BETHLEHEM — Two-and-a-half-yearold Emmett doesn't completely understand that he needs open heart surgery, but he does know what going to the doctor's office means.

"He does not like the hospitals," said Jessica Hotaling, 23, Emmett's mother. "The doctors just scare him, especially when he was younger, he would cry a lot." Now that the family has been seeing a cardiologist regularly since Emmett was five months old, doctors have the routine down, and now enter his room carrying a toy or ball.

Cemetery to remain nonprofit

Bethlehem Cemetery Association announces new board members

By MARCY VELTE

veltem@spotlightnews.com

BETHLEHEM -

The Bethlehem Cemetery Association is under new leadership after new board members were found to help operate the site.

It was announced last week former town Supervisor Jack Cunningham has been elected president of the new board. The state asked the non-profit in charge of Bethlehem Cemetery to seek-out new board members earlier this summer, instead of abandoning the burial ground to be cared for by the town.

'We're very positive about the change," said

Valerie Newell, who helped her husband, Tom Newell, operate the cemetery for the last 12 years. "Both my husband and I continue to support the board as they move forward with our expertise and provide assistance. We're excited the cemetery has such wonderful, competent leadership.'

The Newells announced in the spring they wished to retire and step down from the board. Tom Newell has been on the cemetery board for nearly 30 years. The original vote was to disband the nonprofit and abandon the cemetery to be cared for by the town. The state asked for this not to happen, and the town was involved in helping find new board members.

Valerie Newell thanked Supervisor John Clarkson in his role of actively spreading the word about the cemetery's needs. "He worked with us and tried to help where he could," she said.

"I think it's great that the cemetery will be staying a non-profit," said Clarkson. "We will work with them on any issue we can help with. Right now, we are providing storage space at Town Hall."

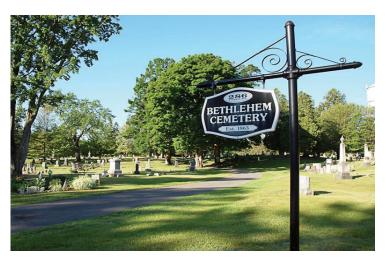

Bethlehem Cemetery has been in operation since 1865 and is the main cemetery in the center of town. It is still financially viable as there are still some lots left to be sold, though not many. The cemetery has no employees, but uses contractors for maintenance and grave digging.

Cunningham said he knew he wanted to become a new board member as soon as he read about it in The Spotlight. He'd also worked in the past in cooperation with the cemetery association and town's Water Department to help protect the site from damage.

"It was of interest to me because I'm a plot owner, and so is my mother," said Cunningham. "I grew up in the neighborhood. It's a beautiful spot, and I want to see it continue on. There will be no major changes. We just want to maintain operation."

The new board took over operation on July 1. Valerie Newell called the change a "best-case scenario."

'We're very happy with everything," she said, while encouraging those who have the time to still volunteer at the cemetery. Those on the board must own a cemetery plot, but any can volunteer to help garden or keep the site clean.

A new board was named last week for the Bethlehem Cemetery Association staving off fears of abandonment. Spotlight file photo

In his announcement, Cunningham thanked the Newells for their service to the community.

"Now as we carry on the tradition of excellence established by the previous board, we also want to thank outgoing members, especially Val and Tom Newell, for their years of selfless dedication. They have paved the way for our work going forward," said Cunningham.

Selkirk man indicted for drugs

A Selkirk man was arrested Thursday on federal drug trafficking and money laundering charges, according to the United States Attorney Office and the U.S. Postal Inspection Service, Boston Division.

Jeremy VanWormer, 28, is charged by indictment with one count of participating in a conspiracy to distribute more than 100 kilograms of marijuana and four counts of participating in a conspiracy to launder drug trafficking proceeds. VanWormer was arraigned Thursday, Aug. 13 in Albany before United States Magistrate Judge Randolph F. Treece and released under pretrial supervision and secured bond pending a trial scheduled for Oct. 13 before United States District Court Judge Mae DíAgostino.

On the drug trafficking conspiracy charge, VanWormer faces at least 10 years of imprisonment and up to life, a maximum fine of $8 million and a term of supervised release of eight years to life.

On each of the money laundering conspiracy charges, VanWormer faces a maximum imprisonment term of 20 years, a maximum fine of $500,000, and a maximum term of supervised release of three years.

According to the indictment, VanWormer allegedly participated in a marijuana trafficking conspiracy from about Jan. 1, 2013 to Nov. 14, 2014. He also allegedly participated in four separate money laundering conspiracies during that time. The indictment seeks forfeiture of assets, including real properties in Troy and Watervliet.

According to Police Commander Adam Hornick, the Bethlehem Police Department assisted the U.S. Postal Inspector, Department of Homeland Security and Drug Enforcement Agency in the execution of federal search and arrest warrants at two residences in Selkirk. This is the result of a long term investigation that was conducted jointly between the Bethlehem police and these agencies. It is being prosecuted by Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael Barnett.

Eight prosecuted for retail-related crimes

District Attorney David Soares announced Monday, Aug. 10, that more people have been prosecuted in connection with retail crime groups in Albany County.

Eight people have been prosecuted, two being sentenced and six pleading guilty in connection to two separate crimes in the towns of Colonie and Guilderland. According to the district attorney's office, the Capital District is a prime location for organized retail criminals.

Four people "did utter and possess" counterfeit bills on Nov. 22, 2014 between 7 p.m. and 11 p.m. at multiple locations in the Town of Colonie, said the district attorney's office.

The four allegedly made small purchases at several businesses in order to get change from fraudulent $100 bills. Additional fraudulent $100 bills were allegedly found in their vehicle.

Ephraim Jackson, 31, and Feliz Diaz, 21, both of New York City, Jende Akinleye, 21, of Cortland, and Wilbert Lajara, 24, of Bronx, all pleaded guilty to felony criminal possession in the first degree.

Jackson was sentenced to three to 11 years in state prison July 14, 2015. Diaz and Lajara face three to nine years in state prison when sentenced Sept. 9, and Akinleye faces three to nine years when sentenced Oct. 8.

Colonie police and the United States Secret Service conducted the investigation for the above four people.

One man was sentenced and three more pleaded guilty for their roles in a credit card scam involving 30 fraudulent cards, said the district attorney's office.

State Police stopped Lanique Valentine, 33, of Norfolk, Va., Kahlil Ramsey, 20, Diondra Garris, 21, and Anthony Recico, 21, all of Brooklyn, for speeding on I-90 in the Town of Guilderland Nov. 17, 2014.

The four allegedly all possessed fraudulent credit and debit cards. Authorities said 30 different fraudulent cards were recovered in all. State Police recovered several iPads, iPods and other electronics from the vehicle, which were purchased by members of the group using the fraudulent cards from different Best Buy stores.

All four pleaded guilty to criminal possession of a forged instrument in the second degree, a felony, and misdemeanor conspiracy.

Valentine was sentenced to face two to four years in state prison for the criminal possession charge May 20. Ramsey faces about two to five years when sentenced Sept. 23. Garris faces one to three years when sentenced Aug. 17, and Reico faces one to three years when sentenced Aug. 12. They will all face a concurrent one year for their conspiracy charges as well.

Garris was also charged with one to three years in state prison on bail jumping charges Thursday morning, Aug. 13. According to the district attorney, Garris failed to attend her own court appearance Feb. 13, 2015. The sentence will be served concurrently with the fraudulent credit card sentencing.

Trumped-up charges for local star

Mom talks national attention for Fox News host, growing up in Bethlehem

By TRICIA CREMO

cremot@spotlightnews.com

— After Fox newscaster Megyn Kelly called out real-estate mogul and Republican front-runner Donald Trump for his past derogatory comments about women, the ensuing scandal became the biggest topic to come out of the debate.

"I just about jumped out of my seat when Trump went off into that narcissistic rant," said Linda Kelly, a Delmar resident for over 30 years and mother of Megyn Kelly, in reference to Trump's controversial comments after the question

Post-debate Trump told television news crews that the question was "unfair" saying, among other comments, that Kelly had "behaved very badly" during the debate.

Later that night, Trump produced a total of over 30 tweets and retweets, sent between 2:30 and 4:30 a.m., proclaiming his and others' negative opinions of Kelly's performance during the debate and the Fox News network, which aired the debate.

Kelly, however, has largely declined to comment on Trump's reaction.

"I didn't raise my daughter to be a victim," said Linda Kelly. "Her boss calls her about every day, but she's been handling it all very well. She takes nothing. She learned that from her mother."

The Republican debate has indeed turned Megyn

Kelly into a topic of conversation across the nation. Whether you are one of the 423,000 views of her nightly news show or not, everyone, it seems, has an opinion of Megyn Kelly.

The fact that such a buzzed-about figure is from Delmar is something that some residents may be surprised to hear. Others, however, may remember Kelly's presence in Bethlehem schools, on the Pop Warner cheer team or at Saint Thomas Church, which the Kellys attended regularly.

According to Linda Kelly, Megyn sill considers Delmar home. "She loves coming home to Delmar. It really is home for her," said Linda of her daughter.

Linda said that her daughter still comes to visit her occasionally. But more often, it is Linda who goes to visit Megyn in Manhattan, where she, her husband and three children live in close vicinity to the Fox News studio where her show is filmed.

Linda, Megyn and the rest of the Kelly family moved to Delmar in 1979, when Megyn was just nine years old. Linda Kelly has now lived in Delmar for more than 30 years, and Megyn's older sister Suzanne Crossly still lives in Delmar as well, while their older brother Peter has moved to Richmond Virginia.

"We taught our children to go fly your wings, follow your dreams, and they did," said Linda.

Linda was head nurse of psychiatry at the VA Hospital in Albany, while her late husband Edward Kelly taught education at the State University of New York at Albany. He died of a heart attack right before Christmas, when Megyn Kelly was 15 years

Linda remembered the night of her late husband's death very clearly. "We all got in a circle, Megyn, Peter, Suzanne and me, and I said 'You have to remember we are the Kelly's. We know our values. We will go on."

It was Megyn, said Linda, that took the experience the worst, because she was the youngest at the time.

After the death of

Fox News host and Delmar native

Edward, Linda spoke to Meghan about breaking her curfew, "I had to tell her, 'I don't want to worry about you on top of everything else," said Linda.

"She wasn't an angel, but she was a perfect teenager," she said, proud of her famous daughter.

Megyn Kelly later went to Syracuse University, then to Albany Law School. She practiced law in the Chicago area for nine years before switching career paths to journalism and eventually moving up the chain at Fox News.

The network is famously right leaning, yet Kelly has said in interviews that she considers herself an Independent politically, with some conservative leanings.

Though a conservativeleaning person is no longer the norm in Delmar nowadays, as recent local elections have consistently elected Democratic officials, one must remember that it was not long ago that the town was primarily Republican.

Only since 2013 has the Democratic Party had the majority on the Town Board. For the 120 years before that, it was the Republican Party. Thus, when Megyn was growing up here, the town certainly had more Republicans than Democrats.

Melissa Kermani, chair of the Bethlehem Republican Party said she is in favor of the newscaster. "It's so exciting that she's from this area. She's really an up and comer. It's wonderful that she's on Fox News," she said.

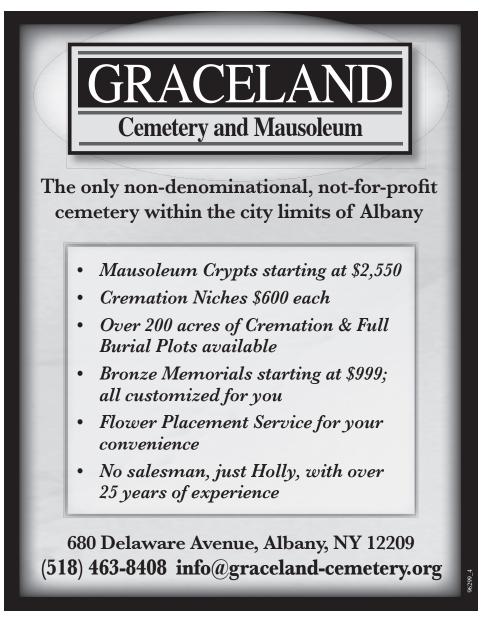

Kermani also thought the Fox News moderators asked fair questions at the Thursday, Aug. 6, Republican Debate.

Though the narrative since the debate has surrounded how fair the questions asked by the three moderators were, viewers should not be surprised that Kelly asked Trump to clarify his opinion on women.

Kelly once lectured Kentucky senator and 2016 Republican candidate Rand Paul for his reputation of arguing with female reporters and asked former Alaska governor Mike Huckabee to clarify why he thought it was trashy for women to swear in public.

Restaurant owners blame recent decision on town officials

By TRICIA CREMO

cremot@spotlightnews.com

GLENMONT —

Town officials are being put to blame after the closing of Milestone Restaurant in Glenmont.

The doors of Milestone Restaurant will soon close, due to what the business owners account to financially difficulties caused by last year's tax increase, a bad winter and the denial of a proposed plan to replace the restaurant with a dog kennel. The plan fell through when the town's Zoning Board decided not to give the kennel a variance to allow construction.

The decision to close was announced on the Milestone Facebook page two weeks ago on Wednesday, Aug. 5. It was met with shock and sadness from its many fans

The only reason the Zoning Board gave for its decision, said Lou and Mike Mastrantuono, owners of Milestone Restaurant, was because the air quality would not be good enough for the dogs.

"How can you OK humans to eat food here, if you're going to say that the dust isn't safe for dogs? How can you do that?" said Lou Mastrantuono, clearly confused by the Zoning Board's decision. "People are eating and drinking here, and you're worried about dust on a dog?"

"I was shocked," said Lou Mastrantuono, who said he still does not understand the board's decision. "I don't feel like it was explained at all. It was a dismissal," he said emphatically about the decision.

Dan Coffey, president of the Zoning Board, said the variance was denied for a number of reasons. The board received a number of complaints about potential noise from the dogs from nearby Days Inn and Johnny B's Diner. The project also did not have the amount of acreage required for a dog kennel. The board felt the project would significantly change the character of the neighborhood, so it was unanimously denied.

"There's been a lot of turnover in that location and it's unfortunate," said Coffey. "There's been difficulty keeping a restaurant there. Hopefully a use can be found that's more consistent with the neighborhood."

Zoning in Bethlehem requires that kennels have at least five acres on ether side of any neighboring business. The variance would have allowed for an exception.

The hotel complained for fear of the noise disturbance that the kennel would create so close to guest rooms. The hotel, however, advertises itself as dog-friendly and allows guests to have up to two dogs stay in each room, and windows to the rooms facing the Milestone Restaurant do not open.

The Milestone building also has walls which are built out of two foot thick stone, that look like they could be the walls of a cave.

"We've had bands play into the wee hours of the night and never had complaints," said Lou Mastrantuono, who also noted that they have loud surround sound speakers. The restaurant also sits right on a very loud and busy highway. Noise would also not be an issue to the nearby Johnny B's Diner, as that restaurant closes at 2 p.m.

Matt Sames, who would have owned the dog kennel, also owns several Pet Lodges dog kennel businesses in Glenville, Albany, Clifton Park, Williston and Plattsburgh. When the Zoning Board asked Sames for neighbor recommendations to make sure that the noise would not be overbearing, he came up with glowing recommendations form neighboring businesses that are closer to his kennels than the hotel is to Milestone.

When the decision became well known around town, and less and less people started coming to the restaurant once they heard that the restaurant was looking to sell. Lou estimates business dropped

Now, the restaurant is set to close permanently on Thursday, Aug. 27, and sit as a dormant, boarded building. Also. the first building that drivers see when they come to town.

to half after the Zoning

Board's decision.

The Mastrantuonos felt all of the reasons for the Zoning Board's decision - such as the building's proximity to the road and the Days Inn and Suites next door - were facts the Board had known long before the process of asking for a zoning variance even began, facts that a person would know just by looking at the building.

"They made us jump through hoops, for seven, eight months. We had all of their problems addressed. Why take the good part of eight months, and let someone spend tens of thousands of dollars on surveys and architects if it's not going to work out, said Lou Mastrantuono. "We really believed it was going to work."

The brothers said the final decision by the Zoning Board blind-sided them, and the man that planned to build a dog kennel at the restaurant, Matt Sames. Because the listing for the property was off the market during the eight months that they went through the Zoning Board process, and the market for real estate was slow this summer, the final decision was devastating enough that the restaurant had to close.

"More governmental infringement on the businesses of America... You will be missed," said Randy Flavin, in response to the same post. Other, similarly disappointed responses followed. The pair said the recent increase in taxes due to the reassessment didn't help the situation either. Though the Mastrantuono said they approached the Town Board with their problem and made adjustments like changing all the lighting in the restaurant to energyefficient bulbs, in order to receive the tax rebate, they said the board still did not do anything to help bring down their taxes.

"You go to these meetings and it's like a sounding post. That's all it is. They're just there to listen to your problems,' said Lou Mastrantuono. "When you have a business, it's almost like a child. When you're home you're thinking about the business, so when you lose it, it really is a loss."

The Mastrantuono said that they have not had any contact with Sames since they saw him at the final Zoning Board meeting where the plan was dismissed. According to Lou Mastrantuono, Sames picked up his briefcase in a huff, "hightailed" his way out of the room, and was not heard from again.

Now that their restaurant is gone, few local family owned places remain, especially in Glenmont. Their failure, however, is not due to lack of effort, not to lack of experience, as the two have 40-50 years of combined restaurant experience between them.

The Mastrantuono previously owned Sophia's Family Restaurant in Greenville for 15 years - a great feat in the restaurant industry- but say they opened Milestone to get closer to Albany. Before the restaurant was Milestone, the location became famous for birthing celebrity chef Dale Miller, when the restaurant was under different management. Milestone's space formerly operated as Stone Ends Restaurant, then as Bella Bistro, before being sold to the Mastrantuono family.

The flipping of restaurants and its location on Frontage Road didn't help business, but the restaurant was consistently well-reviewed for it's medium-priced Italian/ American dishes. And just like Johnny B's Diner two doors down, Milestone enjoyed a relatively small, yet devoted following, willing to make the trek to the end of the Delmar Bypass.

"We had a great group of dedicated customers. They would bring their friends and say, I found this diamond in Glenmont' and literally bring people

Budgeting is a powerful tool in controlling college student spending

By RUTH MAHONEY, President. Capital Region, KeyBank

ollege tuition begets angst, and for good reason. According to Sallie Mae, the average family spent nearly $25,000 on college related expenses in school year 2014-2015, which includes tuition, room and board, transportation and all other collegerelated expenses.1

That college is expensive is not breaking news. Annual tuition increases are well documented, as is the sticker shock most parents experience. However, many parents have been thinking about and planning for their child's education for years. They have saved, budgeted and borrowed to provide their child with the opportunity to boost his or her lifelong earning potential. Unfortunately, what many families find is that it is not the big ticket items that strain their finances but rather the accumulation of often overlooked miscellaneous expenses that become a regular financial drain.

The truth is, the hidden costs of college are a real issue. When the average family estimates costs, they tend to focus on the figures offered on college web sites and school catalogs: Tuition and fees, room and board, and books and supplies.

What they often overlook is travel, mandatory fees, cell phone service . . . even laundry, coffee, snacks and entertainment expenses.

expenses.² In fact, before the average college student even steps foot on campus this year, the National Retail Federation says parents will have already spent $899 on back-to-school shopping.3

Identify where the money is going

The most effective way to manage spending for the upcoming college calendar year is to make a list of potential expenses. And account for everything, because the reality is that most of today's college students want and expect more than a place to live, food, tuition and supplies. Socializing—dinners, movies, clubbing, shopping—is the foundation on which many lifelong friendships are made, and these relationships are a large part of the college experi-

Plan accordingly and check for rates on bus, train or air travel. If your child will be taking the car to school or commuting to campus, don't overlook the cost of insurance, gas and parking fees.

- Personal This includes minor expenses like haircuts and laundry but can also include childcare or any other personal expense.
- Fees Some school-related fees are mandatory, like lab and dorm fees; others are optional, like sports passes or gym memberships. Review your college's website or contact the admissions office for a breakdown of these costs.
- Internet, cable and cell phone service plans - Contact local service providers for rates. For the best cell phone service plan, consider a family plan.

• Abroad programs – Because technology is making our world figuratively smaller, many colleges encourage—and potential employers value—study abroad programs that provide students with enriching cross-cultural experiences. However, it is usually more expensive than a semester at your child's home university. Review how tuition can be applied to study abroad, and don't forget to look at exchange rates, immunizations, passport and visa fees and additional health insurance expenses.

Once you can account for anticipated expenses, you can restraint—that what they save get. Will your child face a lot of pressure to spend money? Yes, without doubt, but it is important that they begin to take an active role in managing finances responsibly.

Develop a budget

The key to a successful budget, especially for a college student, is to keep it simple, realistic and goal oriented. First, look at your list of expenses. What items are required, which are luxuries? Then determine income. Will your student be receiving any money, either through jobs, allowances, loans or any other means? Once you know income and expenses, you can develop an easy to understand budget, which should include some incentives. It's important that students learn today will have more value tomorrow. A gift card, extra trip home or a senior year vacation is a great way to do this.

Remember, the primary purpose of college is to help students gain an education that will prepare them for a fulfilling career full of great earning potential. By helping your child make strong financial decisions throughout their college experience, you are not only saving yourself from becoming a parental ATM, but more important, you are giving your child something even more valuable—a financial head start.

5 things parents should teach their kids about credit cards an organization comprised of current and future college parents, 84 percent of college undergraduates have at least one credit card and 50 percent have four or more. The average balance: $3,173.4

This isn't to say credit cards are evil. For many students they are a valuable tool for flexibly managing expenses. They are also a means of establishing positive credit, which can be extremely helpful as college graduates transition into their professional lives. The following are five tips parents can share with their college students to help them responsibly manage credit.

This is the most important lesson you can teach your child, because of the need to demonstrate to lenders that he or she is responsible. So work with your child to establish a smart, realistic budget and then have your child charge only what is allowed for in the spending plan or for emergencies.

GCSD shifts tax service to BOCES

BCSD made similar cost-saving move

GUILDERLAND —

Guilderland Central Schools will now be contracting out its tax collection, following several other school districts in the area.

Bethlehem Central and Ravena-Coeymans-Selkirk Central School District both made the switch last year, after the Town of Bethlehem announced it would no longer be collecting taxes on behalf of the districts. This is following the decision to consolidate the departments of town clerk and receiver of taxes.

Guilderland will now contract with BOCES to collect taxes, like the other school districts.

The district's Assistant Superintendent for Business Neil Sanders said using BOCES is cheaper than if the district were to contract it out with a private company. The change will be cost neutral.

"From our perspective, there was no detriment," said Sanders. "BOCES (has) a tax collection service, and this has been successful for the town last year."

Those who wish to make payments in person at a local bank can still do so. Residents can use Capital Bank in Price Chopper Plaza in Slingerlands. Another alternative is to mail payments into Capital Region BOCES.

Sanders said he felt the change has been a transparent process. "It's been as seamless as possible for a transition like this," he continued.

Supervisor John

Clarkson said he felt the process is more efficient. Schools won't have to deal with multiple towns, and for us we consolidated, which was much better to keep down costs."

When the change was made last year, Bethlehem Central was set to see a savings of about $32,000 because the district would no longer have to pay the town for the service. It was to see more savings this year because the state will provide some reimbursement for using BOCES services.

The town will see savings because they will not have to pay overtime to employees who previously did the billing or transfer personnel from other departments. The town will also be able to better use the time of employees. With reduction of one employee, the town expects a continued annual savings of $90,000.

Raising champions

NYS Baseball Hall of Fame will induct La Salle, Bethlehem coach Jesse Braverman this fall

By MICHAEL HALLISEY

lass began every summer afternoon on the ballfield at Bethlehem Central Middle School. The crunch of gravel underneath Jesse Braverman's beat-up Ford Escort could be heard as he promptly rolled in at noon. He'd step out of the car with as many as 50 to 70 neighborhood kids already waiting for him. Instead of a syllabus, Braverman would pull out bags of helmets, bats and baseballs. It was the School of Baseball and class was now in session. In time, kids would simply call it "Jesse Ball."

Adam Hornick was a school kid living in Clarksville, several miles away outside the center of town, "but I was there pretty regularly," he said. "Jess was very dedicated to the sport, but even more so to the community. He was there literally every day in the summer. ... It really helped in the development of the kids, because it wasn't about playing in a league structure, it was more about having fun."

Kids ranging from Little League age to approaching college would attend. Two captains would be picked out of the lot, each choosing players for his or her team. Each side had to accommodate the number of players. A batter's line-up looked more like a classroom attendance sheet, and the ballfield could have three shortstops, and five times as many outfielders on defense.

"I have kidded with my wife, Debbie, that my love of baseball began in the womb," said Braverman, Braverman, a special education teacher by profession, started teaching at the middle school in 1974, and immediately inquired about opportunities to coach baseball. "[The athletic director] said there were none available but he would keep me in mind,"

Braverman learned to play ball in the sandlots of Queens. But, when the Baseball Gods bestowed the gifts of athleticism to the few, they blessed him with the body of an educator. He developed into a left-handed pitcher like Sandy Koufax, only several inches shorter. When he played his first organized baseball game at 11, he went up against kids five years his senior. His only goal was to make sure his advisories didn't mistake him for a batboy.

"As much as I am indebted to Jesse Braverman for giving me a shot when no other coach would, I am more grateful for the copious amounts of time and energy he donated, often without any compensation, to shaping so many young men's lives positively," said Delmar native Seth Friedman.

"I finally got my shot in baseball with the freshman team in 1985," said Braverman. "That is when I really started ... going to the field each day at noon and organizing pick-up games for the local kids."

"Jesse Ball" was emulated from Braverman's days growing up in Queens. About thirty years before he made the habit of driving his Escort to the local baseball field, Braverman was one of many kids waiting anxiously for Joe Austin to hitting fungos and pitching against both sides in two, sometimes, three games. Jerseys, hats, equipment - all purchased and provided to the kids. Didn't matter where the kid was from, religion or ethnicity, each kid got a shot to play.

"[Braverman] was such a great mentor to young ballplayers," said Glenmont native Matt Bechard. "He didn't care who your parents were, where you played before or what your skill level was. All he asked was that you loved the game and played as hard as you could. That always brought the best out in his players. I use a lot of

#MilesofSmiles challenge kicks off worldwide initiative to support Habitat for Humanity cause

SCHENECTADY — More than a thousand people lined the streets of downtown Schenectady to show community pride and to support Habitat for Humanity of Schenectady County, Wednesday, Aug. 12.

Dignitaries included city Mayor Gary McCarthy and New York Assemblyman Angelo Santabarbara.

"There's a lot to smile about here in Schenectady," said Santabarbara, referencing how downtown has been revitalized over the past several year with an influx of new business, and the anticipated opening of the Rivers Casino and Resort. "The world is watching us."

Showing off smiley faces, signs and banners, the community came together to show pride in the city and to encourage others to donate to Habitat for Humanity.

A precession down Main Street kicked off the first mile in the Miles of Smiles campaign, a global initiative to spread smiles around the world. Miles of Smiles is challenging communities across the globe to show their smiles in a photo or video through posts on social medial using

#MilesofSmiles and #SchenectadySmiles.

"Schenectady is a city rich in history and Miles of Smiles is shining a positive light on all of its accomplishments," said McCarthy. "We are so fortunate to have residents and businesses who are creative and passionate."

Madelyn Thorne, interim executive director of Habitat for Humanity of Schenectady County was also on hand to take a crisp $10 bill donation from the Schenectady mayor.

"It's all about community pride," said Jeff Goronkin of Buzz Media Solutions. "In Schenectady, we lined up for a mile buy anyone or any group, in any community can show off their pride with a simple smile and by posting it to social media with the hashtag. We want to encourage people to use their creativity to show the world their smile and support their local Habitat for Humanity chapter."

Many groups and volunteers were involved in the planning and execution of the day, including Buzz Media Solutions, Downtown Schenectady Improvement Corp., The Capital Region Chamber, City Hall, The Millennial Council, Proctors, MVP Health Care, Schenectady County Community College, the police and fire departments, and many others.

FITNESS

Take it slow

Reality weight loss shows are misguided and dangerous

By DAN ROMAND

news@spotlightnews.com

hile working with people, I try to have them focus not on short-term goals. Notice, I didn't say to neglect having a long-term goal.

Take for example a 45-year-old man who is looking to lose 100 pounds. Men this age have to worry about a slowing metabolism, especially if he's not exercising. You can't maintain the same diet you once did as a 20-year-old and expect to keep a healthy weight. In such a scenario, weight gain can happen quickly. Let's call this man Jim.

Jim is motivated. His doctor has advised him to lose the weight, and his marriage just recently ended, so he's looking to get himself back into the market. Often times, a client like Jim expects he can lose the weight in one month.

Um. No.

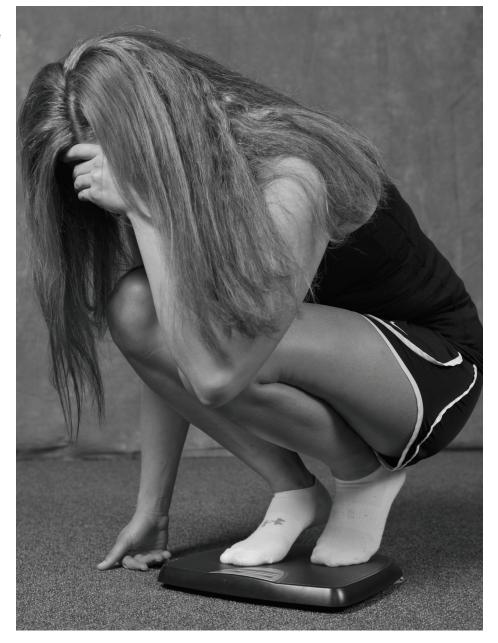

Unfortunately, fitness trainers hear this all the time. Promise. And it stems from these extreme home workouts often advertised on television. You'll hear things like, "follow our program and we guarantee you'll lose the weight in two months." First off, losing 100 pounds in two months is not healthy, nor is it a sustainable long term. Sorry, but the "The Biggest Loser" and other reality shows have done a disservice to the mentality of the severely obese.

On "The Biggest Loser," they workout an average of eight to ten hours a day, and the contestants' caloric intake is extremely low; too low, in my opinion. Contestants also have the benefit of being insulated from the real world, so they don't deal with real life scheduled and temptations. And, television time does not translate into real time. A week at the ranch is sometimes two weeks or

Better than diamond rings

The widow-making, production-killing, Dungeons & Dragons-eske imaginary pastime of Fantasy Football is here

By MICHAEL HALLISEY

n 2006, the Pew Research Center out of Washington D.C. estimated that 5 percent of all adults play fantasy sports, two-thirds of whom played fantasy football. Fantasy sports may lend credit to baseball for its origins, but football reigns as the Mack Daddy of them all.

These imaginary leagues spring to life every August as NFL training camps open. For most, the official start to the regular season traditionally commences on the Sunday after Labor Day. For those who own a fantasy team, or a half dozen, the season starts once the trash talking begins; that's on Draft Day.

You know the joke: Fantasy Football is just Dungeons & Dragons for jocks. It's cosmic karma for all the times popular athletes mocked and ridiculed the geeks huddled in the back corner of the high school cafeteria. How the tables turn as balding fat men past their athletic primes gather in bars conjuring 5-star quarterbacks to lead a team they named after off-color jokes that would land them in human resources

Focus! You need to prepare yourself for the trash talking that will inevitably ensue. To arm yourself, don't turn to a thesaurus. You'll only hurt yourself. Instead, you need to concentrate on building your team.

Setting:

The average fantasy baller plays in a single season draft. No dynasty, or carrying players over from previous seasons. It's a oneshot deal where you don't need to concern yourself with how many years a player may have left in the tank. (However, in my opinion, dynasty leagues add layers of enjoyment, expanding the experience from a few months to an entire year.)

Approach:

There are your Tier

One, Tier Two, Tier Three and Tier Four players. For the sake of this conversation Tier One represents the elite. Opinions and home team affiliation aside, there are only three players worth being called "elite" in any given year.

Consider your standard bell curve. Of all the players to choose from, 16 percent are out of consideration. These are the players most magazines won't bother to list. Another 68 percent are average players, half of whom you will choose from towards the very end of the draft. With that said, we've just eliminated 1,425 players you will not consider drafting.

Your average bell curve states 16 percent of your data field as high performers, that's 271 players for you to choose from. In a 16-team league, that's fodder for the first 16 rounds in the draft. The elite player represents the top one-tenth of one percent. In years past, Tom Brady, Drew Brees and Aaron Rodgers were the elite players whose ability to garner points was head and shoulders above their

Respect Tier Two:

We talked about four different tiers of players. Tier Two consists of roughly 33 players, representing the Top 2 percent of the field. Unless you have one of the first three picks of the draft, you should be landing two Tier Two players. Not bad, when you consider you're likely to be picking two of the best players from any given team here: Jamaal Charles, Adrian Pedersen, Calvin Johnson, Odell Beckham, Jr – they will give you something to cheer about during Sunday night highlight reels.

Watch for Pitfalls:

Tier One: 3 players Tier Two: 33 players Tier Three: 237 players Tier Four: 577 players

There is a fine line between a Tier Three and Tier Four ballplayer. A touchdown a week may be the difference between the two calibers, but that's nearly 100 points over the course of the year. Most leagues reward a point for every reception, making those obscure third-down backs valuable towards the end. A starting tight end may catch three balls balls for 60-yards and give you nine points. A third-down back back who runs for 50-yards and catches five balls for 40-yards gives you 14. An accurate assessment of a player within this group can serve to make a difference between a losing season and making a playoff run.

Most leagues have you choose a team for defense and special teams. By default, roughly half of your teams fall under Tier Three. That's a conservative approach. Truly, more than half of the teams to choose from fall under Tier Four. Many of the more successful fantasy GMs out there will draft two, Tier Three defenses, leaving their competition out in the cold.

Draft Room Strategy:

And, that's just one strategy that will reveal itself on Draft Day. Controlling supply in a "supply and demand" environment is a business approach well suited for fantasy football. Get the best players off the board. If that means you come out looking like Matt Millen picking six wideouts before you choose a quarterback, so be it. That's six very good wide receivers the rest of the league doesn't have, creating trade leverage for you.

Game on:

Championships are not won on Draft Day alone. You have to be willing to trade, and trade effectively. Don't be that guy who only offers up players you don't like. Let's put it this way; you know that player you nearly cut? He stinks. And, the rest of your league knows it.

You also need to pay attention to the waiver wire. Victor Cruz, T.Y. Hilton, and Julian Edlemann are names from past years that emerged only after the season started, and wound up being huge assets for teams down the line. Remember, those last few picks from Draft Day will only pan out to be Tier Four performers. Dropping them for a potential star is absolutely worth the risk.

At the very least, pick a player or two you like. If you can at least root for a ballplayer from your favorite team, it gives you something to look forward to each Sunday.

Huyck Preserve Celebrates 84 years

ALBANYCOUNTY—

Contra for Conservation will be an evening of dancing and dining overlooking Lincoln Pond at the Huyck Preserve in Rensselaerville.

The preserve is celebrating its 84th year as an independently owned, non-profit 2000-acre nature preserve and biological research station, and this event will serve as the annual fundraiser to ensure the preservation of this vital regional resource.

In addition to beautiful public hiking trails that include unrivaled views of the Rensselaerville waterfalls, the preserve is dedicated to environmental education and research.

The preserve offers a field-based Nature Study program for elementary students; a Natural History Day Program, for middle school and junior high students and a Wildlife Ecology Research residential program for grades 11 and 12.

This summer the Huyck Preserve hosted 11 students from the Gwangju Science Academy in South Korea for three weeks of hands-on research in Wildlife Ecology culminating in a final paper and poster session.

For adults, the preserve offers a Thursday night lecture series at the Eldridge Research Center through Aug. 20, with 6:30 p.m. coffee and dessert followed by a one-hour lecture at 7:00 p.m. (check the website for a detailed list of topics – www. huyckpreserve.org).

The preserve also offers nature walks led by experts in the diverse flora and fauna that abounds within its acreage.

To celebrate all of its accomplishments as well as to continue the commitment of environment al conservation, education, recreation and research, the Huyck Preserve invites all to a night of dining and dancing - Contra for Conservation - on Saturday, August 22nd at the beautiful shore of Lincoln Pond.

The evening will begin with a cocktail hour at 5:30 p.m. where guests can relish in the beauty of the preserve at sunset while perusing the diverse auction items available during the live and silent auctions.

Children's activities will also be available for the enjoyment of the younger guests. An assortment of seasonal farm-fare from Heather Ridge Farm will be available with the purchase of a meal ticket (reservations required). Closing out the night will be traditional folk dance music by local six-piece band, Set Americain, including live Contra dance demonstration and instruction.

Dr. Dawn O'Neal, Huyck Preserve Executive Director says, "The Preserve is a unique and special gem of the Helderbergs that offers both the scientist and the lay person the resources to enjoy nature."

Food service marketing firm Technomic released a report stating 61% of better-burger customers seek out customization options like the "Build Your Better" counter at BurgerFi in Latham. Unique side orders, like below, also lead to return customers, said the firm.

Better burger trending chains coming into town several years ago, now the list of names include Juicy Burgers, Smash Burger, Burger 21, Shake Shack, and Five Guys. That list is already expected to grow with the anticipated openings of Elevation Burger and Crave later this year, but not any sooner than the newest kid in town: BurgerFi.

Opening its doors in Latham last week, BurgerFi falls into the better-burger niche by promising beef that is chemical-free and a menu uniquely creative.

Since opening its first storefront in February 2011, the franchise has opened 72 locations, making it among the fastest growing restaurant chains in the country. The chain plans to have 100 locations operating before April of next year. Earlier this year, the corporation announced plans to open locations internationally, with 40 stores in and around Mexico City and additional locations in Panama and England.

These figures defy a June 2011 Fortune article announcing the "The end of the 'better burger' bubble." Couple BurgerFi's successes with the fact shares of ownership in both The Habit Burger and Shake Shack have publically exchanged in the stock market since last year, the bubble keeps growing.

Albany Jane, of the popular local food blog AlbanyEats.net, admitted she was skeptical over the prospects of yet another burger place in town. But, she said the trend is a welcomed one.

"I don't know what's fueling it, but I really hope we can keep doing it," said Jane. "Hopefully it's more from the consciousness of the public to have a better understanding of the ingredients that they eat. People have seen the pink slime and the McNugget videos. I hope that's where it's coming from."

Pink slime made headlines in 2012 when ABC News ran a segment on low-cost meat products. Former USDA scientist Gerald Zirnstein described the product produced from processing meat scraps as "pink slime." Future reports included the notorious image of a pink substance akin to a squeezed out tube of toothpaste.

[Albany Jane keeps her identity a secret to keep her reader's attention on the reviews.]

"I think the trend is transparency," said Daniel Berman, a community ambassador for Yelp.com and amateur food blogger at FUSSYlittleBLOG. com. "People are starting to be aware of where their food is coming from, and they want to know what's going on and what's going into their food."

According to a food service research and consulting firm, it's the spice of life influencing the popularity of the better burger trend.

Technomic said the increase of availability and variety of gourmet burger restaurants that promise customization and high-quality products is continuing the popularity of the better burger industry. Last week, the firm released results from its Burger Consumer Trend Report, compiling information from approximately 1,500 consumers, of which 57 percent reportedly consume a hamburger on a weekly basis.

"Utlizing value beef cuts and incorporating non-beef proteins can help lower costs and broaden the range of need states burgers can satisfy," state Sara Monnette, Technomic vice president. "Specialty ingredients like pretzel buns can enhance the value perception, and unique toppings and sauces, stuffed patties and premium sides can add to crave-ability and brand differentiation."

BurgerFi boasts of providing products coming "from the farm" and "not the lab" in its marketing material. The beef comes from Meyer Natural Angus in Montana, a roam-free ranch where the cattle are grass fed (for the majority of their lives explained one representative. The cattle are later fed grain to create the desired marbling of the meat.) The ranch promises no hormones or antibiotics, and the humane treatment of the animals is audited through a USDA-FSIS approved third-party certified process.

The restaurant offers a chef-inspired menu with sandwiches like the "Breakfast All Day Burger," that dresses the patty with fried egg, hash brown, grilled onions, bacon and dressed with maple syrup. There are several different burgers to choose from, including a 28-day dry-aged brisket burger, aptly named "The Twenty-Eight." But, if none of the combos fit your fancy, there is a customization bar at the counter.

"It's an exciting time, knowing that we're introducing our customers to healthier and higher quality alternatives to some of the food they may be used to," said Bill Lia, Jr., partner of Burger Ventures, LLC. "We've got great food and a great atmosphere, and we're keeping sustainability in mind at the same time."

Each franchise location is said to be built to reduce its carbon footprint on the environment, speaking to another conscious movement, the Green movement. At the Latham location, tables are constructed with compressed wood, and each chair is made from 111 recycled Coke bottles.

"I think it's a good addition to have fast food where the product is well raised – it's grass-fed, no hormones or antibiotics," said Jane. "It's really nice to walk into a place that's competing with Five Guys and Red Robin, in those price markets, and bring a superior product in the quality of beef they have."

For Berman, who went into the food blogging world eight years ago to help educate consumers on local restaurants, he hopes BurgerFi will establish a new benchmark in service.

"Hopefully, what it will do is serve to elevate the standard of burgers," said Berman. "Not just in fast food places, but also from the other restaurants around town."

Since Technomic's last study two years ago, there have been increased demands on Full Service (FSRs) and Limited Service or fast food (LSRs) restaurants for certain menu items.

Raising champions

what Jesse brought as a coach to the kids I coach, regardless of the sport."

Braverman started coaching organized baseball in 1985, with Bethlehem Central's freshmen level team. For more than 25 years, Braverman was an asset to Bethlehem's sports community, walking the sidelines as a high school coach in soccer, basketball, softball and baseball. In addition to scholastic sports, he started the town's Mickey Mantle baseball team in 1987, to which he coached for nearly 20 years. It served as a needed outlet for local 15- and 16-year-old kids looking to continue playing baseball beyond the Babe Ruth levels where children could only play up to age 15.

In 18 years of competition, the Mickey Mantle team he founded would accumulate six league championships, one state championship, one regional championship and a berth in the Mickey Mantle World Series.

In 1994, Braverman was tapped to coach the Adirondack team in the now-defunct Olympicstyle New York state competition. In his tenure, he helped the team earn six bronze, three silver, and three consecutive gold medals.

When Ken Hodge stepped down as Bethlehem Central's head coach in 1995, Reserve your family vacation today!

Braverman was named his replacement. Four seasons later, the school won a sectional title. But, the summer team would ultimately serve as a lynchpin in a decision that would cause him to leave Bethlehem Central.

"No career, and no life, is without challenges, and in 2000 I faced a big one, perhaps my darkest time," stated Braverman in his memoirs. "In a bizarre bureaucratic struggle involving my Mickey Mantle summer team, Í lost my school team at Bethlehem." Through the urging of a friend, Braverman wrote a memoir. Every day, he woke up at 5 a.m. to write down his thoughts for an hour. He did so each day, and after four months he had written 360 pages. In a private meeting with then-Bethlehem Central Superintendent Leslie Loomis, Braverman said he could have remained as the head coach of the varsity baseball team, if he quit his post on the summer team. "I called in a sick day after they fired me from coaching," said Braverman. "It was the first sick day in my 19 years.'

Adam Hornick and his older brother Daniel loved baseball. The two were born to debate against each other - Adam a devoted Mets fan, while the other was a die-hard Yankees fan. Daniel didn't make Braverman's freshmen team when he was old enough to tryout. But, he stayed, traveling with the team to keep score.

In 2003, Daniel

Hornick and his father were working at La Salle Institute in Troy, as the private school was looking for a new head coach for their baseball team. Braverman's name came up. "Naturally," the Hornicks vouched for him, said Adam. Braverman sat before a panel of staffers at La Salle, interviewing him for the job. "It's a Catholic military school," said Braverman, as he recalled the day. "I'm a Jewish kid from Queens. How did I get here?" Someone on the other side of the table asked him what happened at Bethlehem Central. For a reason still unbeknownst to the old coach, he retains something ex-presidential candidate George McGovern said when he lost to Richard Nixon in 1972 - "I'd rather lose the right way then to win the wrong way," he said. He got the job.

Braverman recently stepped down as head coach of La Salle's baseball team. He is now the assistant varsity coach, no longer left with the weighty obligation of filling out the starting line-up. Prior to his self-demotion, he built the private school into a baseball powerhouse in the Big 10 – leading the school to two Class AA sectional championships.

Since starting his baseball coaching career thirty years ago, Braverman helped many of his teams achieve high accolades. In doing so, he helped develop the careers of kids who went on to play professionally, like Matt Quatraro, Cameron Smith, Dan Conway, Matt Eldeldt, Avi Rasowsky, Will Remillard, JP Sportman and David Roseboom.

"The man who taught me said it best a long time ago," said Braverman. "Joe Austin was once asked if he produced any major leaguers. He replied, 'I've produced a lot of cops and firefighters and businessmen. They're all major leaguers in my

That list also includes Seth Friedman, educator and author; Matt Bechard, journalist; and Adam Hornick, police commander.

"I hate to say it with my job, but we need more people like Jesse to keep kids clean," said Adam Hornick. "It's programs like Jesse as an individual we don't see of enough. ...

With the kind of time and dedication he put in I'm not sure we will again. It's a different world today."

Braverman and Austin will be inducted into the New York State Baseball Hall of Fame in November. The induction ceremony is scheduled for Nov. 1 in Troy. To purchase tickets contact the hall of fame at 518-877-5170.

reality television shows, a medical staff monitors contestants regularly.

So, getting back to Jim.

After explaining to him the realities of proper weight loss, we discussed targeting his goal to lose one to two pounds per week. This means it will take Jim a year, without set backs, to reach his target

Weight loss is gradual, not quick. Most of the time people understand this when you explain they didn't gain all the weight in just a month. But, when it reality doesn't click back in it's because we are bombarded with instantaneous solutions on a daily basis — promises from the magic pill, the weight-loss shake, or the newest machine. (Seriously. Anyone who bought the shake weight to lose weight, I have to ask, what the hell were you thinking?) It's all a sham. Several studies show that people who take this kind of gradual weight loss approach are more successful in maintaining a healthier weight. It's a grind, but it also establishes a habit, and a healthier lifestyle. It's tough to stay dedicated to anything for a month let alone a year, especially when it comes to fitness.

So I tell the Jim's of the world, your long-term goal is to lose 100 pounds. Now, put it in the back of your mind. Don't forget it, but just bury it. Instead, focus on a series of little goals. Instead, let's just shoot for 10 pounds. When you get that 10, set another goal.

This kind of approach doesn't apply to weight loss or fitness alone. You can use this at work, school or life in general. No matter what your big or long-term goal is, break it down to a series of smaller goals. Give yourself little rewards along the way, so that it fuels your motivation to keep reaching towards the big

ALBANY COUNTY — The Albany Athletics completed another successful season, as they won the Albany Twilight League's regular season title and placed third in the AABC Stan Musial World Series.

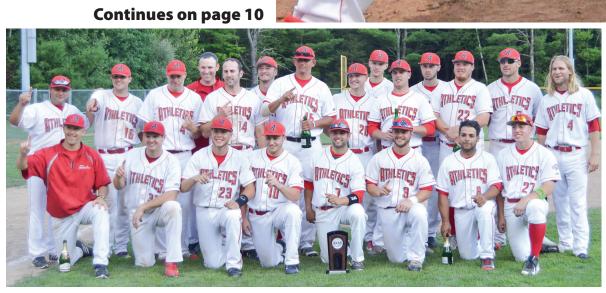

The Athletics qualified for the Stan Musial regionals by posting a 21-3 record during the Twilight League season. Albany won the regional title to advance to its fourth Stan Musial World Series appearance, where it went 2-2 to finish third. The Athletics lost the opener to eventual champion Westchase Express from Texas, but bounced back to beat Steel City (Pittsburgh) and the Northwest Wildcats before losing to the runners up from Long Island in the semifinals.

The Athletics began the year by welcoming 14 new players to their roster, including five pitchers.

"In Stan Musial baseball, it's very difficult to bring in 14 new players on a 25-man roster and immediately be successful," said 20th year head coach and general manager Joe Altieri. "Players don't know each other, they don't know the league and they are playing for a new coach. However, this team proved the theory wrong and gelled early in the season and peaked at the right time late. It made for one of the most enjoyable seasons in our history."

The revamped pitching staff led the Twilight League in earned run average, strikeouts, saves and wins. The staff's 1.39 ERA shattered the team record

Shaker High School graduate and current Barton standout Zach Breen was one of the rookies on the pitching staff. Breen delivered a 4-2 record with two saves, a 1.45 ERA and second game 8-5. Then, Jeffrey Young tossed the first no-hitter in the 45-year history of the league to help the Presbyterians win the title in a 7-0 victory.

St. Thomas the Apostle won the regular season title before being edged out in the semifinals.

Bethlehem Community Church won the B

71 strikeouts. He also combined with Ryan Harper on a no-hitter early in the Twilight League season.

Harper — the top pitcher at The College of Saint Rose — had a strong season, as well. Harper posted a 5-1 record, a pair of saves, a 0.94 ERA and 54 strikeouts.

Connolly — another rookie — was Albany's top pitcher, though. The Central Connecticut State righthander had a 9-2 record with 68 strikeouts. Connolly was especially tough against Twilight League foes, as he won all seven of his starts and posted a miniscule 0.17 ERA. He also tossed a complete-game no-hitter.

Ed Lewicki, the top pitcher for Siena College last this past season, was another key newcomer for the Athletics. He went 2-1 in his starts with a 0.64 ERA and 24 strikeouts. Bill Lawton had a 5-1 record and a 1.52 ERA, and he combined with Columbia High School graduate Travis Sowards on a no-hitter. JJ Pearsall of Burnt Hills went 4-1 with a 1.87 ERA and 56 strikeouts, while Chris Salamida of Watervliet acted as the team's closer with four saves, to go along with two complete-game postseason wins.

"There's no question our pitching was the key to the season," said Altieri, a Guilderland High School graduate. "Every one of our pitchers was a shutdown guy and kept opponents off the bases, and rarely allowed teams to build rallies."

Newcomer Ryan Henchey was Albany's top hitter. The Columbia grad led the Athletics with a .391 average and 39 runs batted in, and he was named the team's most valuable player. Cameron Overbaugh batted .325, scored 47 runs and stole 26 bases, while Dan Barbero hit .320 with 41 RBI and six home runs. Rookie Derick Horn was second on the team in batting average (.351) and drove in 22 runs.

"This team was the perfect blend of experienced players and hard-working young players," said Altieri.
"Guys believed in the goals of our program early on, developed a great chemistry and realized their full potential this summer. It was a really special group."

FROM THE EDITOR'S DESK

The curse of the old Stone Ends

ilestone is closing it's doors next week, the restaurant at the crook of the Thruway overpass and Route 9W. Despite the ownership's best efforts, it serves as the end to another chapter to the struggling store front.

Twenty years ago we wrote about the closing of a restaurant at the same location, then called Stone Ends. In between, it received a few facelifts and gone by different names. First there was Bella Bistro, before taking on the name Milestone once the Mastrantuono family took ownership.

Fact of the matter is that stretch of 9W has held few prospects for business owners, unless that business involves pumping gas for the throngs of motorists that drive to and from work on that stretch of road.

It's unfortunate, when considering the history attached to the unique building with the stone facade.

Liberace, the flamboyant pianist was said to have stroked the ivory keys of the piano there many years ago. Area Master Chef Dale Miller was owner and chef de cuisine of the Stone Ends before moving on the Jack's Oyster House and beyond.

Nevertheless, the thoroughfare that is the corridor joined by both routes 9W and 32 is not a friendly one to business owners who cater to patrons of the culinary arts or entertainment. It's neither in downtown Albany, where people can park and walk to a number of competing establishments, each with their own unique flare. Nor is it in the middle of Delmar, where a short walk or drive from home takes you to a more quaint setting for intimate entertainment. It's the stretch of road most residents speed through while their mind is on auto-pilot, decompressing from work stress before coming home, or plotting out plans for Netflix and a glass

The renovations to the neighboring hotel lent to some promise to future restaurant business. It seemed a perfect pairing to have hotel patrons stay and be able to eat a nice, Italian dinner next door.

If we were speaking of Colonie's Wolf Road, this would be the business model that would give Milestone a fighting chance to succeed. But, this is not Wolf Road.

The request for a zoning variance to allow for a dog kennel concedes to all these factors, and with the hotel next door, it wasn't likely the town would allow for it. The old investment mantra, "Location. Location. Location," certainly rings true here more than any place else in town. Despite the hundreds of cars that drive by each day, no one is paying attention. At least, not enough to keep a successful restaurant there.

What are you listening to these days?

I really am just into everything. I like a wide range. Sometimes you're in that country mood, sometimes you want something maybe a little harder.

What have you been reading?

"Yes Please," by Amy Poehler. I was actually going to go to the bookstore after work to pick it up. I am a HUGE fan of hers and have wanted to read the book since it came out!

What are you watching on TV?

I actually like "America's Got Talent." I think it's super interesting to see what everybody can do.

What was the last movie you saw?

I actually went with my sisters to see "The Penguins of Madagascar." They're a little young, under the age of 12, so I take them to the movies.

One person living or dead you would like to meet and why?

There's one person who I actually got close to meeting Kerri Walsh, she's a volleyball player. I've been playing volleyball my whole life, so I really look up to her.

Describe your dream vacation.

Somewhere on a beach with a lot of sand, and maybe music's going in the background. And, being able to watch a nice sunset go down over the ocean.

What is your favorite hobby?

Well, I play volleyball almost every night and every weekend. I've been playing since I was 12 years old. I just graduated from Saint Rose, where I played volleyball for four years and was captain my senior year.

Describe what your last meal would be.

Probably breakfast. I love having breakfast. Pancakes, waffles, tons of bacon. Maybe some eggs and toast with jam.

What is something most people don't know about you?

I'm a Harry Potter nerd.

It's your legislature

Editor, The Spotlight,
When I first ran for the county legislature, I promised to thoughtfully speak my mind for our town. That includes speaking out and voting against wrong-headed proposals advanced by my own party, as I recently did when a sham county charter "reform" proposal was put before us that cut the heart out of true charter reform. But speaking my mind also includes speaking out for what I think is right. More than a year ago, and several times since, I have stood on the floor of the legislature to support true charter reform, as was proposed by the blue ribbon Charter Revision Commission. These citizen volunteers -- legal and governmental experts -- worked hard for over a year to overhaul our county's charter. Their recommendations were roundly supported by the League of Women Voters. The Commission got it right, including reducing the size of the county legislature. But the legislature's city-dominated leadership and their political cronies warped and twisted the reform commission's proposal to fit their own self-dealing culture.

If we don't defeat the insider's new county charter in this November's referendum, we will be forever deprived of our right to decide the county legislature's size, because that decision will be taken out of the hands of the voters and put solely in the hands of county legislators!

This same charter "reform" would also leave the drawing of future county legislative district lines, including the legislative districts drawn for Bethlehem, in the hands of partisan puppet masters instead of in the hands of a new independent redistricting commission, as recommended by the Charter Review Commission. This "same old, same old", politics as usual, sham reform will just result in future expensive lawsuits which will be paid for with our tax dollars. And Bethlehem will continue to be short-changed and underrepresented in the county legislature.

We need real change that's fair. I need your support to continue my fight to overhaul the Albany County Legislature and to protect your say in how our legislature is run. I know the county seems remote from our town, but what it does is critical and affects the taxes we pay for our public safety and the quality of our community. Without the millions shared by the county from its sales tax collections and other revenues with our town, our town's property taxes would skyrocket. I am proud that our county has spear-headed ongoing projects like the Rail Trail, Vista, and Advanced Life Support services.

But I only have one vote. So while I ask for your support for my own re-election, I also ask for your help in reforming our county legislature by electing highly qualified newcomers Joanne Cunningham (34th), Matt Miller (36th), and sitting town board member Bill Reinhardt (33rd). Thank you.

Once upon a time

Emmett was born with a heart condition that has already required one surgery. He has a second, more serious surgery scheduled for September. The operation will include closing off two chambers of his heart and relocating the bottom functioning chamber to the top.

"He doesn't understand quite yet, but he does notice his scar from first surgery, and I show that I don't have one, and his dad doesn't have one, but he doesn't really understand quite yet," said Hotaling.

As the cost of medical and travel expenses would be enormous for any parents to take on, let alone young parents, the pair has created a gofundme.com account, called "Emmett's Boston Trip."

Hotaling and her husband Wesley Jr. were 21 and 22, respectively, when they found out at a routine doctor's visit their future son or daughter had a heart condition.

"Went for gender review, not even a regular doctor's visit. Finding out at such an exciting moment was scary. It was definitely scary," said Hotaling. She was only five months pregnant when she found out.

"It was hard because it's our first baby," said Hotaling about being told of her baby's heart condition. "But you adjust to it. I couldn't love him any different."

The couple has been together since they met at a Friday night bowling event when she was 15. "When we decided to have a baby I thought it would be like out of storybook. Once we found out about his heart, it stopped everything," she said.

The couple held a family-centered fundraiser with a bounce house and games on Saturday, Aug. 8, at the American Legion in Delmar. There, Bethlehem Police Officer Mike Bourbon presented them with two checks, one from the police department and one from the police officer's union.

"Just raising a child at a young age can be extremely stressful and difficult," said Bethlehem Police Sergeant Steve Kraz, who said there were some people on their own staff who had similarly young families.

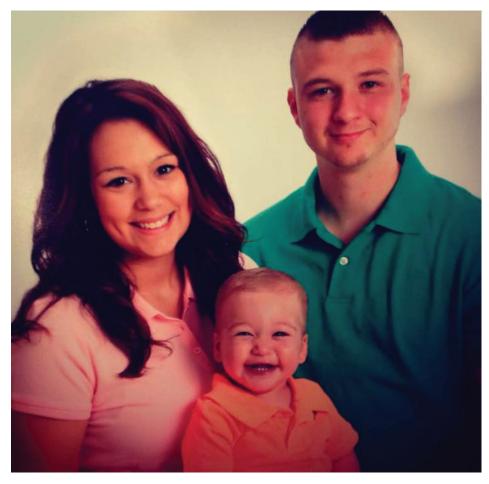

"We understand that expenses can get out of hand and we wanted to help out in any way we could to make sure he gets the best care in the best hospital possible," said Kraz. The Bethlehem Police were alerted to the situation by one of their employees in the records department who has ties to the family.

The family lives in Ravena, with Jessica working as a waitress and Wes working for a construction company. Both parents try to go to all of Emmett's many doctor's appointments, and Jessica has taken time off at work to be with Emmett before his surgery.

Wes Hotaling's extended family, however, lives primarily in Delmar. Jessica said even though many of the adults helping them weren't sure how to handle Emmett's illness at first, his family has been extremely supportive.

As the Hotalings have known about Emmett's heart condition since before he was born, a large surgery such as this has been in the works for a while now.

Such a serious surgery could not be undertaken at Albany Medical Center, where Emmett's first surgery took place and where there cardiologist operates. Emmett also had to be at least two and a half to be able to handle the surgery.

The four ventricles in his heart are backward, and one ventricle is not active. He also has a large hole in his heart — a ventrical septal defect — which causes leaking into his lungs.

These problems cause Emmett to lose breath quickly, so his activity is limited. His past surgery lowered his oxygen levels to reduce strain on his heart. It took Emmett a month and a half in the hospital to recover from this surgery, but the Hotalings are hoping that because he is a little older now, the recovery won't take as long.

"I just want Emmett to be comfortable. I just want him to be able what three year olds do and run and play," said Jessica. Along with fixing some of Emmett's heart problems doctors will raise his oxygen levels back to normal levels, so hopefully, he will be able to be more active.

His recovery will be based largely on how he takes to the new breathing technique and how he deals with the pain of surgery.

Jessica and Wes will be staying at a lodge by Emmett's Boston Hospital until the time comes they can stay in the hospital room with Emmett during his recovery. She said this surgery will not be Emmett's last surgery, but the next step is something that doctors will look into once they see the results.

"We're both nervous but ready for bigger step for Emmett," said Jessica.

Milestone closing to them to the restaurant," said Lou Mastrantuono.

Winter this year was particularly difficult on the business.

"Everyone remembers that this was the worst winter in decades," said Lou Mastrantuono. "We're fighting all these battles, trying to pay for oil and electric in the winter, and trying to not cut back on everyone's hours too much," said Mastrantuono of difficulty of the winter.

Somewhat ironically, the restaurant also hosted several political fundraisers and mixers. Many traveling public officials, who are known to stay at hotels nearby, frequented the restaurant as well. "All the who's who, all the brass, so to speak, were here," said Lou Mastantuano.

At one particular Democratic fundraiser held at Milestone, 50 people appeared outside in protest of the increase in taxes coming to Bethlehem.

They said the fact the restaurant was such a popular place for politicians was not something they expected to work in their favor while they went through the process of applying for zoning variance approval.

"No one expected differential treatment at all," said the Mastrantuono's friend Judy Seamon, "But it is just very ironic."

"I want my clent base to know that we've made a lot of good friends, and we've enjoyed being a part of their lives," said Mike Mastrantuono..

The pair is unsure yet whether they will reopen Milestone, whether they will open another local restaurant, or whether they want to move to a new state entirely.

"I love the area. It's a great area." said Mike Mastrantuono. He and Mike chose Glenmont as the location of their next restaurant when Lou Mastrantuono's twin boys were born because of the area's great school reputation.

Mike Mastrantuono called being part of the community "something you have to do" when you are in the restaurant business. As such, he shopped weekly at the Delmar Farmer's Market, donated the Bethlehem Police Union, among other places, and offered discounts to local teams. They employed 12 people at one point before recently downsizing to only four employees.

Mike Mastrantuono said their final week will be "business as usual," but he's glad to have the opportunity to say goodbye and have some closure.

itself, "How will you answer the charge from Hillary Clinton, likely to be the Democratic nominee, that you are part of the war on women?"

has been drowned out by the ensuing media frenzy, supporters of Kelly say that asking the question shows her journalistic prowess.

When asked if she was proud of her daughter for asking Trump the question, Linda Kelly said, "You're damn right." She added that some have even compared Megyn Kelly to journalist Barbara Walters, for her similar tendency to ask hard-hitting questions.

The GOP debate is only the most recent time Kelly has been in the news. Kelly was the first to interview the Duggar family after the child molestation scandal involving oldest son Josh Duggar went public in June.

Kelly also attracted controversy for her comments she made on-air that Santa Clause is "just white," and that people who argue that there should be a black Santa as well are wrong because "Santa is what he is." In that same show, she also stated that Jesus was white as well. She later said the comments had been "tongue and cheek" and Jesus' skin color is "far from settled."

Thus, whether Kelly's most recent actions add to or detract from your opinion of her, the fact is, there is a lot to talk about when it comes to this Delmar native.
