rehearsals. "You are missing your granddaughter's play," I told my 80-year-old father. He said, "I'll catch the next one."

As luck would have it, along came auditions for "Dorothy Meets Alice," a comedy/adventure by Joseph Robinette and Karl Juman.

More than 90 kids auditioned for a play that had about 11 roles. To include more students, the director, math teacher Diane Henderson-Suker, added a set of opening vignettes and ended up with a cast of 36. Another 28 students are part of the technical crews, assisted by reading lab teacher, Aosta Edelman and technology teacher, Steve Costopoulos.

Henderson-Suker was quick to point out that although she, Edelman and Costopoulos are providing guidance, the students are doing all the work. Students are constructing set pieces that include a giant TV set, a giant book, forest scenery, and, um, a guillotine. The students are distributing posters, operating the lights and sound equipment and controlling the curtains.

The main characters include a girl from Kansas, a girl from London and a girl from some far off place called Delmar, New York. There are also several animals, a witch, a queen, and, of course, a Mad Hatter.

The director told me she is encouraging each character to shine. She said she explained to the students that it doesn't matter whether a character has one line or 100 lines, each role is important.

Bethlehem Middle Schoolers will perform "Dorothy Meets Alice" (aka "The Wizard of Wonderland") on April 29, 30 and May 1 at 7 pm. Cast members include: In back: Laura Hooper, Hailey Bulman, and Emily Risch; In front: Emily Murphy and Luke Marcelle. Tickets are $5 adult, $4 students/seniors. For more information e-mail: henddms@bcsd.neric.org.

After running through a set of scenes, she pushes the students to assess their own on-stage skills, asking each one to answer the questions: "How did you improve on your performance from the last rehearsal?" and "What can you do to improve even more?"

Parents were asked to chaperone backstage and to help out with the concession stand at intermission on show nights, but there are no parent committees. I didn't realize this at first, and grew concerned when weeks went by without a notice requesting parent volunteers.

"Do you need to get your own costume?" I asked my daughter.

"I don't know," she said.

"How can you not know? Didn't anyone mention costumes?"

"Oh, at one rehearsal they asked our sizes," she said.

"Is somebody making costumes?" I asked.

"I don't know."

"Well, find out, because if I need to find you a costume I don't want to wait until the last minute."

"Yeah, OK."

Being a part of the school's theatrical production builds teamwork and self-esteem, requires practice and commitment, and makes mothers run around yelling.

"You have to manage your time better."

In "Dorothy Meets Alice" (also subtitled: "A Wizard in Wonderland"), the character from New York exclaims, "Oh no, I forgot to do my book report."

My daughter finds this corny (my word, not hers), because "a kid in middle school wouldn't talk like that." I pointed out that 1) there is nothing in the script that prescribes the age of the kid, and 2) SOME people would actually panic if they suddenly remember an assignment due the next day. (Of course in our house, it's the mom panicking when the teenager leaves homework to the last minute.)

I encouraged my daughter to have fun with the play.

"It's a COMEDY! It's OK to exaggerate. Get out of your head," I told her.

"What? How would I get out of my own head?"

Ah, I have such a literal child.

"What I mean is that you should focus on BEING the character and not worry about what you might look or sound like."

I explained that she needs to feel uninhibited, like a little kid growing-up pretend ... or like her silly grown-up mum walking around the kitchen talking like Eliza Doolittle.

Dating outside the box

Delmar man's singles service promises to do it differently

By CHARLES WIFF
wiffc@spotlightnews.com

Match.com, eHarmony, plentyoffish... The Web is flush with sites that promise to pair you with your soul mate. So how does Larry Wilson plan to make his a success?

By going directly against what other cyberdating services are doing, and towards a simple concept that is almost universally agreed upon: opposites attract.

"Our culture is based on opposites," said Wilson, who got into the Internet dating scene after his divorce.

Popular sites paired the Delmar resident with beautiful, intelligent women he had a lot in common with, and who he accompanied on flat, uninteresting dates.

"They try to set you up with your perfect, harmonious match, a mirror image," he said of such matchmakers. "You think you know everything there is to know about this person, so you end up not asking deep, penetrating questions."

Oppositesconnect.com aims to do...well, just the opposite. Through a personality test and other features, the site will suggest matches with locals who don't share your interests.

Not only will that lead to new and interesting experiences, but foster more interesting discussion, said Wilson.

"You're likely to

"We thought that it was a great idea and something that hasn't been tried before," she said, and a great idea for her clients with relationship difficulty.

"They'd been dating the same type of person over and over again and having the same poor outcome," she continued.

"We do have a lot of oppositesconnect.com just yet—Wilson hopes to have the site up and running in about a month. If you join the site's Facebook page as a fan now, though, you'll be afforded a free lifetime membership.

Wilson's goal is to have the site become a pay service like many other sites on the Web.

In addition to a database of personal ads, the site will offer a Rivals Room, where users can create groups about their favorite things that can be matched up with opposing groups (Yankees and Red Sox fan groups, for example). The groups can interact, and the site will update you on members of rivaling rooms in your area.

Similarly, a weekly poll on hot button issues will show you local opposites.

Oppositesconnect will be a nationwide service, though Wilson plans to base any physical gatherings and dating events here in the Capital District. He says keeping membership open is a good thing, staying away from the micro-niche dating sites that focus on different religious or social groupings.

"We'd like to think we're combining the best elements of all of that," Wilson said.

Most Capital District communities close to 2000 rates

By CHARLES WIFF
wiffc@spotlightnews.com

About a month ago, Americans were inundated with pleas from the federal government to give up a few moments of their time to fill out and mail in a 2010 census form.

The reasons for participating were varied: patriotic duty, statistical thoroughness and value to the taxpayer being among the top ones. With the deadline to postmark your mail return passed, how has the Capital District done?

Probably as well or better than in the last census, when all is said and done. Mail-in participation rates will continue to be updated as returns come back, but as of press time, with the national rate at 69 percent, Schenectady, Saratoga and Albany counties are all doing better than the rest of the country with returns of 73, 78 and 73 percent, respectively.

Saratoga County has passed the rate set by the last census, with many communities soaring above 2000's performance. In the Town of Malta, an 80 percent participation rate is 3 points above the last time out.

"It's heartening to hear that we're being so successful," Supervisor Paul Sausville said. "I think that the people of Malta really care about their community, they're involved and I think it's part of our culture to participate in government."

Others are still working towards former numbers, as in the Town of Niskayuna, 5 points short of meeting an impressive 87 percent showing in 2000.

"That's a very good participation rate," said Supervisor Tom Landry. "We have a community that responds, and we're very pleased that we're very near where we want to be."

Landry attributed the town's numbers to the residents, but added the town has been in contact with the Census Bureau to provide up-to-date address information and maps of new developments in town.

A strong mail-in participation rate is good for taxpayers, said Census Bureau spokeswoman Alexandra Barker, because the bureau must send workers to physically follow up with addresses that don't return their form by mail.

"The mail back operation is the most efficient operation for the Census Bureau," she said. "In order to save money, it's important for people to mail in their forms."

It costs the bureau an average of $57 per household to secure information through followup visits, versus what is essentially the cost of a stamp for the mail in return. The information gathered is the same.

Matters of Opinion in the Spotlight

Delaying the inevitable

Last year, it took three separate votes for the Guilderland Board of Education to establish full-day kindergarten. The argument against it was that it would be too much of a financial burden after the stimulus money ran out.

Last week, the board was faced with that reality but chose to keep the full-day K program and delay paying off $1.15 million in debt until next year.

From Ryan Munks' story on page 1:

"I think the federal government is going to have to do something for us next year," said board member Gloria Towle-Hilt.

Board member Emilio Genzano said, "I'm willing to take the chance and risk on transferring debt service to next year." Genzano also said that the decision to delay the bond and keep full-day kindergarten was not a decision the board could make on a financial basis. He said "[the district] can't put a dollar amount on children."

Unfortunately for Mr. Genzano, that is exactly what a board of education is supposed to do. It puts a dollar amount on every aspect of a child's education, from what they eat to what brand of pencil they write with, and it entrusts and ensures that the school district will manage those dollars effectively and responsibly.

Does that mean the district should choose debt service over full-day K? At this point, it doesn't matter because they haven't. But, for the sake of the taxpayers, the district and the board members need to stop making financial decisions with their hearts.

Last year, one of the arguments for full-day K was that if the district didn't offer it, potential homebuyers would thumb their nose at Guilderland. High taxes and fiscal irresponsibility will also have that effect.

Are the benefits of full-day K worth the financial burden? The studies would lead you to believe it is, but then there are caveats. Some research shows the benefits in literacy and math skills all but disappear after the fourth grade, other research shows the only real benefits are realized by impoverished, urban children.

But let's say full-day K does all it should and more for our children. Should we, like in the case of Guilderland schools, support that program financially only so we can take away athletics and extracurricular activities when those students enter high school?

We all want the best education for our children, but if the only way you can provide that is to keep delaying bond payments in the hopes that the federal government will bail you out, it's likely the full-day kindergarten students of today will be the same people paying off the district's debt service tomorrow.

Repairing winter's damage through careful pruning

By CHUCK SCHMITT

The author is a community educator with the Cornell Cooperative Extension in Albany County.

Spring 2010, like many others in the past, is an opportunity to evaluate the damage left behind as winter subsides. If you recall recent history, winter has not been kind to the Capital District. We have seen some permanent changes to our landscapes due to winter's heavy hand.

The winter of 2008-09 provided an ice storm in December causing a lot of damage and power outages across the region. This past winter brought a heavy wet snow in March dumping up to 5 feet in some areas causing trees and shrubs to break and some barn roofs to collapse.

Survival of the fittest? I would think so. I have had many calls recently about how to deal with this year's damage. I would start by saying that each case has to be evaluated on an individual basis, but some constants still remain true.

The basis tenets of proper pruning need to be employed to repair damaged plant material. If a twig or small branch is broken, then a clean cut should be made to remove it. Target the cut so that a new leader can take over for the broken branch, essentially you are heading back the branch in the process.

If a larger branch (something more than 3 inches) needs to be removed, target this cut by locating the branch bark ridge and branch collar and cut just outside the collar area.

You will also need to employ the three-point cut to safely remove these larger branches. The first cut is under the branch several inches outside of the branch collar region to sever the bark to prevent it from tearing down the trunk as the branch is removed. This cut only need to be deep enough to break the bark. This second cut will be to drop the weight of the branch, again targeted beyond the branch collar. The third and final cut will be targeted at the proper position, at the branch collar. This is the ideal position to allow proper timely healing for the wound.

The difficult decisions come into play when the damage goes beyond a branch and involves the main trunk. Often when the main trunk of the tree or shrub is split, removal is the only option. However, keep in mind that as new growth begins again in the spring healing also begins. If you are able to bring closure to this split/gap it has the potential to heal back together, much like a grafting wound would.

This should only be considered when it is safe to promote this healing and not setting up a hazardous situation. You may want to consult a local arborist.

These pruning cuts will produce wounds on the plant material. Current research suggest that we not try to cover them with any type of "healing" compound but rather let nature take its course in healing. Keep the plants free of as much environmental stress as possible to encourage the healing to progress at the greatest speed possible. If you have particular questions about your plants, don't hesitate to contact your local Cornell Cooperative Extension office.

Your Opinion in The Spotlight

Selkirk apartment proposal needs clarification

Editor, The Spotlight:

I'm writing in regards to your April 15 article "Selkirk apartments pitched to planners" by Charles Wiff. I am one of the concerned residents the article alludes to. In fact, I am the one who obtained the petition mentioned in the article. I feel that the article that was printed, since only Mr. Hershberg was interviewed, does not fully reflect the situation that exists or why in fact it's at issue at all. So in an effort to accurately represent both sides of the spectrum I felt the need to speak on behalf of those surrounding neighbors the article touches on.

First, it should be noted that the Town Planning Board tabled the proposal because the proposal Hershberg submitted on behalf of Gordon Residential was not complete. Second, while Gordon and Hershberg thinks it's a good use of the land, the Dowerskill community disagrees. We believe that the town needs to find an appropriate balance between diversity and over-development. Our Dowerskill community has already experienced significant growth and we believe the addition of an apartment complex of this size and nature is over-development of the area.

More importantly, we have concerns and questions regarding the effects an apartment complex, in this location and of this design, would have on the traffic patterns at the 9W and Hague intersection. The traffic study mentioned at the meeting was one conducted privately by Hershberg and we do not have confidence in its accuracy, nor do we have the details of exactly where or when it was conducted. We are also concerned about water drainage and run-off, sewer plans, private roadways, and the impact on emergency services.

Though Hershberg cited statistics from an unknown source to back up their belief that apartments would create less of an impact to the school system than single-family homes, the statistics did not come from the RCS school district. I know, because I tried to obtain statistics from them and they do not keep that information. Therefore, I have to wonder where they came from and are they relevant to a community of this size and location.

It should be noted, that bordering the land in question is a cemetery from the 1800s. While the plans for the apartment complex do not build directly on the cemetery, they do go right up to it's known borders. I feel the town, county, or state needs to consider declaring the cemetery a historical site and protect it against development. If nothing else, anything built there should be a set distance away and should be respectful to those who are buried there and those who want to visit them.

There's a lot more to designing and building on this area of the land than Hershberg, or this article, alluded to. While there is a small group of us who will be meeting privately with Hershberg, per their request, it does not replace the need or desire for a public hearing.

A public hearing has been formally requested, by myself and other parties, to allow for the rest of the members of the Dowerskill community to have a chance to have their say. More importantly, a public hearing requires a certain degree of advance notice and advertising that will guarantee the best chance for all interested parties to be able to participate.

While the town law technically does not require a public hearing, as your article pointed out, it is not an unusual nor unreasonable request.

The Planning Board did seem to feel that an environmental impact study, which our petition called for, was not appropriate for this project. We're hoping as the process continues they will reconsider this as there are significant wetlands on and surrounding the property in question, thus there will be an environmental impact.

Further, the area is currently forest area and though admittedly unlikely, one never knows what special creatures might reside there. Too often in the world today we just take down and destroy green areas, forests, and open spaces without a second thought. Part of the neighbors' goals is to ensure that the Town takes this into consideration and we have confidence that they will hear our concerns and do so.

Census

For each one percent of Americans who return their mail-in form nationally, the bureau saves $85 million, said Barker.

Census workers will begin going door-to-door on May 1. The bureau will hire an army of workers—some 700,000—to conduct the follow-ups.

In the Town of Bethlehem, where Supervisor Sam Messina has been vocal about the need to bolster response, the participation rate was just 83 points short of 2000's strong showing of 83 percent.

"The goal I had, and I don't know if we're going to achieve it yet, was to surpass where we were in 2000," Messina said. "We've done what we've needed to, working with the media, getting the word out at town board meetings... We certainly weren't passive, we did what we needed to."

Despite having participation rates in many areas that far outpace the national average, New York state remains below the nation rate with a 64 percent mail-in participation rate.

It's arguable the densely populated New York City area is holding the entire state's rate down. The Big Apple has a 56 percent rate, just one point shy of its performance last census.

It can be more difficult to collect information in cities simply because there are so many more addresses and people to deal with, said Barker. Alternatively, in remote areas workers will sometimes drop off a form in-person at the start of the census process.

"Urban areas are very challenging," Barker said. "We're looking at the rates and can see areas that we need to be working on."

Similarly, the City of Albany has the worst rate in the county at 63 percent.

Across New York, 2000 census participation rates of 90 percent and better were logged, but mostly in rural areas. The strongest performing states are Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa.

You can continue tracking return rates by visiting www.2010.census.gov.

Warren Redlich courts Tea Party voters

G'land gubernatorial candidate takes his message on the road

By RYAN MUNKS
munks@spotlightnews.com

Guilderland Town Board member and gubernatorial candidate Warren Redlich spoke at Tea Party events across the state last week. Throughout the course of his speaking tour, his message has remained consistent: He called on New York state to "stop wasting money."

The Tea Party events, which took place in Buffalo, Rochester and Albany, have become a yearly thing that coincides with the April 15 deadline for people to file their tax returns.

Redlich, who is running on the Libertarian Party line, gave his first speech in Buffalo on Monday, April 12. At just under two minutes, he focused on the issue of capping pay for state employees. During the speech, he criticized the state for the salary it pays the head of the New York Public Library, who according to Redlich, makes $689,000. He said that there are more than 90,000 state employees that make over $100,000. As part of his campaign platform, he is advocating to cap state employees' salaries at $100,000 and their retirements at $75,000.

"There's an answer," he said. "We can cap the pay of the bureaucrats. It will save $2 billion statewide."

He continued his speaking tour at the Rochester Tea Party event, which took place on Thursday, April 15.

He expanded his criticism of state employee pay, attempting to refute the belief that high salaries are needed to retain good employees. He used sarcasm to assail the Metropolitan Transportation Authority; a public authority he said has 54 people making more than $200,000 per year.

"Now they must get good people, right?" he asked. "That's why they are losing half a billion dollars a year."

Warren Redlich speaks to a voter at a Tea Party rally at the Empire State Plaza Saturday, April 17.

Submitted photo

Mike Deming, Monroe County's Campaign for Liberty coordinator, and the master of ceremonies for the Rochester event, said that Redlich fit right in with Tea Party members at the event.

"His message certainly resonated with the crowd," said Deming.

Deming said the intent of the Tea Party gathering, which attracted anywhere from 1,000 to 1,500 spectators, was to focus primarily on the economic issues facing New York state. He said the Tea Party movement is gaining more appeal this year than it had in previous years.

"They seem much more informed this year," he said.

Redlich's final appearance at a Tea Party event was at the Saturday, April 17, gathering outside the Empire State Plaza in Albany. For the third time in the week, Redlich continued his campaign to cap the pay of state employees.

"Instead of laying off teachers, instead of closing our parks, instead of taxing our soda, we can do something different," he said. "If we cap their pay at $100,000 a year, just on pay alone, that will save us two billion in the first year," he said.

Eric Sundwall, the campaign manager for Warren Redlich for Governor, said speaking at the Tea Party events has given Redlich an opportunity to address like-minded voters. "We are out there, and we are working pretty hard for their support," he said. "You have to respect the fact that there is no actual Tea Party."

Sundwall said that the Tea Party, unlike the Democratic or Republican parties, is not an organized political organization with a staff and a bank account.

"No one can claim the mantle of the Tea Party," he said.

Sundwall said that in addition to Redlich, Republican candidates Carl Paladino, Rick Lazio, and Steve Levy have all courted supporters of the Tea Party. According to information from his campaign, Paladino has gone as far as to say he will circulate a petition to create a Tea Party line on the ballot if he does not get the Conservative Party endorsement.

"Warren has as much claim [as the Tea Party candidate] as any of those three candidates," said Sundwall.

Sundwall said that next challenge for Redlich's campaign will be getting the Libertarian Party nomination at its convention at the Hilton Garden Hotel in Albany on Saturday, April 24.

"We expect to get the nomination," said Sundwall, who is also a former chairman of New York State's Libertarian Party.

Raising their voices for the homeless

Concert to benefit Interfaith Partnership with diverse afternoon of music

By CHARLES WIFF
wiff@spotlightnews.com

Organizers are hoping that a yearly event to benefit a local homeless charity will be the biggest yet.

Voices of Hope has been an annual event for 16 years, and been hosted at the First United Methodist Church of Delmar for the past five. Turnout has been between 150 and 200 persons in years past, but the venue has space for 400, said aid First United's Nan Rabinow.

"We're really hoping to fill our house this year," Rabinow said. "We've really pushed ourselves to get the word out this year quite aggressively."

Performances will be by the Capital District Youth Chorale, the University at Albany Chamber Signers, Mezzo-Soprano Soloist Kara Cornell and pianists from the Music Studio of Albany.

All told, the program promises to be over an hour of stirring and diverse music, said FUMC Music Director Joe Farrell.

"This year's a little bit different because it's bringing in musical groups and performers who are instrumentalists, as well as guest choral groups," he said. "We've reached out to the larger community a little bit by inviting the Capital District Youth Chorale."

The Youth Chorale, under the direction of Diane Warner, is a 110-member group that will perform five separate numbers. This will also be the first year a collegiate group has performed in the concert.

The Chancel Choir of First United Methodist will close the program.

The partnership with First United has been beneficial to Interfaith, said Director of Development Bonnie St. Onge.

"Interfaith is fortunate to be partners with the First United Methodist Church in Delmar," she said. "So many different churches do so many different things, and this is really a unique one. They coordinate this whole effort, they reach out on behalf of us."

While the church does fundraising for groups across the area and world,

Interfaith is a group members are happy to spend their time and effort supporting because of the good work it does in the community, said Rabinow.

"At our church, one of our biggest components in mission and outreach... Interfaith Partnership for the Homeless has always been one of the organizations we sponsor," she said. "It's just one of the organizations that really needs our mission here."

Interfaith provides a number of services to Albany's homeless population, including emergency and transitional housing. The organization is looking to expand its affordable housing offerings and will soon be starting a summer youth program in the Sheridan Hollow area, where children are provided activities and free lunch.

The summer program served 1,600 lunches during last year's 10-week program, double what was needed in 2008, and St. Onge said it's expected participation will only increase due to more need.

"A lot of people are just one emergency away from losing their home or losing the resources they do have," she said. "We end up being a safety blanket."

The Voices of Hope concert will be held Sunday, April 25, at 4 p.m., at the First United Methodist Church, 448 Kenwood Avenue, Delmar. There is no charge to attend, but donations to benefit the Interfaith Partnership for the Homeless will be collected.

A reception with refreshments will be held for audience members and performers following the concert.

Community rallies behind Delmar man paralyzed during a rugby match

By DAN SABBATINO
sabbatinod@spotlightnews.com

Doing what you love sometimes comes with a risk.

Lisa DeStaso-Jones said her husband suffered a severe spinal cord injury likely to leave him paralyzed from the neck down while pursuing his passion — rugby.

Mike Jones, known by those close to him as "Jonesy," was playing rugby in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., when he injured himself in February. The damage to his vertebrae has left him unable to walk, or move anything below his neck, but she said with the proper therapy, she is hopeful he may regain some motor functions.

"We want the most modern and helpful equipment for Mike," she said.

Bethlehem to upgrade its sewers

The Town of Bethlehem is officially embarking on a project to reroute and upgrade sewer service in the northwestern part of town.

The Town Board on Wednesday, April 14, passed 4-0 resolutions to launch into the project, which would redirect sewer service in North Bethlehem and Slingerlands away from the Delaware Pump Station further east towards the town center via force main.

This change is needed to allow for development in this part of town, including the buildout of the Vista Technology Park and related projects.

"That pump station is more or less at capacity under high flow conditions," said Deputy Commissioner of Public Works Erik Deyoe. "We need to do something different in order to provide capacity within that sewer system."

The sewer would be redirected along Cherry Avenue and Kenwood Avenue to Berthwood Avenue, where it would travel through the Verstandig condominium project. The route was chosen in part to replace the most aged sewer pipes, said Deyoe.

A $3 million member item grant from Assemblyman Tim Gordon, I-Bethlehem, will provide for the majority of the project's cost, though there will be some cost assumed by the town. Assuming all goes well, the redirection upgrade could be complete in 18 months to two years.

New Scotland mulls Planning Board size, term limits

Town to revisit issue at upcoming meeting

By RYAN MUNKS
munksr@spotlightnews.com

The New Scotland Town Board discussed a number of local laws at its Tuesday, April 13, meeting, but member could not come to a consensus on the size of the Planning Board and term lengths.

The board then discussed Local Law D, which deals with a code of conduct for Planning Board members.

When Councilman Douglas LaGrange introduced the law, he mentioned how long it had been in the works.

"We've discussed this for close to a year now," he said.

The draft of the law mandates that term limits be set at three terms of four years each, with a two-year hiatus required after a member's third term before he or she can return. Current law sets the terms at seven years, with no term limit.

LaGrange had originally proposed five-year terms for board members, with a maximum of two terms, after which a member would need to take a three year hiatus before being eligible to return to the board.

Supervisor Tom Dolin also suggested trimming the board from seven members to five.

That proposal drew criticism from Councilman Rich Reilly, who said he would prefer a seven-member board with two seven-year terms.

Dolin argued that having a seven-member town board would be out of line with the Town Board.

"Why don't we have a seven member Town Board?" said Dolin. "I

"You can't just go to five [members]; you have to transition."

— Town Attorney Michael Mackey

don't think you need seven people to take in the diverse neighborhoods [of New Scotland]."

Reilly said limiting the Planning Board to five members would take away the Town Board's ability to appoint a new member to the Planning Board for another two years.

"From an institutional perspective, I don't think that makes sense," said Reilly.

Town Attorney Michael Mackey said the law needs to address a number of issues that haven't yet been considered before moving forward.

"There is some language I would need to add," he said. "You can't just go to five [members]; you have to transition."

Mackey also said the law does not address what would happen if a Planning Board member leaves the board before the remainder of his or her term. He said that the Town Board will have to decide whether they want to appoint a member for a full term, or for the completion of the former member's term.

Dolin recommended that LaGrange revise the law and resubmit an updated version of the law to be considered at the Wednesday, April 28, meeting of the Town Board.

More news from the Town Board

• Dolin tabled the first law that was up for discussion, Local Law C, which would put in place new regulations for home businesses.

• The board set a public hearing for Local Law F of 2010, a law increasing the property tax exemption for Cold War veterans. The law mandates that 15 percent of the real property value of the residence of Cold War veterans will be exempt from the town's share of the property tax. The law also states that the amount exempted cannot be greater than $36,000. The public hearing was set for the Wednesday, May 12, meeting of the Town Board.

• The Town Board authorized Dolin to sign a memorandum of understanding with the Capital District Transportation Committee to conduct a study for the Hamlet of New Scotland Master Plan. Dolin said the $50,000 study will be funded with $12,500 from the town and $37,500 from the committee.

Family

Lisa DeStaso Jones, a fourth grade teacher at Saddlewood elementary for 18 years, said the teachers association, along with Carrabba's Italian Grill, are sponsoring a fundraiser at the Village of Colonie Cook Park Pavilion to help offset some of those costs. The event will be Saturday, May 15, from 2 to 6 p.m.

One expense the family faces is making their Delmar home, a 1920's style bungalow, handicap accessible.

Lisa said Realtors have offered to help sell the house for free, but it has been difficult finding somewhere to live that is within their budget, and close to the community.

She said she is considering hiring an architect to design a ramp, but the family will need variance from the Town of Bethlehem in order to make the project happen. She has only begun the process of going through the Zoning Board of Appeals, she said.

"The neighbor's have been very agreeable," she said.

Mike, a New York State Thruway employee is now unable to work.

The Cook Park fundraiser, in addition to a golf outing, sponsored by the Capital Hill Golf Club, will help, Lisa said.

The May 17 golf outing is already sold out.

Lisa DeStaso Jones said she has been out of work, using days off she accrued, and does not know when she will be back in the classroom.

"I miss going to work everyday," she said. "My district has been amazing. They're being so supportive." Donna Killiany, a member of the teacher's association, and a third grade teacher, helped organize the fundraiser.

"People are willing to help," she said. "We are willing to support her in any way we could."

Those who want to attend the fundraiser can pay $25 for adults and $15 for children to the Michael Jones, Supplemental Need Trust by May 7.

"We do have leeway for walk-ins," Killiany said.

World-class storytellers spin tales VPL goes bananas for MANGO

Bethlehem Public Library will host "Stories Alive!" the finale of the Riverway Storytelling Festival on Sunday April 25 at 2pm. This family event caps a week-long celebration of the art of tale-spinning hosted by several venues in Albany and Rensselaer counties. World-class storytellers Charlotte Blake Alston, Willy Clafin, Donald Davis and Liz Weir will share tales from the rich oral traditions of Africa, America and Ireland.

This is the eighth year of the Festival, and the fifth year that Bethlehem Public Library has hosted the final event.

Meet the storytellers

Charlotte Blake Alston breathes life into traditional and contemporary stories from the African and African-American oral and cultural traditions. Her solo performances are often enhanced with traditional African instruments. She brings her stories and songs to performing arts venues throughout the United States and Canada, as well as local and national radio, and television. Alston has been a featured artist on the Carnegie Hall Family Concert Series, the National Storytelling Festival, and the National Festival of Black Storytelling.

Willy Clafin has collected a wealth of stories and ballads, travelling the U.S. with his puppet sidekick Maynard Moose as a performer and master teacher. Clafin has been a featured teller at the National Storytelling Festival, the International Storytelling Festival in Ireland, and regional festivals across the U.S. He is collaborating with his son Brian on a soon-to-be-released recording of ballads. Donald Davis tells tales learned from a family of traditional storytellers who have lived on the same Western North Carolina land since 1781. Davis grew up hearing fairy tales, scary mountain lore, ancient Welsh and Scottish folktales, and true-to-life stories of his own neighbors and kin. He has been a featured teller at the National Storytelling Festival, the Smithsonian, the World's Fair, and festivals and concerts worldwide. He was active in peace work through storytelling on both sides of the conflict in Northern Ireland.

Liz Weir is a professional storyteller from Northern Ireland, promoting the art for which the Irish are world-famous. Formerly children's librarian for the city of Belfast, she now travels the world telling stories, organizing workshops and appearing at major international festivals. Weir has hosted "The Gift of the Gab," a storytelling series for BBC Radio Ulster.

This free program is made possible by a generous contribution from Friends of Bethlehem Public Library. The Riverway Storytelling Festival is a project of the Upper Hudson Library System. For more information go to www.riverwaystorytellingfestival.org.

Books reflect Hilltowns' life

"Life at the Lake: Warner's Lake" was published in 2004 by the Warner's Lake Improvement Association. The book, designed by the president Willard Osterhout, is full of photos of people, locations and ephemera about the lake and the area. The book generated so much interest that people started sending Osterhout their own photos and stories. He collected it into three more volumes called Life Along the Way, The Journey Continues, and The Final Journey.

Town of New Scotland and Hilltown residents will see familiar faces and names, read fascinating and amusing stories and learn the history of what was once a bustling tourist location in the Heldebergs. All four books are available for in-library perusing in our local history collection, with one circulating copy of the first volume. We recommend them to history buffs, longtime residents, and newcomers who have an interest in the area.

Help wanted

The library is looking for a part-time adult page to work in the mornings. Duties include helping to set up and take down for programs, delivering posters (must have car), searching for and shelving books. GPL presents a sunny way to celebrate Earth Day

On April 22, Earth Day 2010, the Guilderland Public Library invites one and all to celebrate Earth Day in a sunny way. By attending the official unveiling of its new array of solar panels at a special occasion at 2 pm in the Community Literary Garden.

Officials from NYSEDA, the state agency that granted funding for the panels and installation, as well as the Town of Guilderland, Guilderland Board of Education, Library leaders, and members of the State Legislature are being invited to attend. Also attending will be several home-school students and their parents, as well as members of the Segretto family.

The Segrettos are special guests at this event because of their interest in solar power. On the very day this past January when installation of the Library's solar panels began, a staff member noticed a boy and his mother hard at work in the Main Reading Room of the Library building a scale model of a solar-powered house. Young Mr. Segretto's eyes went wide with wonder when told actual solar panels were being installed on the roof. His mother, Karen, pointed out that the scale-model panels worked, too.

In test runs this spring, the Library's solar array has generated as much as 20,000 watts per hour (20 kW h); the Library administration and Board are so pleased with the results that they are placing a monitor in the Library lobby so patrons can see just how much power is being developed. This display will be unveiled at the Earth Day celebration. People interested in finding out right now the amount of kW h being produced can go to the Library's website at www.guilpl.org, and click on the "Celebrate Earth Day" marquee to get a real-time reading.

Bethlehem police warn of scam

From April through July, residents who have not completed the sanctioned U.S. Census will receive a short visit at their home from a verified census taker.

Identity criminals are taking advantage of the census law, and posing as census takers in order to obtain sensitive information.

To distinguish a real census taker from an identity thief posing as one, residents should be aware that a U.S. Census worker will have identification and a confidentiality notice.

A U.S. Census worker will never ask for a Social Security number or financial information, they will not ask for money, or claim that a resident owes money, they will not harass or intimidate a resident, and they will never contact a resident by email.

If there is any suspicion of identity theft or scam, call the Bethlehem Police Department at 439-9973.

Spa City spaceman touches down

Chris Cassidy, an astronaut who flew on the July 2009 space shuttle mission with a flag from Saratoga Springs High School, visited the school Tuesday, April 13, to talk about his life with NASA, the future role of space exploration and to answer questions.

He also visited the Maple Avenue Middle School and Caroline Street Elementary School. The American flag from the high school traveled millions of miles aboard the space shuttle Endeavour and was unveiled during a special ceremony in January, and is now on display near the school's lobby.

High school science teacher and advisor to the school's NASA club, Charles Kuenzel, organized Cassidy's visit because he thinks space and astronauts are

Finance in the Spotlight

The Five Biggest Financial Mistakes Consumers Make

By Anthony Lanzillo
Senior Vice President
KeyBank

At some point in life, usually at a young age, we come to understand one of life's fundamental truths: you don't get something for nothing. Of course, when we come to this realization we are naïve enough to think that $1 will cover just about anything—from a trip to the movie theater to a shiny red sports car.

With age, or adolescence, comes wisdom. We realize a dollar only goes so far, that its powers are limited by our actions and relationships with others (whether we're willing to work, the extent to which our parents support us and how much we save) and that even if we do everything right, we can't always get what we want.

However, many of us forget these lessons as we venture into adulthood. We get swept away by the power of credit. For once, we really can get what we want—even if we can't afford it—and it feels good. The consequence, of course, is debt, not to mention the risk of developing a potentially hazardous relationship with money that can follow you for the rest of your life. That's why it's important to rethink your relationship with money. You don't want today's actions to cost you your financial future, and by avoiding the following five mistakes you will help ensure that they don't.

Mistake 1: Not saving for retirement

The average American spends 20 years in retirement, and many people are living 30 years or more after they retire. You need to start saving now. And if you are saving, don't borrow against it. Borrowing against retirement can actually postpone it for 5 to 10 years. You can get a loan for a house, car or continuing education but you can't get a loan for retirement.

The secret to saving a large amount of money is to start small, start early and stay consistent. You want to leverage the principal of compounding interest, which means that the interest you earn on your money will earn money and accumulate faster than if you wait and invest large amounts. In addition, if the company you work for has a 401(K), use it, especially if they match your contribution.

Anthony Lanzillo

Mistake 2: Not paying off credit card debt

Ideally, you should only carry one primary credit card. If you travel frequently a second card might make sense for travel emergencies.

Always use your primary card for your purchases and pay it off in full every month.

More important, don't live off of your credit cards by making only minimum payments. You end up owing a lot more money in the long run than if you were to pay off your balance in full. If you don't have the cash in your account, you shouldn't be putting that purchase on your credit card. Just because you can afford the payment does not mean you can afford the purchase.

Also, be careful when it comes to credit card offers. Many credit cards offer a lower initial rate that increases in a specified amount of time. Read your terms and statements carefully to avoid unexpected costs.

Mistake 3: Not establishing a budget

Track every dollar you spend for one month. Write down all purchases, bill pays, donations, etc.—even the $1.49 pack of gum.

Take your record of spending and create a budget with this information. Make sure to include savings as part of your budget. As you and the economy do better, stick to your initial budget and put the extra money into savings or retirement.

Mistake 4: Not monitoring account balances and transactions regularly

By monitoring your account balances regularly, you can keep track of your family budget, transactions and account balances. Knowing this information will allow you to avoid any unnecessary fees, such as overdraft. It will also ensure that unauthorized purchases get detected and addressed.

Today, most banks offer numerous ways to check your account information and balances. For example, KeyBank clients can check balances online, in person at a branch, at an ATM, by calling a toll-free number and with mobile banking.

Mistake 5: Not having a relationship with a banker

Your banker should be your ally, a partner in helping you achieve your financial goals. By establishing a relationship with a banker, you will have access to tools and resources that can help you develop and execute a plan, whether it is as simple as a household budget or saving for a major purchase, college or retirement.

There is a great line from Sex and the City. The main character, Carrie Bradshaw, says of managing finances: "I want my money right where I can see it... hanging in my closet." For guys, the equivalent would be: "hanging in HD on the wall in my man cave with stereo surround sound." The good news is that if you avoid the above mistakes and develop a sound plan that you execute with discipline and patience you can have the best of both—money to play with and money to live on.

About the author: Anthony Lanzillo is senior vice president of KeyBank and heads the Capital Region's Retail Banking team. He can be reached at either 518-257-8598 or anthony_lanzillo@keybank.com

Choose the bank that is right for you

There are lots of mistakes people make when it comes to managing their finances. Choosing the wrong bank does not have to be one of them, provided you consider these four things: customer service, accessibility, technology and products/services.

1. Customer Service.

A bank is only as good as its people. Visit with different banks and ask open-ended questions, such as, "What can your bank do to meet my financial needs?" A professional banker will be able to give you an overview of the bank's products and services in a language you can understand and will also be able to offer recommendations based on your particular financial situation.

2. Accessibility.

Today's consumers are busier and more mobile than ever. Most banks provide ATM networks, online banking, branches and customer service phone lines to customers. Consider your personal needs. Do you travel a lot—larger banks may provide larger networks of ATMs and branches.

Check the branch hours—are they open on Saturday? Do they have drive-up teller service?

3. Technology.

Can you have access to your money 24 hours a day, seven days a week? Online banking, ATMs, and customer service lines can provide customers with up-to-date financial information for all of their accounts. Online banking offers the added convenience of transferring money between accounts, paying bills and applying for loans from the comfort of your home.

A passion for cachin'Glenville boy and his father create geocache with an autism theme

By SEAN AHERN
aherns@spotlightnews.com

Between two small trees on a swath of land off Swaggartown and Van Buren roads in Glenville, Nicholas McPherson, 8, hid an old army ammo box filled with trinkets, hoping to promote autism awareness through geocaching.

Geocaching is a hobby that combines the use of a handheld

GPS device, the Internet and outdoor activities such as hiking and orienteering. Participants create and post online the coordinates for stashes of trinkets hidden across the globe to be found by fellow enthusiasts. When a geocache is found, participants are encouraged to take a trinket and leave something new in its place.

For Nicholas, who has been diagnosed with Asperger syndrome, geocaching is a passion that is fueled by his interest in computers and

"Daddy told me about it, and I got really interested in it," he said recently.

His mother, Sheila, said her son has a keen sense of direction and is able to find hidden caches during day hikes and family trips, and geocaching helps him focus his interests into one activity.

"It's good because it keeps him interested and breaks the trip up," she said. "This ties it all together; geocaching lets him do a little of everything."

Working with his father, Gary, Nicholas created a geocache with an autism theme in recognition of Autism Awareness Month. The cache includes puzzles, small toys, bubbles and a notepad for visitors to log their findings. A small geocoin, shaped in the form of the Autism Awareness Ribbon, with interlocking puzzle pieces, is also included in the cache and is considered a "trackable," or an item that can be moved from cache to cache across the country. When the geocoin is taken from the box, the serial number on the back of the coin can be entered into an online database to map its location throughout the country. While some trackables do not have a final destination, other are given "missions" by the original creators to end up in specific spots in the world.

The McPhersons said they would like to see the autism geocoin travel cross country, with a final destination of Hawaii. With a puzzle piece painted on the front of the ammo box and a small message in the front page of the log book, the McPhersons explain the meaning of the puzzle pieces in the cache and the autism-related geocoin.

"Many say the puzzle piece symbolizes a single trait of autism. All of the puzzle pieces are different, and the resulting picture is different for each person," said the message in the notebook.

"We just decided to make this during Autism Awareness Month," said Gary McPherson. "I think this might be one of the first [geocaches] in the country based on autism."

Nicholas' mother said

Nicholas McPherson, an 8-year-old who is diagnosed with Asperger syndrome, created with his father, Gary, a geocache with an Autism theme in celebration of Autism Awareness Month.

children with autism are a puzzle on themselves, and that each child diagnosed is different.

"If you know one child with autism, you know one child with autism because they may have similar traits, but the way they express those traits are totally different," she said.

After the cache is hidden among light debris, Gary McPherson sets his handheld GPS to record the coordinates of the geocache, with the box located at North 42 degrees 52.300 feet and West 73 degrees 56.840 feet.

McPherson said he hopes to complete 30 different geocaches over the summer, and of the many caches he has done since becoming interested in the hobby three years ago was one at the Christman nature sanctuary near a waterfall on the Bozenkill Creek.

Bar Association hosts advocacy competition

High school seniors from Connecticut, New York and Vermont are invited to submit an essay for the National Bar Association's 2010 Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Drum Major for Justice Advocacy Competition. In no more than 2000 words, students should address the following question: If Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. were alive today, would he advise President Barack Obama to support or oppose equality for gay men and women as it relates to legalizing same-sex marriage?

Students must submit their essays to NBAREgion2@yahoo.com by Saturday, May 1, 2010. Winners of the regional competitions will receive $1000 to cover the costs of books for college and a three-day, two-night trip to New Orleans for the national competition. Airfare and hotel costs will be covered for the student and an adult chaperone. National competition winners will receive more than $5,000 in scholarships. All national prizes are one-time scholarships.

Sponsored by the National Bar Association and supported by the National Bar Institute, the competition is an annual advocacy program designed to motivate students of color to excel in education. The contest encourages high school seniors to express their views on a pre-selected topic, and judges the students on their ability to communicate orally and in writing.

To be eligible, students must have applied to a college or university for the 2010 - 2011 school year. The winners of the regional competitions will advance to the national competition to be held on Wednesday, August 11, 2010 in New Orleans.

Important Dates

• May 1: Deadline for submission of all essays to NBAREgion2@yahoo.com

• June 5: Competition in New York. MetLife also will offer a seminar on Financial Security & Smart Investment Strategies for Families.

• August 11: National competition in New Orleans.

McTeacher Night raises money for G'land Elementary

By RYAN MUNKS
munksr@spotlightnews.com

Dozens of McDonalds around the Capital District participated in the third annual McTeacher Night event in which a portion of the proceeds from food sales is donated to local parent-teacher organizations.

The McTeacher night at the Guilderland restaurant on Western Avenue hosted students, teachers and parents Thursday, April 15, to benefit the PTA at Guilderland Elementary School.

The school's PTA will get a portion of 20 percent of the revenues from all items sold between 4:30 p.m. and 7 p.m. at the 48 participating restaurants.

"M&M or Oreo?" said Guilderland Elementary School Principal Allan Lockwood to children lined up for their one chance a year to have their principal serve them a McFlurry. This year is the second he has operated the machine as part of the fundraiser. Lockwood said making McFlurrys is a job he has become an expert at.

"I was trained up last year when we did McTeacher night," said Lockwood. "McDonald's was trying to recruit me back, but I have a day job."

Jennifer Oertel, the secretary of the school's PTA, said the money raised at the event will help fund get particularly excited about seeing their teachers outside of school.

Doug Arnott, owner of the Western Avenue McDonalds, said the event was a way for the restaurant to show its support to the community.

"The community supports our business, and we want to support the community."

Doug Arnott, owner of the Western Avenue McDonalds various student programs.

"[The PTA] provides activities for kids both inside and outside of the school," she said.

She specifically mentioned author visits, book fairs and events like the Friday, March 12, performance of the Lake George Opera at the school.

"A lot of those programs are pretty costly," she said.

Dawn Nagel, a kindergarten teacher at the school, was one of the many teachers on hand selling desserts to patrons. She said the event is something the students and teachers of the school look forward to every year.

"We came last year, and we had a blast," she said.

Nagel said the children

"The community supports our business, and we want to support the community," he said.

Arnott hosted a similar fundraiser in December that raised more than $700 for the Rodinos, a local family facing numerous health issues.

Arnott said this year's event was particularly important because of the tough financial situation schools are facing.

"It's an easy way to come in for two and a half hours and collect some funds," he said.

According to Arnott, each year, McTeacher Night increases in popularity. He said that 48 McDonalds from the area participated in the event this year, up from 36 last year.

There's a motto in the Fitz household in Burnt Hills and it has to do with one thing that's come to define and shape the family — cooking. "Some recipes are thumbs up, some are thumbs down, but you never know until you try" is the rule of thumb in Jodi Fitz's kitchen, and she applies it to every breakfast, lunch, dinner or snack dish she tries.

"I got that motto because it encourages kids to try more. My kids and their friends are constantly in my kitchen so they would automatically give me thumbs up or down on recipes," said Fitz, who also writes the cooking column for Capital District Parent Pages.

That motto was the inspiration behind her new cookbook, "Thumbs Up to Kids Cooking," a compilation of Fitz-tested and kid-approved quick recipes, sprinkled with "did you know?" facts and black and white cartoons for kids to color. The cookbook is due out in May.

"This particular cookbook is meant to be about fun cooking. There are a lot of benefits to cooking with kids. Obviously they're learning a life skill, but in today's busy lifestyle it's an opportunity to steal a few moments and have connecting time," said Fitz, who has three kids age 7, 12 and 17.

Fitz said spending time in the kitchen became a way of life for the family and preserved a certain connectivity, especially as her two oldest sons got older and were drawn to sports. Her kitchen is notorious for experimentation, said Fitz, and sometimes that overflowed beyond the house.

"I would always laugh because when my boys were younger and had babysitters, I'd never quite know how I'd find the kitchen because they'd always experiment," said Fitz. "My oldest son babysat for a short time and the mother would laugh too because they'd make concoctions in the kitchen, she loved it. I've certainly given them a little license to play in the kitchen, and I think it's a great thing, on most days."

One of her kids' favorite creations that's included in the cookbook is called a "fruit topped muffin." Fitz makes a spread out of cream cheese and vanilla yogurt, puts it on a whole wheat English muffin and finishes it with either apples or strawberries. Smoothies are also a popular treat and easy to make fun, she said.

"I pick up fun, cheap gadgets. I used to buy Zoo Pal plastic knives and let my youngest cut up fruit. At every age there's something they can do to help or entertain," said Fitz.

Fitz takes expanding kids' palettes a step further with her participation in Price Chopper Kids Cooking Club, a free resource for families that comes with a monthly newsletter, three recipes to try at home, video clips of Fitz cooking with randomly chosen Kids Club kids and announcements of when she's out demonstrating. Visit www.pricechopper.com and search under "program signups" to find it. Some of her recipes are also posted online at www.cdparentpages.com under the "Let's Cook" heading in "columns."

Fitz may seem like supermom and master chef wrapped into one, but she said that's not the case.

"I always say I'm not the best cook and I'm not a chef, but I am a mom who thinks the kitchen is a great place to be with your family."

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Alice Corbett.

Spring water main flushing program

The Town of Bethlehem Water Department will conduct its spring water main flushing program this spring as a preventative maintenance program to maintain good quality water and to improve water flow.

The Department warns residents to run their water until it runs clear if they notice changes in color, taste or odor, cloudiness or sand. The water flushes will take place April 5 - April 21 in Delmar and Elsmere and April 19 - April 30 in Glenmont and Selkirk. Water flushes in Slingerlands, North Bethlehem and the Town of New Scotland took place March 29 - April 7.

For information, call the Water Department at 439-4955.

Arrest

Bethlehem Police Officer James Cross by text message, saying, "[Kerr's] only a little psycho no problem I was only home alone with a loaded gun pointed at me."

Cross, on duty at the time, alerted the shift supervisor, who in turn alerted Lt. Thomas Heffernan. Police then established contact with the victim via phone and advised her to come to the Bethlehem Police Station, according to the arrest report.

Police met her there and observed Kerr's white pickup truck entering and leaving the department parking lot, according to police. The victim allegedly was crying and didn't have any shoes on when police arrived to escort her into the station.

Police discovered Kerr was at his parent's house, and he apparently made a statement to police when they arrived, the majority of which was redacted from the report.

In fact, except for in one officer's supplemental report that indicated Kerr had said he was emotional that night, every statement Kerr made to police was redacted from the arrest report.

In many instances, it appears as if Kerr threatened violence on himself or the victim if she attempted to call 911, such as in this portion of shift supervisor Sgt. Christopher Shunk's supplemental statement:

"[Redacted] stated Eric threatened to kill himself and kill [redacted] if she called 911. [Redacted] also stated Eric pointed a black handgun at her."

Bethlehem police Sgt. Robert Helligrass said the alleged behavior did not warrant additional charges against Kerr, in part because the victim was able to contact police.

"I don't know if we really got that there was any actual prevention [in contacting police]," he said. "We're not there. It's how the person feels, and if they actually are prohibited from calling the police."

Police seized Kerr's pistol permit and two handguns: a S/W Walter PPS and a Glock 23. As a dispatcher, Kerr was not issued a sidearm through the department. Kerr remains on paid suspension from the department.

Kerr was recognized for his role as an Albany County EMT in rescuing a Delmar teen from a December house fire. County Undersheriff Craig Apple said while Kerr has not been suspended from his position with the department, he will not be scheduled to work any hours.

"Our intention is to just remove him from the schedule until this is sorted out," he said. "Once it gets sorted out, we'll take whatever action necessary at that point."

Kerr usually only works one or two days per month as an EMT. A misdemeanor conviction does not bar a person from serving as a county EMT but would be weighed in any decision regarding employment, Apple said.

The Spotlight sought police records and court documents regarding Kerr's arrest after police declined to discuss several details of the incident for an article that ran April 7, including information about the locations of the arrest and alleged domestic incident.

Records have revealed a number of these facts, but The Spotlight is not printing some information in order to avoid identifying the alleged victim in this case. The paper's policy is to not identify victims or alleged victims of domestic violence.

Many parts of the obtained arrest report were redacted, including the entirety of a supplemental report made by a Bethlehem police detective.

Helligrass said information was withheld to preserve evidence as the case moves toward court.

"While the cases are ongoing, there are evidentiary items in there that cannot be released," he said. "We have to be protective of our case."

FOIL requires copies of documents like arrest reports be produced upon request, but does allow records that would interfere with judicial proceedings to be withheld.

The recovered report is available on www.spotlightnews.com.

Milestones

Welch, Muriel (Hall)

SLINGERLANDS – Muriel Hall Welch departed this life on April 16, 2010, after a brief stay at the Hospice Inn at St. Peter's Hospital. Since her diagnosis, she has lived comfortably at home with the love, care and prayers of her family and friends. Muriel left as she lived...with grace, dignity and optimism.

She is survived by her husband of 53 years, Lewis; sons, John (Wendy) of Kary, Texas, Mark (Gail) of McLean, Va.; daughter, Kerin (Scott) Stagnitta of Delmar, N.Y.; granddaughters, Julie, Lena and Amy of Va.; and grandsons Dan and Rob of Delmar and Richard and Logan of Texas.

Born in Washington State to the late Robert and Clara Hall, Muriel grew up in a suburb of Tacoma. She graduated from the University of Washington with a degree in business and later completed a program in paralegal studies. After college, she worked in the offices of the United States Steel Corporation in Seattle, the Commodity Credit Corporation in Syracuse and more recently at the Albany Savings Bank.

Married in 1957, Muriel and her family lived in Syracuse until 1969 and in the town of Bethlehem since. She has been an active leader and volunteer in a variety of community, educational and fraternal organizations. She was a past president of the Delmar Progress Club, the Kappa Delta Alumnae Association of the Capital District, the University Women's Association of UAlbany and the Albany Panhellenic Association.

She served as district director and member of the board of directors of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs. She has done volunteer service with the Albany International Center, the American Red Cross, the Bethlehem Central High School Guidance Office, the Vanguard of the Albany Symphony and the Empire State Theater Institute. She also chaired the Board of Election Inspectors of District 6 in Slingerlands.

Trained in music and dance since childhood, Muriel performed with several dance groups and bands in Tacoma and in college. Later she choreographed and coached the casts of middle and high school musical shows at Bethlehem Central and at the Academy of the Holy Names. For many years, Muriel choreographed, sung and danced with the Friendship Singers, a well-known women's choral group.

An avid sports fan, Muriel closely followed the fortunes of the Boston Red Sox, University of Washington football and Duke basketball. She loved to travel to Fla. for Red Sox spring training and to cruise in the Caribbean with her family and friends. She also managed weekly to play bridge and to meet for scriptural studies.

A mass of Christian Burial was celebrated Wednesday, April 21 at the Church of St. Thomas the Apostle, 35 Adams Place, Delmar, N.Y. Friends of the family called at Meyers Funeral Home on Tuesday. Interment, Bethlehem Cemetery.

Budget

of $156,660; the FLES program for grades 4 and 5, at a cost of $67,000; five special education teachers, at a cost of $335,000; and 12 teaching assistants, at a cost of $297,600.

In total, the budget is a 2.49 percent increase from last year's budget, and would result in a 3.59 percent increase in the school tax on homeowners.

"Clearly the community and board has been listened to in concerns that were raised," said board member Denise Eisele.

The main discussion centered on whether to pay the $1.15 million bond off, or sacrifice the district's full-day kindergarten program, reverting back to a half-day program.

Catherine Barber, vice-president of the board, began the discussion by saying she would like the district to pay the bond off and revert back to the half-day kindergarten.

"That's not money we just found, that's money we are putting off to next year," she said.

Barber said that along with the loss of stimulus funding, putting off the bond will have a tax impact of more than 5 percent for next year's budget.

"I don't see that as really realistic for next year," she said.

She also said adding full-day kindergarten to the curriculum in last year's budget was a mistake.

"I didn't think we would afford it last year, and now I think we really can't afford it," said Barber.

She said that the research about the effectiveness of full-day kindergarten on the long term success of a student is inconsistent, and that the district should focus on the rest of the curriculum.

Board member Barbara Fraterrigo agreed with Barber about paying off the bond and reverting to the half-day program.

"We are robbing Peter to pay Paul. ... We are just asking for trouble," she said.

At the budget hearing on Wednesday, March 31, Fraterrigo said the students of the district were successful prior to the implementation of full-day kindergarten.

Board member Judy Slack was the final member to oppose the transfer of the debt service to next year. Slack, who did not vote for full-day kindergarten last year, said eliminating the program could make up for the additional cuts in the district.

The remainder of the board members supported extending the loan to next year.

"I think the federal government is going to have to do something for us next year," said board member Gloria Towle-Hilt.

Board member Emilio Genzano said, "I'm willing to take the chance and risk on transferring debt service to next year."

Genzano also said the decision to delay the bond and keep full-day kindergarten was not a decision the board could make on a financial basis. He said "[the district] can't put a dollar amount on children."

Board member Colleen O'Connell said she was in favor keeping the program since the district has already made the investment.

"I think otherwise we would decimate the program this year," she said.

Board President Richard Weisz was the last member to weigh in on the bond vs. kindergarten issue.

"What's more important, sending money to the bond holder, or 360 kids to kindergarten?" he said.

Weisz said improving conditions in the stock market and the possibility of reduced costs for health care may put the district in a better position next year. He also said that next year could be a better year to raise taxes.

"In another year, raising taxes by 4.6 percent may not be such a bad idea," he said.

"The timing of the bonding is what I would call a calculated risk," said Superintendent John McGuire.

McGuire said rescheduling the payment allowed students greater access to programs and services in the current year, however, whether or not the benefits outweigh the risk for the following year will depend upon the state of the economy, and levels of state and federal aid for school districts.

McGuire reiterated what he has said since the beginning of the budget season. He said that the budget is the best thinking on the part of the school board and district staff.

"I really don't think I could have asked for it to have gone any better," he said.

The school board will hold a public hearing on the adopted budget at its meeting on Tuesday, May 11, before the budget goes before voters a week later on Tuesday, May 18. For information on the budget, including the Superintendent's proposed budget, and a complete list of changes made by the administration and the school board, visit the district's Web site at guilderlandschools.org.

Also in the budget

At the request of Eisele, the district included the addition of a part-time nursing position at the middle school at a cost of $18,040.

Despite the urging of McGuire to cut the position of a special education administrator at the middle school, the school board voted to retain the position. Towle-Hilt said the position was necessary to address the needs of students because middle school is the time when students begin to experiment in illicit activities. She instead advocated for the elimination of one of the school's three house principals. All three principals and the special education administrator were included in the budget.

renewing the area in front of Town Hall with plantings of sustainable species. A storm-damaged tree was recently removed from the area, and town officials feel it's time to spruce up the front lawn.

"This is kind of a renewal opportunity," said Supervisor Sam Messina. "My feeling is Bethlehem should be doing something for Earth Day every year."

The Bethlehem Highway Department will be completing the work once garden planners have finalized a design.

Opportunities to improve the Town of Bethlehem will be provided all summer long through the town's Community Cleanup Days, the first of which took place Saturday, April 17, and will continue on the third Saturday of every month through October.

Volunteers should report to the Bethlehem Town Hall parking lot at 9 a.m. to be issued supplies. Different parts of town will be targeted each Saturday until noon. In the event of rain, Cleanup Day will be cancelled.

Earth Day will be celebrated on Saturday, April 24, at the Pine Bush Preserve. From 9 a.m. to noon, volunteers will perform a number of upkeep tasks all around the 3,100-acre preserve. Come with work clothes and drinking water.

Fifth-grade students at Hamagrael Elementary will be spending part of Thursday planting 30 seedlings that were obtained through the Department of Environmental Conservation.

At Clarksville Elementary, first-graders will be collecting empty cans and bottles to recycle. Proceeds will be donated to the Onesquethaw Food Pantry.

Students from the Clarksville Elementary Green Club will be traveling to the Five Rivers Environmental Education Center April 30, Arbor Day, for a lesson on stream tables.

Students in Mrs. Dolen's 6th-grade science class will use Earth Day to calculate their ecological footprint with www.ecofoot.org. Middle schoolers will also kick off a composting project during Earth Week.

John Abbuhl will lead a "Tour of the Magnolias" in the Pine Hollow Arboretum Saturday, April 24, at 2 p.m. and Sunday, April 25, at 1 p.m. Free for members, $10 for nonmembers. Reservations required. See pinehollowarboretum.blogspot.com for more information.

McCall selected to academic team

Delmar native Kelly McCall was one of eight members of the Keene State (N.H.) field hockey team named to the National Field Hockey Coaches Association Division III Academic team last month.

The NFHCA Academic team recognizes student-athletes who have a cumulative grade point average of 3.30 or higher through the first semester of the 2009-10 school year.

In other Keene State news, Bethlehem Central High School graduate Ross Stanton has been chosen to play in the New England Intercollegiate Soccer League All-Star Game May 1 at Clark University in Worcester, Mass.

Stanton was an All-Region and All-Little East defenseman for the Owls last season.

13-4 lead. The Dutchmen (2-2, 2-3) chipped away at the deficit with a three-run rally in the top of the sixth and tied the game with a six-run seventh inning before Matt Coleman launched a three-run homer in the bottom of the seventh to give Saratoga the win.

Coleman also had a double as part of a three-hit day for the Blue Streaks. Nate Foster drove in three runs with three hits, and Kyle Willmott homered for Saratoga.

Guilderland's hitting star continued to be Matt Zanotta. The senior belted two home runs and a triple, and he drove in six runs. Zanotta's two blasts increased his league-leading total to seven home runs.

"He's just in a zone right now," said LaValley. "People are forgetting that he had five home runs in his first four games last year, so it's not like he hasn't done this before."

The loss to Saratoga was the second in a row for Guilderland following its 9-7 victory over Colonie April 8. The Dutchmen lost to Columbia 9-7 last Tuesday.

"It was a good win, but we can't hang our hats on that," LaValley said of the Colonie game. "We have to win some more games."

The Dutchmen returned to action Monday against Shaker. They face Shenendehowa Wednesday.

Shen takes Lady Eagle title

Shenendehowa took first place in the large school team standings at Saturday's Fleet Feet Lady Eagles Invitational at Bethlehem.

The Plainsmen edged Colonie 105.5-103 to take the team title. Shaker was third with 61 points, followed by Guilderland with 55 points and Bethlehem with 49 points. Academy of Holy Names cruised to the small school team title with 129 points.

The Shen trio of Danika Simonson, Alex Burtnick and Lizzie Predmore swept the top three places in the 1,000-meter race. Simonson won with a time of 3:03.40, two-hundredths of a second ahead of Burtnick and four-hundredths of a second ahead of Predmore.

Nicole Irving (1,500) and Kathleen Klein (200 dash) also won individual titles for Shen, while the Plainsmen's distance medley relay team of Irving, Simonson, Sam Crisafulli and Cara Janeczko contributed a first-place finish.

Klarissa Ricks (100 dash, long jump), Laura Isabelle (600), Theresa Kennedy (high jump) and Kolbi Smith (shot put) had first-place performances for Holy Names. Kyle Plante (300 hurdles) and Emilia Sainato (100 hurdles) led Colonie with individual wins.

Bethlehem's top individual performer was freshman Vickey Buehler. The younger sister of track star Paul Buehler won the freshman/sophomore high jump and triple jump titles.

In boys track, Bethlehem placed second at Saturday's Albright Invitational at Albany Academy. The Eagles finished with 92.33 points, less than 16 points behind first-place Albany.

Paul Buehler was a big part of Bethlehem's success. He won the long jump with a distance of 20 feet, 7.25 inches, and he finished second in the triple jump with a distance of 43 feet, 9.75 inches. Albany Academy's Janie Currie set a meet record in the triple jump with his winning distance of 46 feet, 4 inches.

Sam Rieder (400), Matt Crawford (800) and Yousef Zaid (1,600) all placed second for Bethlehem.

Ravena-Coeymans-Selkirk had an individual champion at the Albright Invitational. Robert Boomhower took first place in the discus with a throw of 124 feet, 4 inches for the Indians, who finished eighth in the team standings with 31.33 points.

At the Niskayuna Warrior Classic Saturday, Voorheesville placed fifth in the girls team standings with 44 points and finished sixth in the boys team standings with 28 points.

Colin Kelly led Voorheesville's boys team with a victory in the high jump. The junior cleared the bar at 5 feet, 11 inches to finish first.

Voorheesville's 3,200-meter relay team of Taylor Treadgold, Rolly Lloyd, Dylan Parry and Conor Cashin placed second with a time of 8:35.4, and Dan Semanek took second place in the boys pole vault by clearing 10 feet, 6 inches.

Eryn Ryan was the lone Blackbird to take an individual title in the girls division. The sophomore won the pole vault by clearing the bar at 8 feet.

Albany

Brown knows that he'll likely only have one year to turn things around at UAlbany. Otherwise, his next stop may be coaching a smaller NCAA Division I program or becoming an assistant coach somewhere else.

While the beauty of the International Basketball League is being able to play 15 out of their 20 games at home, the ugly side of the IBL for the Albany Legends is that they have to wait two weeks between games. They don't play again until they host Tacoma April 30 – an eternity in professional sports circles, especially when the team is brand new.

If you're going to attract attention and keep it in this market, you have to play on a regular basis. You can't play three times in four days and then take two weeks off. It just won't keep your name in the papers or on TV.

I haven't mentioned the Albany River Rats because I don't want to jinx them. As of Monday, they were one win away from their first playoff series victory since 1998. If I jump the gun now and start talking about their upcoming second-round series with Hershey, they'll probably lose their next four games to Wilkes-Barre/Scranton, and then I'll look like an idiot. (Wait, I just mentioned them. Drat. The jinx is on.)

Colorado's Ubaldo Jimenez pitches a no-hitter Saturday, and it gets pushed aside for the New York Mets' 20-inning marathon with St. Louis. Frankly, I'm more impressed with Jimenez's performance than the Mets surviving 18 scoreless innings and a blown save by Francisco Rodriguez to beat the Cardinals 2-1. And I'm not just saying that because Jimenez is on my fantasy baseball team (though that adds a certain cool factor to it for me).

Finally, I'd like to encourage the St. Louis Rams to draft Ndamukong Suh with the first pick in the NFL Draft. Not because I think that will turn the Rams' fortunes around, but because I want to hear NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell say "Ndamukong Suh" before turning back to the Stanley Cup playoffs.

That's it for this week, folks. Remember to send me your comments through the good ol' e-mail at jonasr@spotlightnews.com.

the toughest as they took on two former national master's singles champions - Sonny Schaefer of New York City and Joe Lenhardt of San Diego. Cavooris and Spencer won the first game 21-13, but Schaefer and Lenhardt took the second game 21-19 to force a tiebreaker. Cavooris and Spencer found the energy to defeat Schaefer and Lenhardt 11-5 in the tiebreaker.

Once they got past Schaefer and Lenhardt, Cavooris and Spencer had a clear road to the national title. They defeated Arnold Rinker (Miami) and Ted Bergstrom (St. Paul) 21-9, 21-18 to complete the round-robin tournament with a 2-0 record.

It was the first time Cavooris and Spencer played as a doubles team at the national tournament.

"When George and I both turned 80, we said let's give it a shot," said Spencer. "It was kind of nice [to win the title]."

"It's a game we love," said Cavooris. "We play regularly down at the Colonie Court Club."

Both players discovered handball when they were young men.

"I didn't even know about the sport until I was 25," said Spencer, who's been playing since 1956. "I started playing when I was 26, and I haven't stopped since."

Cavooris said he picked up the sport in 1960 when he was living near New York City and liked the challenge of mastering it.

"You have to play with your hands [instead of a racket]," said Cavooris. "And you know how most people are right-handed? Well, you have to use both hands in handball. That's what makes it a difficult sport to learn."

Though their bodies aren't as spry or as easily able to shrug off pain as they once were, Cavooris and Spencer still play handball regularly at Colonie Court Club.

"Usually, we have pains in our knees, our elbows and our shoulders because of the sport," said Cavooris. "But it keeps your heart healthy and keeps you moving."

"I notice that after I play for three hours and come home, I don't nap for 15 minutes anymore - I nap for two hours," said Spencer. "Once I get up, though, I have plenty of energy."

Repeating as national champions might be difficult for Cavooris and Spencer. With next year's tournament being in Texas, Cavooris said he won't make the trip, and Spencer said he has to wait and see how many teams will be competing in the 80+ age division.

"I would say yes, but only if there are three teams," said Spencer. "If there's not three teams, then I'd have to play against 75-year-olds, and I don't want to do that."

If they don't get the chance to defend their national title, Cavooris and Spencer said they're fine with the one they've got.

"We enjoyed it very much. It's a big honor," said Cavooris.

Eagles

stronger."

Other players have stepped up in Johnson's absence. Senior attacker Eric Halek scored 12 of his team-high 16 goals since Johnson's injury, and senior midfielder Stephen Russo has chipped in with six goals over that time span. Senior attacker Mike Rondinaro has picked up the slack on assists with a team-high nine helpers, including four assists in last Wednesday's victory over Colonie.

Still, Bethlehem wouldn't be where it is without its defense. The Eagles have allowed only 16 goals in four games, thanks in large part to goaltender Theo Ferguson (.64 save percentage) and a defensive unit that has allowed an average of 12.25 shots on goal per game.

"We've played four good games," said Rounds. "The 8-6 [loss] to CBA, I take responsibility for that. We didn't change our approach when Pat [Johnson] went down. But to take that step back and lose by only two goals shows that we can battle through it."

Bethlehem will need to continue battling through Johnson's absence as it enters the heart of its Suburban Council schedule. After facing Saratoga Springs Tuesday, the Eagles visit defending league champion Niskayuna Thursday. Then following Saturday's home game against Burnt Hills-Ballston Lake, they play Guilderland April 30 and Shaker May 3.

Rounds said facing Niskayuna will be a challenge, but one that his team welcomes.

"A lot of teams go in dreading playing them, but I've found that our kids step up and give them a game," said Rounds.

Dutch need overtime to beat Streaks

The Guilderland boys lacrosse team survived its toughest Suburban Council test to date by edging Saratoga Springs 6-5 in overtime last Friday.

Paul Jones scored in the extra period to help the Dutchmen (4-0, 4-1) remain perfect in league play.

Guilderland built a 4-1 lead in the second quarter before Saratoga (1-2, 2-2) started chipping away. The Blue Streaks tied the game in the fourth quarter on Cody Nizolek's third goal of the game before Jones won it for Guilderland.

Eugene Sellie tallied twice and added an assist for the Dutchmen, who were coming off an impressive 15-0 victory over Columbia last Wednesday. Jones, Bryan Dyer and Patrick Wood all contributed a goal and an assist.

Guilderland returned to action Tuesday, when it hosted Shaker in a Suburban Council South Division game. The Dutchmen face Shenendehowa Thursday and Horace Greeley High School Saturday.

Szelests qualify for Jr. Olympics

Glenmont residents Niko and Stephanie Szelest qualified for the AAU Junior Olympics in Tae Kwon Do.

Niko (11) and Stephanie (9) placed at February's AAU regional qualifier in Troy to earn berths to the national tournament July 28 through Aug. 2 in Norfolk, Va. Niko took first place in sparring and forms in his age division, while Stephanie placed second in forms.

It will be the first trip to the Junior Olympics for Niko and Stephanie. Niko has been training for six years and will be promoted to black belt later this year, while Stephanie has been training for five years.

The Szelests train at Columbia Tae Kwon Do in East Greenbush. They previously trained at Phil Sung in Albany.

Colonie Court Club duo wins national title

By ROB JONAS
jonasr@spotlightnews.com

Al Spencer and George Cavooris have played handball for more than half a century.

But last month, the Capital District duo won their first national championship.

Spencer and Cavooris defeated players from New York City, Miami, St. Paul and San Diego to claim the 80+ men's doubles title at the United States

Handball Association's Masters Championships in Allentown, Pa.

"I've played against some good competition before, but we've never won anything of this magnitude before," said Cavooris, a retired New York City fireman living in Clifton Park.

"George has been through very few national championships, but I've been to quite a few over the last 18 years," said Spencer, who lives in Albany. "I've won the consolation three times as a singles player."

Cavooris and Spencer's first match proved to be

Dutch seek better support from pitchers

The Guilderland baseball team can bash the ball with any team in the Suburban Council.

The problem that the Dutchmen must solve is preventing other teams from bashing the ball.

A prime example came last Thursday against Saratoga Springs. Guilderland had 12 hits — one quarter of which were extra-base hits — but gave up 15 hits in a 16-13 loss.

"We need somebody to step up in our pitching staff," said Guilderland coach Doug LaValley. "Chris Gareau has had two good starts for us [both wins]. We just need someone else to step up."

The Blue Streaks (3-1 league, 4-2 overall) scored the fourth inning to take a

Bethlehem's offense regains its footing after losing Johnson

By ROB JONAS

The loss of one of its top players may have slowed down the Bethlehem boys lacrosse team, but it hasn't prevented the Eagles from starting the season strong.

Bethlehem (2-0 league, 3-1 overall) won three of its first four games including a 6-5 victory over Suburban Council South Division rival Colonie last Wednesday.

"We set a goal at the beginning of the year not to give up more than eight goals in a game, and so far ... we've done it," said Bethlehem coach Dave Rounds.

The Eagles have had to be strong defense after senior midfielder Pat Johnson injured his knee in the second game of the season, an 8-6 loss to Christian Brothers Academy. Johnson was one of Bethlehem's primary offensive weapons, providing both goals and assists.

"We lost Pat Johnson, and that took some time to adjust to," said

Rounds. "But we seem to have found our footing again."

The way Rounds helped Bethlehem regain its footing was by moving senior attacker Andy Conroy to Johnson's central midfield position. Rounds has also increased Conroy's playing time by keeping Conroy on the field when the second offensive line comes in.

"With Pat, we had a much more balanced pair of lines," said Rounds. "When he went down, we had one line that was strong and one that was weaker. By moving Andy to first and second lines, he's made both lines

Albany football team needs stability to improve

I think the NFL made a brilliant move by deciding to start its draft on a Thursday night. I mean, what else is a sports fan going to watch on a Thursday night — other than baseball, basketball or hockey? OK, moving on...

• If I were the parent of an Albany High School football player, I'd consider sending my kid to another school if for no other reason than just to have him play for a program that has some sense of stability.

The football program has been unstable for several years now, primarily because the school can't hold on to a varsity coach. The last three years alone have seen Joe Burke, Brian Spicer and Pete Porcelli guide the Falcons to a combined record of 2-25 as each of them brought their own coaching style to the program. That does not make for a stable situation.

Now, Albany is bringing in a new coach once again — one who will, presumably, change things once again. The problem is that change takes time to implement. If the new coach scraps everything that his predecessor did and introduces new offensive and defensive schemes, it's going to take at least a full season for him to get the players comfortable with them.

From the Sports Desk
Rob Jonas

I realize that Albany's administrators didn't intend there to be a revolving door attached to its varsity football coaching position. I'm sure with each coach the school has selected, the administrators believed that person was going to stick around. But now, they have to convince the players and their parents that the new person will be there for more than one season. And I don't think it's unreasonable for the players and their parents to be skeptical, given what's happened.

Personally, I don't think it's the right environment for a young player. A varsity football head coach isn't just in charge of the players on his team — he's in charge of the whole program. His offensive and defensive schemes have to be introduced at the modified level and reinforced at the freshman and junior varsity levels in order for the players to have a chance to be successful in those systems. If the varsity coach keeps changing, chances are minimal that the players will reach their full potential.

Honestly, I'd like to see Albany turn things around on the football field. I just don't think that it's going to happen anytime soon, no matter who they put in charge of next year's varsity team. And if I had a son either playing on or moving up to the varsity team, I'd be concerned that he would be at a competitive disadvantage because of all the changes that have happened over the last three years. I'm not talking about wins or losses — I'm just talking about being able to compete with an opponent for four quarters. If the Falcons finish 0-9 again but gave every team a true battle, I would be OK with that. But to be 0-9 and be blown out of nearly every game isn't fun for the athletes or their parents.

For the Albany players' sake, I hope the school finds someone it can hold on to for more than a year this time.

• Speaking of coaching changes in Albany, the city's largest university might be in the market for a new men's basketball coach soon. University at Albany coach Will Brown is a finalist for the vacant Dartmouth job.

Personally, I don't blame Brown for trying to get out of UAlbany while he has the chance to do so on his own terms.

I'm sure he sees the writing on the wall following the Great Danes' 7-25 finish this past season. Another season like that at UAlbany, and Brown would be searching for a new job.

Dartmouth isn't a great place to land, though. The Big Green have been in the doldrums for several years, and they're not the Ivy League destination school for top-notch basketball prospects that places like Penn, Harvard and Cornell are. If anything, Dartmouth is looking at a slow rise back to respectability.

At least, Brown has the chance to turn things around quickly at UAlbany. He started a bunch of younger players this past season — partly because of injuries to the upperclassmen, and partly because they played better than some of the upperclassmen. If they can develop their skills and learn to win close games, the Great Danes can shoot up the America East standings.

That's only an if, though, and Brown knows it. That's why he interviewed at Dartmouth now — while the value of guiding UAlbany to NCAA Tournament appearances in 2006 and 2007 is still strong, despite all the losing seasons he's accumulated over the last nine years.

If he doesn't get the Dartmouth job,
